4th, For the receipt of subscriptions from persons, members of the society, and for the payment of dividends on such subscriptions at any rate not exceeding five pounds per centum per annum; but so that no dividend shall be paid to any member of the society out of the capital of the same.

5th, For the appropriation from time to time of the net proceeds of any trade, labour, or handicraft exercised or carried on by the society, after such payments as herein-before mentioned, in the first place, to the repayment of any loans made to the society, or any instalment thereof, and, subject thereto, to all or any of the following purposes: viz. to the increase of the capital or business of the society; to such provident purposes, or any of them, as shall be from time to time authorised by the laws in force with respect to friendly societies, to a division or return to or amongst the members of the society of the profits on or in respect of any purchases made by them respectively of goods or articles made, produced, or sold by the society; to the payment to or amongst the members of the society, or other such persons as herein mentioned, in respect of any works or services done or performed by them respectively for or on behalf of the society, of any part not exceeding one third of such net proceeds.

6th, For the appointment of such managers or other officers, whether members of the society or not, at such salaries, or for such compensations, and with such powers and authorities, duties, and responsibilities, and subject to such conditions, as to removal or otherwise, as shall appear requisite from time to time for the better carrying out of the objects of the society.

7th, For the making or continuing of all such contracts as shall be necessary or expedient for the purposes of the society, which contracts, when executed or entered into in accordance with the rules of the society, shall be binding on all members of the same; and for the enforcement of the liability of members in respect of such contracts:

8th, For the due payment by the members, their executors or administrators, of all subscriptions, debts, fines, or other sums of money which they may owe to the society, from time to time, in accordance with the rules thereof:

9th, For enabling members to withdraw from the society, on notice given, for a period to be fixed by the rules; and for determining whether and to what extent members shall be compelled to discharge their obligations to the society before withdrawing from the same, and for otherwise regulating withdrawals:

10th, For regulating the claims (if any) of the executors or administrators of deceased members of the society upon the funds of the same, in respect of the interest of their respective testators or intestates in the same:

11th, For keeping account of all the transactions of the society, for the balancing and auditing of such accounts twice at least in every year, and for the inspection of the accounts by the members:

12th, For referring to arbitration all disputes which may arise between any member of the society and the trustees, treasurer, manager, committee, or officers of the same, or any of them:

13th, For determining under what conditions of pecuniary loss or otherwise, and by what meetings and how composed, and by what special or other majorities of the members or other persons present at such meetings, the society shall be dissolved; and whether, and in what cases, and by what means, a single member may summon a meeting for the dissolution of the society; and for winding up the affairs of the society on the dissolution thereof.

3. Interest of members not transferable.—The interest of any member in any such society shall not be transferable, but the whole amount of the balance due to any member shall be paid to him on withdrawal from the same according to the rules of the society.

4. As to members becoming bankrupt or insolvent.—If any member in any such society shall become bankrupt, or shall take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, such member shall be taken to have withdrawn from the society on the day of the date of the filing of the petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, or (in the case of any insolvent debtor, of the declaration of insolvency, or the petition for discharge or for a vesting order respectively, as the case may be; and the assignees of any such bankrupt or insolvent shall have such claim upon the society, and no other, as the bankrupt or insolvent would have had if he had actually withdrawn at the date aforesaid.

5. Awards of arbitrators may be enforced by County Courts where sum, &c. in dispute is within its jurisdiction—Where it exceeds such jurisdiction, then to be submitted to Superior Courts.—If either of the parties to any arbitration which shall take place under this Act for the settlement of a dispute shall refuse or neglect to comply with or conform to the decision of the arbitrators, or the major part of them, then, in case the sum or value in dispute shall not exceed the limit fixed by law for the time being for any debt or damages claimable in the County Court in England or in the Court of the Assistant Barrister in Ireland respectively (as the case may be), it shall be lawful for the judge of the County Court or the assistant barrister respectively (as the case may be), within whose jurisdiction the society shall be established or shall carry on business for the time being, upon proof adduced before him to his satisfaction of an award having been made by the arbitrators according to the rules of the society, to cause the award to be entered as a judgment in his Court, and such award shall thereupon take effect and be enforceable in the same manner, to all intents and purposes, as a judgment of such Court in a cause between the same persons as shall be parties to the said reference, except that the same shall be final and without appeal; but in case the sum or value in dispute shall exceed the limit fixed by law for the time being for any debt or damages claimable in the County Court or the court of the Assistant Barrister respectively, then the same may, on the application of either party, be made a rule of any of her Majesty's Superior Courts at Westminster or at Dublin (as the case may be).

6. Sheriff's jurisdiction in Scotland.—The sheriff in Scotland shall within his county have the like jurisdiction as is hereby given to the judge of the County Court in any matter arising under this Act.

7. Investment of funds.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the laws for the time being in force relating to friendly societies, it shall not be incumbent on any treasurer or other officer of any society constituted under the provisions of this Act to invest any of the funds of such society in manner provided by the laws relating to friendly societies, nor shall any such society be allowed to invest any portion of such funds with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.

8. Laws relating to friendly societies to be applicable, except as varied by this Act, or certified to be inapplicable.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, not to extend to societies constituted under this Act.—All the provisions of the laws relating to friendly societies shall apply to every society to be constituted under this Act, and to every officer and member of such society, and to every proceeding under this Act, except so far as any such provision may be expressly varied by this Act, or by any rule expressly authorised to be made by this Act, and also except so far as the registrar of friendly societies from time to time, by writing under his hand, to be indorsed on the rules of any such society, shall certify that any such provision is not applicable to such society; and no such society shall be considered to be within the provisions of an Act passed in the session of Parliament of the seventh and eighth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-Stock Companies."

9. Limitation of interest of members in funds of society.—No society shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act whereof the rules shall not provide that the amount of the share or interest in the funds of the same to be held at any one time by or in trust for any one member of the same, or any persons claiming by or through him, otherwise than by way of annuity, shall be restricted to a sum to be therein fixed, but which shall not exceed one hundred pounds, exclusively of any annuity; nor shall any member or other person be entitled by way of annuity to any interest in the funds of such society to an amount exceeding thirty pounds per annum.

10. Annual returns to be prepared as registrar may direct.—The general statement of the funds and effects of any society or branch constituted under this Act, which by the laws relating to friendly societies is provided to be transmitted to the registrar once in every year, shall exhibit fully the assets and liabilities of the society, and shall be prepared and made out within such period, and in such form, and shall comprise such particulars, as the registrar shall from time to time require, and shall be filed and preserved in such manner as he shall direct.

11. Liability of the members not to be restricted.—Nothing in this or the said recited Act shall be construed to restrict in anywise the liability of the members of any society established under or by virtue of this Act, or claiming the benefit thereof, to the lawful debts and engagements of such society: provided always, that no person shall be liable for the debts or engagements of any such society after the expiration of two years from his ceasing to be a member of the same.

12. Provisions of Friendly Societies Acts giving such societies priority over other creditors as to estate of officers, and exemption from stamp duties in certain cases, not to apply to societies constituted under this Act.—No provision of the laws relating to friendly societies whereby any money due to any such society from any officer of the same or other person intrusted with the keeping of the accounts, or having in his hands any money or effects belonging to any such society, or from the estate of any such officer or person, is made payable in preference to or before any other creditor, shall apply to any society constituted under the provisions of this Act; and no exemption from stamp duties allowed by the laws relating to friendly societies shall apply to any society constituted under the provisions of this Act, except so far as relates to any copy of the rules of such society, and to any other instrument or document whatsoever relating to such society, which might have been given, issued, signed, made, or produced under the laws relating to friendly societies by or on behalf of or respecting a society constituted under the laws in force relating to such societies previously to the passing of this Act, and would have been exempt from duty in such case.

13. Meaning of words "County Court."—9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. The words "County Court," when occurring in this Act, shall apply only to County Courts established or holden under the provisions of an Act passed in the tenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands in England," and the Acts amending the same.

14. Short title.—This Act may be cited as the "Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1852."

CAP. XXXVI.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the certifying and registering Places of Religious Worship of Protestant Dissenters. (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

1 Wm. & M. Sess. 1, c. 18—52 Geo. 3, c. 155.—Whereas by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of King William and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act for exempting their Majesties' Protestant Subjects dissenting from the Church of England from the Penalties of certain Laws," it was enacted, that no congregation or assembly for religious worship should be permitted or allowed by that Act until the place of the meeting of such congregation or assembly had been certified to the bishop of the diocese, or archdeacon of the archdeaconry, or the justices of the peace at their general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, city, or place in which the meeting shall be, and registered in the bishops or archdeacons' courts respectively, or recorded at the quarter sessions: and whereas by another Act passed in the fifty-second year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to repeal certain Acts and to amend other Acts relating to Religious Worship and Assemblies, and Persons teaching or preaching therein," enactments were made for certifying and registering the places of meeting of certain congregations and assemblies for religious worship of Protestants: And whereas it is expedient that such places of meeting should no longer be certified to or registered in the court of any bishop or archdeacon, or be certified to any justice of the peace, to be recorded at the quarter sessions, but that such other provision for the certification and registration thereof should be made as is hereinafter contained: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that—

1. Places of religious worship not to be certified to or registered in bishop's registry.—No place of meeting of any congregation or assembly for religious worship of Protestants dissenting from the Church of England shall from and after the passing of this Act be certified to any bishop or archdeacon, or to any justice of the peace at their general or quarter sessions of the peace, or be certified to or registered in the court of any bishop or archdeacon, or be recorded at the quarter sessions, and the certifying to any bishop or archdeacon, or justices of the peace, or the certifying to or registering or recording in any such court or at the quarter sessions, after the time aforesaid, or the certificate of any registering therein, given after the time aforesaid by any bishop or registrar or clerk of the peace, shall be void and of no effect; and the registrar of every bishop and archdeacon, and the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, town, or place in which such places of meeting respectively are held, shall, within three calendar months next after the passing of this Act, make a return to the registrar-general of births, deaths, and marriages in England, according to a form to be provided by him for the purpose, of all such places of meeting which, up to the time when this Act shall come into operation, shall have been certified to and registered in the court of the bishop or archdeacon respectively, or have been certified to the justices of the peace, or recorded at the quarter sessions; and it shall be lawful, instead of certifying any such place of meeting to the bishop or archdeacon, or to the court of any bishop or archdeacon, or to the quarter sessions, to certify the same in writing to the said registrar-general, through the superintendent registrar of births, deaths, and marriages of the union, parish, or place in which such meeting shall be held, and the said superintendent registrar shall forthwith transmit the said written certificate to the registrar-general, who is hereby required to record the same in a book to be kept by him for that purpose at the general register office; and the certifying any such place of meeting to the registrar-general as aforesaid shall have the same force and effect as if the same were certified to the bishop or archdeacon, or to the justices of the peace at their general or quarter sessions of the peace; and the said registrar-general shall give to every person demanding the same a certificate that any such place of meeting has been duly certified.

2. No greater fee than 2s. 6d. to be taken for such certificate of registration.—For every such certificate of such registration the parties so registering such places of worship shall pay to the superintendent registrar a fee of two shillings and sixpence, and it shall not be lawful for him on any ground whatever to demand or take any greater fee or reward for the same.

3. List of certified places of worship to be printed, and open to inspection without fee.—The registrar-general shall in every year make out and cause to be printed a list of all existing certified places of worship which shall have been returned to him as aforesaid, and also of all such other places of worship as shall from time to time be certified to and recorded by him as aforesaid, and shall state in such list the county and superintendent registrar's district within which each of such places of worship is situated, and the religious denomination to which it belongs, and shall cause a copy of such list to be sent to every superintendent registrar of births, deaths, and marriages in England; and such lists shall be open at all reasonable times, without fee, to all persons desirous of inspecting the same.

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act to continue the Poor Law Commission for Ireland. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. XXXVIII.

An Act to explain Two Acts of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Years of the Reign of her Majesty, concerning the Appointment of Overseers, and the Authority of Justices of the Peace to act in certain Matters relating to the Poor in Cities and Boroughs. (June 30, 1852.)

1. Justices having jurisdiction in other matters in any city or place may act in cases relating to the relief of the poor.—Whereas by the Act passed in the twelfth year of the reign of her Majesty, chapter eight, it was enacted, that in every city, town corporate, or borough, the justices of the peace having jurisdiction therein should have the exclusive right of appointing the overseers of the poor of the several parishes, townships, or other places separately maintaining their own poor, or of any parts thereof within the said cities, towns corporate, and boroughs respectively, in like manner and with the same effect as the justices of any county then had in respect of the overseers of the poor of any parish within such county: And whereas by another Act of the thirteenth year of the reign of her Majesty, chapter sixty-four, it was enacted, that all powers and authorities which by the Act of the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Poor," may be exercised out of general or quarter sessions by two or more justices of any county, might be exercised within any city or borough by any two or more justices of the peace having jurisdiction within such city or borough respectively as fully in all respects as by the justices of the county in or for any parish of such county: [illegible] said statutes with reference to the justices who are competent to act under and by virtue of the same, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore enacted and declared by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in any city or borough all justices of the peace, whether of such city or borough or of the county, riding, or division, comprising the same or adjoining thereto, who shall otherwise have jurisdiction to act in any matter arising within such city or borough, shall be deemed to be competent to act therein under and by virtue of the said statutes in all respects.

Summary.

IT was decided in Marshall v. Nichols, 19 Law T. Rep. 284, that under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 79, which was an Act confirming and regulating a fishery convention between France and England, a person who has sustained damage by breach of any of the regulations of the Act must pursue his remedy for damages before a justice of the peace, as directed by sec. 11 and article 69 of the Act, and cannot maintain an action for such damages.

The case of Ostler v. Cook, 19 Law T. Rep. 286, reported from the Court of Error, arose upon a local Drainage Act. It is of no general interest, but of some moment in localities regulated by similar Acts.

FRENCH REGULATION ON DRUNKENNESS. — The Prefect of the Doubs has followed the example of the Prefect of the Pas de Calais, and decided that any retail sellers of wines or spirits giving liquor to persons already affected by what they had taken, shall be held responsible for the acts of such persons. [This regulation might be adopted here with advantage.—ED. L. T.]

LITERATURE IN THE WEST.—The manner in which legal business is transacted in Devonshire, shews that the schoolmaster is greatly wanted there. On Wednesday morning a summons, a copy of which we subjoin, was handed up to the judge by a gentleman who had been summoned to attend as a special juror. Others were also produced, equally shewing the ability and educational powers of the representative of the under-sheriff. Can any one be astonished that special jurors do not attend, for would any one suppose that he was to obey such a precious document as this:—"I am to sumon and warn you to apeir at the Castle at Exon on Wednesday the 26 day of July instant comming by 8 o'clock in the morning to sarve on the spical jury at the assize on the trile of Harding and Lady Roll."

SOCIETY FOR THE PROSECUTION OF DOG-STEALERS AND THEIR CONFEDERATES. — On Thursday, the usual monthly meeting of this society was held at the offices, 170, New Bond-street, Viscount Chewton in the chair. In the course of the proceedings, the secretary, Mr. Elliott, reported the summary convictions, at the instance of the society, of Edward Sawford, alias "Teddy the Fish," on the 13th of July, at the Clerkenwell Police Court; and of George May, alias "Dodger" May, on the 31st ult. at the Westminster Police Court, both being sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. Mr. Bishop, the treasurer, having given a satisfactory statement of the funds of the society (the receipts during the past month exceeding 45*l.*) the usual vote of thanks to the chairman, secretary, and treasurer were passed, and the meeting separated.

IMPORTANT RAILWAY DECISION.—A case of some considerable interest and importance to railway travellers has been heard before the magistrates at the Droitwich Petty Sessions. The defendant was Mr. Henry Dykes, the traffic superintendent of the Midland Railway, who was summoned before the magistrates for an assault upon Mr. Hilary Hill, a surgeon, of Worcester. The affair arose out of the dispute now existing between the Midland and Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Companies as to the working of the loop line of the latter company between Abbott's Wood, Worcester, Droitwich, and Stoke, and which is now being worked under an agreement by both companies. The case occupied some time, but the facts may be condensed into the following narrative:—On the 17th inst. Mr. Hill, with two of his brothers, took at Worcester day tickets for Droitwich by an Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton train. When about to return from Droitwich in the evening they found that the last Oxford and Wolverhampton train had just left, but that a Midland train for Worcester, running on the same line, was shortly about to start. They applied to the booking clerk at Droitwich (who acts for both companies) for leave to travel by that train; but though at first he demurred, he appears ultimately to have sanctioned their going, but said they must settle about the fare on their arrival at Worcester. Upon that understanding, Mr. Hill and his brothers got into the Midland train, which was just about starting, when Mr. Dykes came up, and after declaring that "they would carry no Oxford and Worcester passengers," forcibly ejected them from the carriage. This was the assault complained of; and the defence was, that Mr. Hill had no right in the carriage, he not having paid his fare, and being unprovided with a ticket, and it was urged that the Droitwich clerk had no power to give them permission to enter the train, and that if he did so, it was unwillingly. The magistrates decided that Mr. Dykes was wrong, and fined him 5*l.* or a fortnight's imprisonment.

The Lord-Lieutenant of the county is to meet the deputy lieutenants and others at the King's Head, Gloucester, next week, to arrange respecting the issuing of orders for the raising of volunteers for the militia. The force will be called out for training and exercise early in October. The number of men to be raised in this county during the present year is 1,240; next year, 753.—Gloucester Journal.

GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH.—Two Acts were passed in the late session to confirm certain provisional orders of the General Board of Health. Local boards under the first Act are to be established in the present month at Worthing, Worksop, Gainsborough, Rotherham, and Kimberworth, Burnham, Calne, and Banbury.

ALTERATIONS IN THE LAW RELATING TO THE ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF COUNTY-RATES.—By an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 81, some important alterations are made in the law relating to the assessment and collection of county-rates, and all preceding statutes, eleven in number, in force on the subject are consolidated into one Act. By clause 2, justices of the peace at Quarter Sessions are empowered to appoint a committee for the purpose of preparing a basis or standard for assessing the county-rates, and, after such basis or standard shall have been agreed upon, and confirmed by the justices at General Quarter Sessions, the same, by clause 16, is to be deemed legal and valid to all intents and purposes. By clause 26, a change is made in the mode of collecting and paying over to the treasurer of the county the county-rates, which is no longer to be done by the overseers, but, except in cases where the high-constables are empowered to collect such rates, the precepts are to be directed to the guardians of the poor of every union of parishes, stating the sum assessed on each parish, which sum the guardians are required to raise and pay by the time required, and in the manner stated; and, by clause 29, if any parish within such union shall neglect, or be unable to pay, the amount at which it is assessed by the time required, and the same be paid by the other parishes in the same union, the defaulting parish is mulcted in an additional shilling for every ten required of it, which additional sum is to be applied in the same manner as the county-rate. By clause 50, an account of the receipt and expenditure of the county-rates in each county is to be annually transmitted, by the county treasurer, to the Secretary of State, and laid before Parliament.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

It will be observed that, in the case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Rushout, 19 Law T. Rep. 281, an injunction was granted, at the instance of the shareholders, to restrain the directors from entering into contracts with reference to a scheme for an extension line, and to prevent the application of the funds of the company to the payment of costs occasioned by such scheme, or in promoting such a Bill in Parliament. But the Court refused to restrain an application to Parliament to enable the company to make the extension line.

WINDING UP.

London and Birmingham Extension Railway.—On Saturday, at a meeting in this matter, the Master in Chancery Blunt decided that the claims of the directors for expenses incurred were not to be allowed as a set-off in connection with the call of 7s. 6d. per share declared payable in respect of costs incurred in winding up the company.

COPYHOLDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have perused J. B.'s letter in your last week's paper, and I cannot help thinking that the commissioners are wrong in the decision which they have come to, with regard to the admission stamps. The language contained in the recent Stamp Act, in my humble judgment, can only admit of one interpretation. It is there stated that "any admittance out of court, or the memorandum thereof, or the copy of Court Roll of any admittance in Court," shall be chargeable with a duty of 2s 6d. I apprehend, therefore, that in each of the admittances referred to, 2s. 6d. was the proper stamp to have been affixed thereon, instead of 1*l.*

The rule with regard to several stamps only applies where there are distinct and separate surrenders or admissions, but the case referred to, seems to me to be analogous to that of coparceners, who are almost invariably admitted upon one admission, and generally surrender by one deed.

One 1*l.* stamp upon the surrender, I presume, would be correct, that document coming under the old Stamp Act, as an instrument not charged under the head of mortgage or conveyance upon the sale of lands.

In your same paper I observe the query put by J. S. and I think it is quite clear, that a warrant to enter satisfaction on a conditional surrender, does not come within the meaning of any of the terms mentioned by him, and consequently requires no stamp. It is simply an authority to the steward to make the entry upon the Court Rolls. I know th practice is, to accept the warrant without any stamp.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

LIFE INSURANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The letter of Mr. Francis, which appears in your last number, p. 70, is upon a subject of great importance, nor is the difficulty which in most cases is experienced in obtaining from insurance offices moneys due under a mortgaged or assigned policy of insurance in the least degree overstated therein. It may be, that in the present state of the law insurance offices, and those under whose advice boards of directors act in such cases, are unavoidably compelled, for the sake of self-protection against claims from third parties, to put claimants to every possible degree of trouble and expense before they admit and answer their liability to the mortgagee or assignee of the policy; but if so, the Legislature should interfere, and by some enactment, which might easily be framed, insure that the bonâ fide holder of a policy, accompanied by a deed of assignment, shall be enabled to receive his money without the trouble and expense at present generally attendant thereon. So great is it, that though this kind of security is that more generally offered for sums of from 100*l.* to 500*l.* particularly in the country, I would neither in future lend money on it nor advise a client to do so.

In two cases within my own experience, administration had to be taken out: in one, by the mortgagee himself, as a creditor to the deceased insurer, he dying abroad insolvent, and his representatives living abroad and not choosing to administer; in the other, the mortgagee had to procure the renunciation of a right to administer from a party in America, and then to procure administration to be taken out in England by the next of kin, as the offices considered themselves bound, notwithstanding the mortgage, to require the discharge of a legal personal representative,—a full indemnity was offered in vain in the first case. I know two other cases precisely similar, in which other respectable parties are concerned. It is peculiarly hard in such instances as above mentioned, when perhaps the party lending money on and taking an assignment of the policy has given due notice to the office and subsequently for years kept up the premium out of his own pocket, to find that in addition to all this he must incur the risk and trouble of standing personal representative to an insolvent deceased party before he can get his money, besides a world of trouble, anxiety, and expense otherwise, and, according to the present practice of insurance offices, it seems hardly possible to prepare an assignment which would meet their various and undefined scruples.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLD.

I shall feel much obliged by any reader of your valuable paper, practised in such matters, informing me at what rate the interest of a lord of a manor is to be calculated upon the enfranchisement of copyholds, fine small and certain, and at how many years' purchase the lord's rents are estimated. It may be as well to mention that the manor to which I allude on any admission the fine is two years' value of the lord's rent, and in addition there is payable to the lord a relief of one year's value of such rent.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY MARRIED WOMEN.

Can any of your numerous correspondents inform me the practice usually observed in cases like the following. It is necessary to have a deed acknowledged by a vendor's wife on the sale by himself and her of a freehold estate, the purchaser having agreed to pay all expenses of the acknowledgment. Does the vendor's solicitor prepare the documents, and conduct the business of the acknowledgment to its completion; or has the solicitor for the purchaser the duty of so doing? The solicitors for the vendor and purchaser are both perpetual commissioners, and being both interested in the transaction, one only can act. To which of them does the privilege belong? Has not the vendor's wife in such a case the right to nominate, and has not the married woman in every case the right to choose the commissioners, or one of them, before whom she will acknowledge the deed, or if not, who selects them?

Sales of Landed Property.—The last sale but one for the present season under the Incumbered Estates Commission took place yesterday, when four properties were put up for competition, the whole of which were speedily disposed of at remunerative rates of purchase. A fee simple estate in the county of Westmeath, containing 1,669 acres, yielding an annual net rent of 617*l.* was bought by Mr. W. Dargan, the eminent railway contractor, at the high figure of 14,000*l.* being equal to 22¾ years' purchase. The Down estate of Mr. Thomas Scott, comprising over 1,200 statute acres, producing a net rent of 1,189*l.* per annum, realised 19,925*l.* equal to nearly 17 years' purchase. The property was sold subject to the payment of two annuities, amounting together to 160*l.* for two lives aged respectively fifty and fifty-nine years. A small property in the county of Dublin, valued at 158*l.* a-year, after payment of a head rent of 132*l.* brought 1,525*l.* or 15 years' purchase. A profit rent of 32*l.* per annum, arising out of lands and houses in the town of Roscrea and county of Tipperary, produced 360*l.* over 11 years' purchase. The gross sum realised by the day's sales amounted to 35,810*l.*

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary

It will be observed that the provision of the new statute forbidding Attorneys to appear in the County Courts as Advocates, instructed by other Attorneys, and entitling them only to conduct the cases in which they are concerned as Attorney for one of the parties, is producing, as we had anticipated, a good deal of inconvenience. We have received many letters, pointing out the difficulties that are found to result in practice from the prohibition. We could not find space for a tithe of these complaints. We shall publish the most remarkable of them, and indicate the others, with a view to obtain, next session, a remedy for the inconveniences which could not have been anticipated by the promoters of the measure, and of which the Legislature was ignorant or it would not have been sanctioned.

One Insolvency case was reported last week. In Re Dyson, 19 Law T. Rep. 288, it was determined by the Court that it would hold assignees responsible for all moneys received through their instrumentality, and in such cases will look to them personally, and not to their Attorneys.

THE LAWYER.

Summary

Some points of interest and value to the English Lawyer, as authorities occasionally occur in the course of the Scotch appeals that come before the House of Lords. Such are reported for us by Mr. J. Paterson, and they are the only records of the law thus decided that will be accessible to the English Lawyer. Some points of this nature were raised in Marianski v. Cairns, 19 Law T. Rep. 277, and they relate, first, to the Practice at Nisi Prius; secondly, to the Law of Evidence. As to the first, the facts were, that at the trial the clerk had made an incorrect entry of the verdict. It was held that the proper course was to "refer to the Judge who tried the cause, that the verdict may be entered according to the substance of the actual finding, which he may do by his notes." The second point was this:—Certain account-books kept by A. were tendered in evidence by A.'s counsel, apparently for an improper purpose. B.'s counsel objected that they were inadmissible generally, but the Judge admitted them. They were held to be admissible for proper use under the issue, and that as no objection had been taken to the summing up, it was to be presumed that the Judge directed the jury to make only the proper use of them, and to disregard the improper purpose for which they were put in evidence.

Another point of practice, now rare in appeal courts, is reported from the Lord Chancellor. In Monckton v. The Attorney-General, 19 Law T. Rep. 278, it was held that where two parties are in the same interest, and one dies before judgment, the interest being represented, there is no abatement. And where the petitioning party had died after the hearing and before judgment, that an order made on the petition could be entered nunc pro tunc.

An extremely interesting and curious case of general law, and which will repay perusal, is that of Hill v. Philp, 19 Law T. Rep. 284, in which the wife of a lunatic had directed the medical man who had the care of him to take away from him certain letters and papers. He did so, and delivered them to her, and for this an action of trover was brought against him by the lunatic on his recovery. But the Court of Ex. one Judge only dissenting, held that he was not liable. Alderson, B. said:—"The taking of the property of a madman from his possession is not, of itself, a conversion of the property. If it were so, the consequences would be enormous and fatal. Suppose a person holds in his possession the title-deeds of a large estate, and is about to destroy them, does any person say that a taking from him the power of destroying the interests of his family and those who come after him, would be a conversion of the title-deeds? If so, you must say, if a man was about to cut his own throat with a razor, the taking of the razor out of his hands would be a conversion of the razor. Then, would the delivery of these papers to the wife for him make it a conversion? I confess that I think it does not."

Abolition of Fees on Circuit.—By the Nisi Prius Officers Act it is declared, "the fees heretofore received on the circuit by the marshal's man and the judge's bailiff respectively shall be and are hereby abolished, and no fee, gratuity, or reward whatsoever shall be demanded or accepted by any one exercising, or claiming to exercise, either of the said offices, or other person attending the circuit in any subordinate office or employment."

Law Officers.—In the new Nisi Prius Act there is a provision requiring the law officers to perform their duties in person. It is declared that where it shall be made to appear to the said Commissioners of the Treasury that any of the officers mentioned omits to perform the duties of his office in person, the said commissioners, unless it shall be shewn to their satisfaction that such omission arises from temporary and unavoidable causes, and they shall in writing approve of such omission for a period not exceeding at any one time six months, shall, as the case may be, require the whole of the fees due to be received by such officer for his own use during the time of such omission, to be accounted for and paid over as aforesaid, or shall cease to allow or pay any salary otherwise due to such officer during the time of such omission.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

It has been the fashion of late for bankrupts to appeal against the refusal of their certificates by the commissioners, and to this they have been encouraged by that which we cannot but deem the too great readiness of the Appeal Court to reverse the decisions of the commissioners, who must have had better means of forming a judgment of the bankrupt's conduct, as they have seen as well as heard him, and truth and honesty are often to be learned by the eye even better than by the ear. In Ex parte Rufford, 19 Law T. Rep. 279, the Lords Justices did support the commissioner in the punishment of palpable misconduct. There the bankrupts had been bankers and had continued to trade and receive deposits long after they knew that they were insolvent. They had claimed a certificate of conformity under the 198th sec. of the Bankruptcy Act. But the Court held that the commissioner had rightly refused it. The case, which is fully reported, is extremely interesting and instructive. Lord Cranworth explained the proper meaning of withholding the certificate. It is not properly the infliction of a punishment, but the refusal of a benefit. "The case is," he said, "whether the conduct of the plaintiffs as traders is such as entitles them to a benefit in the shape of a certificate, giving them protection from their creditors; it is rather withholding a benefit from them which good conduct might have entitled them to, than awarding them a punishment."

Jones v. Starkey, 19 Law T. Rep. 281, was a question as to the existence of an equitable lien on a cargo, under these circumstances. An account had been opened at a bank on an agreement that the customer might overdraw to a certain amount, but that if he overdrew beyond this he should find security. He did so, and the bank demanded security, upon which the customer wrote a letter to the managers, stating that the arrival of a particular ship would put him in funds to adjust the account, and he enclosed a policy on the cargo for 5,000*l.* indorsed payable to the bank in case of loss. The customer not performing his promise, the bank filed a bill to have the bills of lading delivered up, claiming an equitable lien by virtue of the above letter and policy, and praying to have it realised by a sale of the cargo. But it was held not to be such a specific appropriation of the cargo as gave the bank a lien on it in preference to other creditors. "I will not say," said the Vice-Chancellor, "that whenever equivocal words are used, the Court will decide against your lien; but the leaning of this Court certainly is against creating partial liens in mercantile transactions on the strength of equivocal expressions."

A guarantee ran thus: "Upon your handing in your two drafts on A. B. for 200*l.* and 146*l.* respectively, at six months from this date, I undertake to get them accepted and see that they are duly paid." Signed A. (the defendant); directed to B. (the plaintiff). This was subsequently altered by a memorandum written across it by A. but signed by B. alone, to this effect: "I have received the two drafts, one being for 150*l.* instead of 146*l.* there being an error in the invoice." This was held, in Black v. Gompertz, 19 Law T. Rep. 285, to be sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and that A. was liable as security for the 150*l.* bill, although he had not signed the second memorandum, it being in his handwriting.

Letters Patent.—During the progress of the Patent Law Amendment Bill through Parliament some curious and interesting statements were made in reference to the origin of letters patent. Those who have only considered letters patent as a legal document granting to an inventor the exclusive right of selling any article of his own invention for fourteen years, by way of rewarding his ingenuity, and an acknowledgment of the benefit thereby conferred on the community, will be astonished to learn the extraordinary purposes for which letters patent were granted in the olden time. By letters patent was meant originally letters from the Crown that were open to everybody that could read them, and differed from letters close, which were sealed up and addressed to a particular party. The first letters patent were issued in the third year of the reign of King John, A.D. 1201. The following are amusing instances of the powers exercised under letters patent granted by that monarch. By one of these instruments he ordained that every year, when lampreys were first caught, they should not be sold for more than 2s. each, until after February, when they were to be sold at a lower price. In another case, his Majesty granted a licence to Peter Bullo to adopt any religion he pleased. In another instance he granted safe conduct, or the right of proceeding without molestation, to enable Stephen, the Archbishop of Canterbury, to come to Staines. By another, a licence was granted to Margaret de Leghorn to marry whomsoever she pleased; and, in another case, his Majesty issued his royal letters patent, to certify that Robert, son of Robert the Mercer, lost his ear at Chateauneuf in the King's service, and not on account of felony. When one of the punishments for felony was nailing one of the ears of the offender to the pillory, it was highly [illegible]sary for a man who had sustained a loss of the kind to be able to account for the same in a satisfactory manner. Such were letters patent in the olden time: they are now issued for a very different purpose.—Standard.

The New "Passengers Act."—An important Act was passed in the late [illegible]sion "to Amend and Consolidate the Laws relating to the Carriage of Passengers by Sea." There are 91 clauses in the Act, and several schedules, containing forms to carry the Act into execution. On the 1st October the Act is to come into operation, when the "Passengers Act 1849" is to be repealed, except as to the existing liabilities, and except as to an order in Council, dated the 6th October, 1849. The Act is to extend to every passenger ship proceeding on any voyage from the United Kingdom to any place out of Europe, and not being within the Mediterranean Sea, and on every colonial voyage as stated. It is not to extend to her Majesty's ships of war, &c. The Commissioners of Emigration are to carry the Act into execution. There are various provisions as to the accommodation and diet to be afforded to passengers. No passenger is to be landed without his previous consent at any port or place other than the port at which he may have contracted to land. Her Majesty may, by orders in Council, prescribe rules for the preservation of order, &c. in vessels bound to the colonies. Only a certain number of passengers is to be allowed, according to the size of the ships. The forms in the schedule explain the manner in which the Act is to be carried into force.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

A Compendium of the Law and Practice of Vendors and Purchasers of Real Estates. By J. Henry Dart, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London: Stevens and Norton.

The issue of a second edition of this work is the best tribute to its merit. Practitioners speedily discover the true worth of a Law Book, and if it advances beyond a first edition we may be sure that it offers some uncommon recommendations, either in the practical handling of the subject, or the extent of learning it displays. It has proved itself to be adapted in some way to the wants of the Profession. Such has been the case with Mr. Dart's treatise. Although opposed to so formidable a rival as Sugden's "Vendors and Purchasers," it has so recommended itself to the Lawyers, that they have exhausted one edition, and encouraged the author to the issue of another. Nor are we surprised at this. It is a really good book.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ASSURANCE OFFICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have this week seen a letter to a friend of mine from a gentleman in London, in which he states that a certain mutual life assurance office, not a hundred miles from 345, Strand, being in want of agents, "will give 10s. per week to him for his services, besides allowing a commission on business transacted," if he accept the office of agent, and assure his own life in 200*l.*

Surely there must be something here "more than meets the eye;" or how can one office allow so much better terms for agen[illegible]s than the old-established offices? I am, Sir, yours, &c.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Assizes.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT.

Newcastle, July 30.—The calendar contains the names of twenty-three prisoners. Many of these cases are charges of stabbing by Irishmen, several are highway robberies, the rest are ordinary larceny cases. The cause list contains an entry of eight causes.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Hereford, July 31.—The commission was opened yesterday. There were three causes for trial and twenty-three prisoners. Of these there were charged with housebreaking, 5; arson, 2 (the bill against one was thrown out); stealing from the dwelling-house, 2; assaulting with intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, 1; and the rest with larceny, false pretences, and riot.

WESTERN CIRCUIT.

Bodmin, July 31.—The commission for the county of Cornwall was opened yesterday by Mr. Baron Platt and Mr. Baron Martin. The civil business was very small, there being only three causes entered for trial, one of which was an undefended ejectment, another was withdrawn, and the third was disposed of in half an hour, and was of no public interest whatever. There were only twenty-two prisoners for trial, and, with one exception (a case of child murder), were of a very ordinary description.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.

Ipswich, July 31.—The Nisi Prius Court was opened to-day at half-past nine by Mr. Baron Parke, notwithstanding a severe attack of gout in the knee, which almost prevented all power of locomotion. The cause list contained one special jury and five common jury causes. The calendar contains the names of nearly fifty prisoners, but with few exceptions, the offences imputed to them are not of an aggravated character. Among the more serious cases are one of child murder, one of rape, one of perjury, five of arson, one of cutting and stabbing, one of manslaughter, three of burglaries, and one charge of concealment of birth.

HOME CIRCUIT.

Guildford, Aug. 2.—The commission for the county of Surrey was opened on Saturday. Lord Chief Justice Jervis presided on the civil side, and Mr. Justice Maule in the Crown Court. The business is very heavy, seventy causes being entered on the civil side, fourteen of which are special jury cases, and in the Crown Court there are nineteen prisoners, although the quarter sessions were only last week, and many of the charges are of a very serious character.

SOUTH WALES CIRCUIT.

Monmouth, August 3.—The judges arrived here at an early hour yesterday. There were seven causes entered, of which two were marked for special juries. There were 40 prisoners for trial, of whom 1 was charged with murder, 5 with an assault with intent to do grievous bodily harm, 3 with an assault on a constable in the execution of his duty, 2 with rapes on children, 1 with assault with attempt to commit a rape, 1 with assaulting and ill-treating a child, 3 with burglary, 3 with assault and robbery, 1 with an assault and inflicting grievous bodily harm, and the remainder with common larcenies.

A bust of Lord Denman, sculptured by Christopher Moor, will shortly be placed in the Law Institution, Chancery-lane.

Captain Atcherley, armed with a police-staff, appeared in the Lord Chancellor's Court lately, with his Indian chief—and was about to address the Court as a constable, "on the part of the Crown." The Lord Chancellor told him to "hold his tongue;" and, after some violent resistance on his part, the intruder was ejected by the ushers of the court.

NECROLOGY.

OF LEGISLATORS, MAGISTRATES, AND LAWYERS.

MR. GRANGER, M.P. FOR DURHAM CITY.—It is our melancholy duty to record the death of Mr. Granger, the valuable member for the city of Durham. The melancholy event took place in York yesterday (Thursday) very suddenly. The hon. member had been on the northern circuit at the Durham assizes, and arrived in York on Saturday evening. Feeling himself unwell, he resolved to remain quiet in the ancient city of York for a few days, hoping that a relaxation from the excitement of business would be beneficial. He consulted Mr. B. Dodsworth, a surgeon of considerable practice, and he continued to improve under his treatment until Wednesday, when a marked change for the worst presented itself. Dr. Simpson, an experienced physician, was called in, but the disease baffled every effort, and on Thursday morning, at eight o'clock, the hon. member breathed his last at Scawin's Hotel, near the railway station, where he had taken apartments. Mr. Granger was called to the Bar in 1830. He was a Queen's counsel, a bencher of the Inner Temple, and recorder for the borough of Hull. He has represented Durham in three parliaments, having been elected in 1841, and again in 1847, and a third time in 1852. He was an unsuccessful candidate at the elections in 1835 and 1837. The remains of the hon. member will be removed from York this (Friday) morning for interment in the vaults of the Temple Church.

CONTENTS.

To Readers and Correspondents.

The delay in the publication of the part now due of Hughes's Concise Precedents in Modern Conveyancing has arisen thus. It occurred to us a short time since that the work might be made still more practically useful to Solicitors if closed with a collection of recitals, covenants, provisos, and other parts of deeds, arranged alphabetically, so that the form required may be readily found. Mr. Hughes has adopted the suggestion, and the work has, therefore, been unavoidably delayed for their preparation. But the great value and utility of such a collection will, we hope, be deemed fully to compensate the subscribers and purchasers for a few weeks' postponement of publication.

"O. P."—It is not correctly stated in the book alluded to. The grounds of appeal are not required to be so delivered, it is only desirable that they should be so sent.

"H. S. W."—We are not aware that a third edition of the work named is in progress. The latest work on the subject is the Second Edition of Hughes's Practice of Sales, which is, in fact, a treatise on the Law of Real Property as it is.

"R. W. U." Thanks for the corrections in the list of Lawyer M.P.'s The additions have now been made, and we hope will be found correct. The compiler appears to have omitted the Irish returns.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1852.

THE NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.

AMONG the intelligence for the Practitioner that we are wont to gather into the department of the LAW TIMES entitled, The Lawyer, will be found a report of a case lately heard in the Rolls Court, and which has a particular interest just now, because it is an illustration of the practice of the Equity Courts, as it will be henceforth. It will be seen that the witnesses were, by consent, examined vivâ voce, on the floor of the Court, thus making the first trial of the great experiment of which we are so soon to witness the general adoption. In this instance it was entirely successful.

The report is placed among news, and not among the regular reports, because the case decided no point of law, and, therefore, has no permanent value. Its interest is wholly temporary, due to the peculiar circumstances stated above.

MORTGAGES.

OUR correspondent, Mr. GIBSON, who used such harsh terms in speaking of a suggestion which was at least harmless, returns to the charge and puts a case which he challenges us to answer.

"A. mortgages to B. for 500*l.* B. registers his mortgage and supplies ten certificate-holders or submortgagees of 50*l.* each. These certificates are mortgages in fact, or else they are no security more than a bill of exchange. If they are mortgages, then, of course, each certificate-holder should have a power of sale, a right of foreclosure, and also the rents and profits."

Herein lies our correspondent's fallacy; the certificates are not mortgages nor submortgages, but only representatives of certain sums of money that are secured by a certain deed and registry. They are issued for a definite term, say of one, two, three, or more years, and during that period they have currency; when they become due, the holder for the time being presents them at the registry office, and if they be not then paid, the property is sold, and the debt, interest and costs, are paid out of the proceeds.

They will be better securities than bills and notes, because, in addition to the personal security of those who deal with them (which is all that bills and notes give, and which yet makes them current at a low rate of interest) the proposed certificates will have the further security of a charge upon land.

Practically they would be neither more nor less than bills of exchange secured, in the ultimate resort, by solid acres, and therefore by so much better than bills that are unsecured.

MILITIA.

THE Militia is to be embodied in October. Clerks to lieutenancies and deputy lieutenants are puzzled what they are to do, and we have many applications, from all parts of the country, for information. Mr. SAUNDERS, who has laboriously collected in a little volume all the statutes under which the Militia is to be raised, and by which it will be regulated,(a) was desirous to present to his readers a chapter of instructions as to the proceedings to be taken for the purpose. He was unable to do so, because the statute is silent upon the subject. Never was there so vague an Act. Everything is left to the Government, and as yet they have issued only some almost equally vague instructions to the Lords Lieutenant. But being desirous of helping our correspondents if we could, we applied to Mr. SAUNDERS, as having mastered the statutes in the preparation of his book upon them, to favour us with some sketch of the course to be taken in order to form the new Militia. His reply will be the best answer to our correspondents. He says,—

I do not know what instructions I c[illegible] give. No proceedings are set forth in t[illegible] it would be idle for me to invent a course of [illegible]ceeding, when there are no data from which to s[illegible]. You will perceive that the operation of the first Act, the 42 Geo. 3, c. 90, is suspended in all its material points as regards raising the militia, until there is a failure in getting men by voluntary enlistment, and in all human probability it always will be suspended, particularly since the altered feeling upon the subject of a militia. So that all that the militia functionaries are called upon to do now, is that which is contained in the new Militia Act of the last Session. (15 & 16 Vict. c. 50.)

Now, under this latter Act, it is provided in sec. 11, in general terms, that the lieutenants of counties, at such times, &c. as the Queen shall direct, are to direct their deputy-lieutenants to proceed to raise and enrol volunteers to serve for the term of five years; and such deputy-lieutenants are forthwith to proceed to raise such volunteers, under the regulations of the Secretary-at-War. Sec. 15 then states, that the volunteers are to be examined and approved according to such regulations as shall be made by the Secretary-at-War. Sec. 17 enacts, that the deputy-lieutenants are to transmit the list of volunteers to the clerk of general meetings.

Now, this is really all that is enacted upon the subject; and how, therefore, can I possibly give you any instructions or directions. The Act seems to contemplate that the directions and instructions are to be framed by the Secretary-at-War; and it does appear that something of this sort has been done, and sent round to the different lord lieutenants.

At present there is no form of practice—the Act is very vague upon the subject, and all appears to be left to the Secretary-at-War. I am afraid great confusion will arise in carrying out so very vague an Act. All I know is, that the Privy Council have directed a certain number of voluntary militia-men to be raised in each county, and that the lord lieutenants are directed to raise them; but the Act does not say what particular course is to be pursued for the purpose. No doubt the Secretary-at-War has or will give a body of instructions upon the subject, but it is impossible for me to lay down any rules or course of proceeding.

As the statutes will not help us, we have now sought the aid of one who will be informed of the doings of the Government. Mr. FOOTE, of Swindon, who is, we believe, acting clerk to a Deputy Lieutenancy, and whose name and thoroughly practical writings are so well known to our readers, has promised to give them all the intelligence he can procure as to the business of the Militia, and to keep them fully informed as to the proceedings his brother-officers will be required to take in relation to it.

We have collected in the department of The Magistrate, all the news as to the Militia, and we shall continue to do so.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

THE List published last week was not a complete one. It omitted one English member,

(a) The Militia Laws; comprising all the Statutes relating to the Militia, with Notes, and copious Index. By T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, Author of "The Duties of Magistrates," &c. Crockford. 7s. 6d.

Mr. GEORGE HADFIELD, M.P. for Sheffield, who is an Attorney practising at Manchester, and almost all the Irish members, and it seems that Ireland has returned a much greater proportionate number of Lawyers than England. The completed list, therefore, is as follows. Those marked with an asterisk are, or have been, Solicitors :—

Thus, it seems, that there are ninety-nine Lawyers in the new House of Commons, of whom eighty-four are or have been Barristers, and fifteen are or have been Solicitors. Seventy-two Lawyers were unsuccessful, making the total number of Lawyer candidates at the last election no less than 156!

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

VII. PLEADING.

We come now to describe the alterations that have been made in the language and form of pleading.

In this series of papers our purpose is only to make our readers acquainted with the law as it is; we have no purpose in this place to consider the propriety of the changes that have been effected, nor to throw out any suggestion for further improvement. In articles devoted to the consideration of the law as it should and might be, we have already expressed our regret that the changes in the system of pleading were not more extensive, and that so much of the old leaven has been permitted to remain.

The commission had the choice between two courses; either to sweep away entirely the old system and construct a new one, or to endeavour to amend the existing system by lopping off some of its abuses. They preferred the latter course; consequently, as they have proposed, and the Legislature has adopted it, the system of pleading in the Common Law Courts remains in substance unchanged; it is only altered in some of its details. The reader must remember this, in order that the alterations so made may be intelligible to him.

The first aim of the commissioners was to simplify and to abbreviate pleadings; the second, to prevent justice being defeated by defects in form; the third, to secure, as far as possible, that the very issue intended to be tried should be raised upon the record.

Accordingly the statute commences its provisions relative to pleading, by abolishing all needless and fictitious averments. Such are—

1. Statements that need not be proved, as time, quantity, quality, and value, where these are immaterial.
2. Statements of losing and finding, and bailment in actions for goods, or their value.
3. Statements of acts of trespass being committed with force and arms, and contra pacem.
4. Statements of promises that need not be proved, as in indebitatus counts, and mutual promises to perform agreements.

Demurrers are still permitted, and indeed they could not well be dispensed with, for properly they mean nothing more than the assertion by the party that, "granting all the facts stated by the other party to be true, he is not entitled in law to maintain his action against me: they make out no case in law." From the gross abuses of the privilege of demurrer which had crept in under the old practice, where it was employed, not so much to raise a question of law upon the facts as to defeat the suitor by objections to the pleadings, the name of demurrer had come to be held in abhorrence, and it was deemed to be the source of all mischief. The new practice, however, restores it to its original and proper function, that of raising the legal question upon the case, as disclosed by the pleadings, and provides that either party may object by demurrer to the pleading of the opposite party, on the ground that such pleading does not set forth sufficient ground of action, defence, or reply; but the Court is to give judgment upon such demurrer according as the very right of the cause and matter in law shall appear unto them, without regarding any defect for lack of form; and no judgment is to be arrested for lack of form.

But special demurrers, which were raised upon the form of the pleadings, are wholly abolished.

Pleadings framed to embarrass or delay may be struck out or amended by the Court or a Judge, on the application of the opposite party.

Rules to declare, plead, &c. are abolished, and a notice is substituted requiring the other party to declare, plead, &c. within four days.

Pleadings are to be entitled of the proper Court, and of the day and month when actually pleaded, and entered in the record under the date when the same took place, unless otherwise specially ordered by the Court.

Profert and Oyer are abolished, and instead of them, the party pleading in answer to any pleading, in which any document is referred to, may set out the whole or any material part of it, and which shall be deemed part of the pleading.

Performance of conditions precedent may be averred generally; but they may not be denied generally, but the party denying must state the particular condition the performance of which he means to contest.

VIII. THE DECLARATION AND PARTICULARS OF DEMAND.

Plaintiff must declare within a year after the writ is returnable.

The Act prescribes the form of the commencement and conclusion of the declaration.

It is to begin thus :—

"A. by B. his attorney, sues C. for," &c.

It is to conclude thus :—

"And the plaintiff claims £ ."

The only exception is in detinue, which is to conclude thus :—

"And the plaintiff claims a return of the said goods, or their value, and £ for their detention."

After a plea of nonjoinder, the declaration is to commence thus :—

"A. by B. his attorney, sues C. and D. which said C. has heretofore pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder of the said D."

In actions for libel or slander, the plaintiff may aver that the words were used in a defamatory sense, specifying that defamatory sense without any prefatory averment to shew how the words were used in that sense, and the denial of the libel shall put that averment in issue, and the declaration is to be sufficient where the words set forth shew a cause of action, with or without the alleged meaning.

IX. THE PLEA.

Rules to plead are abolished: the notice to plead indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately is to be sufficient.

If the defendant is within the jurisdiction, the time for pleading in bar is within eight days, unless the Court or a Judge should extend the time, and notice to that effect; otherwise judgment may be indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately.

Express colour, special traverses, allegation of actionem non, prayer of judgment, allegation of precludi non, are abolished.

The plea is to commence thus :—

"The defendant, by A. his attorney, says that [stating the defence.]"

If more pleas than one, the commencement is to be thus :—

"And for a second plea the defendant says."

And if pleaded to part only, then it is to be thus :—

"And for a second plea to [stating to what it is pleaded], the defendant says that," &c.

It is not to be necessary to state that it is pleaded by leave of a Court or Judge, or according to the form of the statute.

But every such plea, avowry, or cognisance, is to be written in a separate paragraph, and numbered.

A defence arising after action brought is to be pleaded according to the facts, without any formal commencement or conclusion. If the plea does not state whether the defence arose before or after action, it shall be deemed to be a plea of matter arising before action.

Instead of the plea puis darrein continuance, the same defence may be pleaded, with an allegation that the matter arose after the last pleading; and it may, when necessary, be pleaded at Nisi Prius between the 10th of August and the 24th of October. But it must be accompanied with an affidavit that the matter arose within eight days next before the pleading thereof, unless the Court or a Judge shall otherwise order.

Payment into court by the defendant by way of compensation or amends is to be permitted in all actions except—

1. Assault and battery.
2. False imprisonment.
3. Libel and slander.

4. Malicious arrest and prosecution.
5. Criminal conversation.
6. Seduction.

And such payment is to be pleaded thus:—

"The defendant, by A. his attorney, brings into court the sum of £ , and says that the said sum is enough to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the matter herein pleaded to."

No rule or order is to be required to pay money into court, but it is to be paid to the proper officer of the court, who is to give a receipt for the amount on the margin of the plea, and it is to be paid out to the plaintiff or his attorney on a written authority from the plaintiff on demand.

After payment into court, plaintiff may reply by accepting it in full satisfaction and discharge, and then may tax his costs; and, in case of nonpayment thereof within forty-eight hours, may sign judgment for the same, or he may reply that the sum so paid is not enough to satisfy his claim.

We shall proceed with this sketch of the new practice of pleading next week.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

HAVING on a former occasion noticed the abolition of the office of Master in Chancery, and the duties which the present Masters will have to perform, in winding up the business of their respective offices, we may now proceed with some of the other provisions of the Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80.

And first, with regard to the judges sitting at chambers to perform the duties which formerly devolved upon the Masters. From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852, the MASTER of the ROLLS and the VICE-CHANCELLORS are, in conjunction with their court business, to sit at chambers in rooms attached to the courts, for the dispatch of such of the business of the court as can, without detriment to the public advantage, arising from the discussion of questions in open court, be heard in chambers, at and during the times to be fixed on by them respectively (secs. 11, 12); and they are to have the same power and jurisdiction as if they were sitting in open court (sec. 13); and the orders made by them in chambers are ordinarily to be drawn up by their Clerks, or, if they so direct it, by the Registrar, whose attendance at chambers may be required for that purpose (sec. 14); and the orders so made at chambers are to have the same effect as orders of the Court of Chancery, and may be signed and enrolled in the like manner (sec. 15).

For the purpose of assisting in the general business of the court, the MASTER of the ROLLS and the VICE-CHANCELLORS respectively, with the approbation of the LORD CHANCELLOR, are each to appoint two Chief Clerks (holding office during good behaviour, sec. 21), to be respectively attached to each Judge and his successors (sec. 14), but no person can be appointed a Chief Clerk unless he shall have been a Chief Clerk to one of the Masters in Ordinary of the Court, or have been admitted on the Rolls of Solicitors or Attorneys in one of the Courts at Westminster Hall, and practised in such capacity for the period of ten years immediately preceding his appointment. Mr. GEORGE WHITING, Mr. HENRY LEMAN, and Mr. CHARLES PUGH, at present Chief Clerks of the Masters, are appointed by the Act, Chief Clerks of three of the Judges (sec. 17.) The Judge of each Court has also power to appoint a junior Clerk (holding office during the pleasure of the Judge) to each Chief Clerk of his Court (secs. 18 and 22). The LORD CHANCELLOR has power to remove any person accepting office under the Act who engages in any employment, or receives any sum of money or benefit other than his salary, or what he is allowed to take for the performance of his duties, or if, having been a solicitor or attorney, he shall directly or indirectly receive or secure to himself any continuing benefit from any business or firm in which he may have been engaged previously to his appointment to such office, and a person so removed will be rendered incapable of holding any office or employment in the Court (sec. 19). And every solicitor or attorney accepting office under the Act must cease to be an attorney and solicitor, and procure himself to be struck off the rolls (s. 20).

Both the Chief and Junior Clerks are to be under the control of the Judge to whose Court he is attached, and are to attend at such places during such times and for such hours in each day, and perform such duties, as such Judge shall from time to time direct (sec. 23), and they are to be subject to the same prohibitions, prosecutions, &c. as are imposed by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, with respect to officers of the Court of Chancery (sec. 24). And the LORD CHANCELLOR, with the concurrence of the MASTER of the ROLLS and VICE-CHANCELLORS, or any two of them, may, by order, without stating any cause, remove any Chief Clerk to be appointed under the Act from his office. (Sec. 25.)

We now come to a very important part of the Act, viz. that which relates to the business to be disposed of by the Judges in chambers. It is to consist of such of the following matters as the Judge shall from time to time think may be more conveniently disposed of in chambers than in open court, viz.:—

- For time to plead answer or demur.
- For leave to amend bills or claims.
- For enlarging publication.
- For the production of documents relating to the conduct of suits or matters.
- As to the guardianship and maintenance of infants.
- On matters connected with the management of property.
- On such other matters as each such Judge may from time to time see fit, or as may from time to time be directed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor.

(Sec. 26.)

And any of the Judges when sitting in open court may adjourn, for consideration in chambers, any matter which he may consider can be more conveniently disposed of there; or when sitting in chambers may direct any matter to be heard in open court which he may think ought to be so heard. (Sec. 27.)

The mode of proceeding before the Judges at chambers is to be by summons, and as near as may be according to the form now adopted by the Judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law when sitting at chambers. (Sec. 28.)

Sole power is given to the Judges (subject to any rules to be made by the Lord Chancellor) to order what matters and things are to be investigated by their Chief Clerks, either with or without their direction, during their progress, and what matters and things are to be heard and investigated by themselves; and in particular if the Judge so direct, his Chief Clerks are to take accounts and make such inquiries as have been usually prosecuted before the Chief Clerks of the present Masters, and the Judge is to give such aid and directions in such accounts and inquiries as he may think proper, subject to the right provided for in a subsequent section (sec. 33), for the suitor to bring any particular point before the Judge himself (s. 29).

For the purpose of any proceedings directed by the Judges, each Chief Clerk is to have full power to issue advertisements, to summon parties and witnesses, to administer oaths, to take affidavits and acknowledgments (other than acknowledgments by married women), to receive affirmations, and, when so directed by the Judge to whose Court he is attached, to examine parties and witnesses, either upon interrogatories or vivâ voce, as such Judge shall direct (sec 30); and parties and witnesses so summoned neglecting to attend, shall be liable to process of contempt; and for false swearing or affirming, to the same penalties, punishments, and consequences, as if it had taken place before any person now by law authorised to administer oaths, to take affidavits, and to receive affirmations (s. 31).

No particular form is required for the directions to be given by any of the Judges to the Chief Clerk, as to any proceedings before him; and the Chief Clerk is to state the result in the shape of a short certificate to the Judge, but not in a formal report, unless the Judge shall so direct; and the Judge, if he approve of the certificate or report, is to sign it, in testimony of his adoption of it (sec. 32). No exceptions are to lie to any certificate or report, although signed and adopted by the Judge, but any party either during the proceedings before the Chief Clerk or upon such time after their conclusion and before the signature and adoption of the certificate or report, as the LORD CHANCELLOR shall by general order direct, is to be at liberty to take the opinion of the Judge upon any particular point or matter arising in the course of the proceedings, or when the result of the whole proceeding when it is brought by the Chief Clerk to a conclusion (sec. 33). When any certificate or report of the Chief Clerk has been signed and adopted by the judge, it is to be filed in the same way as reports are now filed, and will be binding upon all the parties, unless discharged or varied either at chambers or in open court, according to the nature of the case, upon application by summons or motion within the time to be prescribed by any general order of the LORD CHANCELLOR, but the Court is to have power at any time to open any such certificate or report upon the same or the like grounds as any report of a Master which has been absolutely confirmed may now be opened (sec. 34). The 13th, 14th, and 15th sections of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, giving power to the Masters to hear certain interlocutory matters subject to appeal, which the Court was not to hear except on appeal, and which will now be heard by the Judges in the first instance, and also as to the mode of appointing the Masters in ordinary, are repealed. (Sec. 35.) Next follows a section added by amendment to the Bill, as originally introduced, the absence of which might have occasioned considerable inconvenience, giving to the Judges after the 1st day of Michaelmas Term next, all or any of the powers, authorities, and jurisdiction given to the Masters in ordinary, by any acts then in force. (Sec. 36.)

In a former number, were noticed the extensive and novel powers given to the Masters and to the Court, by secs. 7, 8, and 9 of the Act, to compel parties to proceed with their suits, &c. These are to be exercised by each of the Judges in chambers, who, if he thinks that any cause, matter, or thing depending before him ought to be finally disposed of, unless cause can be shewn to the contrary, may direct the same to stand in his paper in open court, and upon giving such notice, if any, as he may deem right, may dispose thereof accordingly. (Sec. 37.)

The evident intention of the Legislature has been to delegate to the Judges the present duties of the Masters, at any rate, such of them as are of a judicial character, whilst those of a merely mechanical character are (under the direction and supervision of the Judge), to be performed by his Chief Clerks, and it is a great mistake to suppose that they are to stand in the same relation to the Judge as the Master formerly did—they are, properly speaking, mere assistants of, not substitutes for, the Judge. To those acquainted with the almost interminable delays and frightful expenses of references, of inquiries, reports, exceptions to reports, and all the vexatious details of the practice of the Masters' offices, the great benefit to be derived, by having proceedings in a suit worked out by the Judge himself, with an assistant clerk, will be self-evident. A like benefit will likewise accrue to the suitors by the powers conferred upon the Masters, for the purpose of winding up the affairs of their offices, which in effect, constitute them Judges, in everything almost except the name. Above all, the powers conferred both upon the Judges and Masters, of compelling parties to go on with their suits, will have, in all probability, as it had in Ireland, where this practice was introduced by the present LORD CHANCELLOR, a most beneficial effect.

Power is given by the 38th section to the LORD CHANCELLOR, with the consent of the MASTER of the ROLLS, and the VICE-CHANCELLORS, or any two of them, and they are thereby required to make general rules and orders for regulating the times, and forms, and mode of procedure before the Judges respectively, sitting at chambers, and their respective Chief Clerks, and generally the practice of the Court, in respect of the matters to which the Act relates, and for regulating the fees and allowances to Solicitors of the Court in respect to such matters; and also for regulating the fees to be payable by suitors of the said Court, to the officers thereof, in respect of the business to be conducted before the Judges sitting at chambers, and their respective chief clerks; and such rules and regulations may be, from time to time, rescinded, altered, varied, or added to by the like authority, and are to take effect as general orders. And there is proviso that no greater amount of fees is to be payable by the suitors in respect of such business than is now paid in respect of similar or analogous business in the Masters' offices.

These and the other orders to be made under the Chancery Reform Acts of the last session are, it is believed, already prepared, and soon about to be issued; they are naturally expected with considerable interest by the Profession, since much of the success of the Acts embodying the bold and salutary recommendations of the Chancery Commissioners, depends upon their character. It must, however, be observed that no one who reads the recommendations of the commissioners, expressed in clear, well-arranged, and unparliamentary language, can feel aught but regret that full power has not been given to such a body of men to prepare (subject, however, to revision by another select and competent body) an entirely new code of Chancery procedure. Until that is done, notwithstanding the improvements now introduced, the mode of conducting a suit must be picked up from a confused heap of Acts of Parliament, orders, reports, books of practice, and even from the floating traditions of the officials of the Court.

THE MAGISTRATE, AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

A STATUTE of some importance extending the provisions of the Friendly Societies' Act was passed last session. It is entitled An Act to legalise the Formation of Industrial and Provident Societies (15 & 16 Vict. c. 31; 19 Law T. 153.) It empowers societies of working men to be formed for the purpose of procuring by joint "labour, trade, or handicraft (except the business of mining and banking), a fund for obtaining any object authorised by the Friendly Societies Acts." It specifies the rules upon which such societies shall be framed; that the interests of the members shall not be transferable; that if any member shall become bankrupt or insolvent, he shall be taken to have withdrawn from the society from that date; that the awards of arbitrators may be enforced in the County Courts, if the mere matter in dispute is within their jurisdiction, if not, by the Superior Courts; the funds of such societies are not to be invested in the savings banks, or as those of friendly societies now are; the laws relating to friendly societies are to be applicable to these, unless as varied by this Act or inapplicable; societies constituted under the Joint-Stock Companies Act not to come under this Act; the interest of any single member is to be fixed by the rules, and is not to exceed 100*l.*; or, if an annuity, not to be more than 30*l.* per annum; annual returns are to be made; the liabilities of members to the lawful debts and engagements of the society are not to be restricted; but they are not to extend beyond two years after the member has withdrawn from it, and the provision of the Friendly Societies Act that gives them priority over other creditors is not to extend to this Act. It will be seen from this that the statute is of very small service for the objects for which it was designed. Probably it relaxes the strict law of partnership so far as it can be safely done, but it does not accomplish the desires of the Socialists.

THE MILITIA.(a)

HAVING received communications from numerous correspondents, seeking for information on points connected with the practical working of the Militia Acts, and also as to the particular duties to be performed by the clerks to the general and subdivisional meetings of the lieutenancy, we intend to contribute a series of articles on the subject. Upwards of twenty years having intervened since the period when the militia was last embodied and called out for permanent duty, comparatively few persons are now acquainted with the routine of business and practical knowledge requisite for such an occasion, and to a considerable number the proceedings will necessarily present features of a new and complicated character. We wish, however, to impress upon our correspondents and readers that the "ballot" system, in which the chief amount of practical knowledge of the militia law is required, will not be brought into operation for some considerable time, as in the first instance the raising of the militia force will be by voluntary enlistment, and should that method fail in obtaining the requisite number of men, then recourse will be had to the "ballot." By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 75, all general and subdivision meetings relating to the militia, and all proceedings relating to the procuring any returns, or preparing or making out lists, or relating to the ballotting for or enrolling any militia-men, shall remain suspended until the 1st October, 1853; but proceedings may be had during the period of such suspension by order in council. Until the period arrives for proceeding by ballot to supply any deficiency in the number of volunteers, there will be very little preparation required on the part of the clerks to the lieutenancies, as we apprehend that the raising of the men by voluntary enlistment will be conducted by means of the staff of the militia force, in the same manner as recruiting for the regular army. It is, however, possible, that the lords-lieutenant may require the clerks to the lieutenancy within their respective divisions to facilitate the enrolment of the force, by causing them to open lists for the reception of the names of volunteers, and to be placed in communication with commanding officers and their recruiting parties. The Secretary at War is empowered to make regulations as to the sum to be paid by way of bounty (which is not to exceed 6*l.*), and as to the pay, and also as to the ages between which men may be received; as to the height; and for the examination and approval by medical men of all men to be raised for the militia, whether they are volunteers or otherwise; and also as to all other matters which, under the provisions of the Act, are made subject to regulations to be made by the Secretary at War. The regulations, therefore, to be issued by the Secretary at War will form the code of instructions for the guidance of those persons on whom will devolve the preliminary proceedings for embodying the Militia Volunteer Force. By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, s. 12, it is enacted, that where the number of men required to be raised, in any county, has not been raised by voluntary enlistment, the Crown may direct such deficiency to be raised by voluntary enlistment in and for any county in which the full quota may have been raised and kept up; but no ballot is to be had in such county for keeping up any greater number of militia-men in such county, than would have been required to be kept up therein in case such order had not been made. The wording of the section is somewhat confused, but the meaning seems to be, that if in one county the required number of men cannot be obtained by voluntary enlistment, then the deficiency may be supplied by means of voluntary enlistment "in and for" any other county, in which the full quota has been raised and kept up, but so that no ballot shall take place therein for keeping up any greater number of men than would have been required to be kept up therein in case such order had not been made. The words "in and for" seem to limit the enlistment to the county wherein made; and the marginal note to the section in the Act states probably what is the true construction (but which it is difficult to collect from the words themselves in the section). It runs thus:—"The number of men not raised by enlistment in any county may be authorised to be raised by enlistment, as a supplemental corps in another county." The Crown may order such supplemental corps, or any part of the militia, to be marched into any other county for training and exercise.

An important feature ought not to be lost sight of by individuals liable to the ballot, which is, that by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, s. 19, in apportioning the number of men required to be raised by ballot among the several sub-divisions and parishes, if the number of men serving, and who at the time of being enrolled were resident in any sub-division or parish, amount to the full number of men which, upon a just apportionment of the whole number of militia-men required to serve for such county, among the several sub-divisions and parishes thereof, according to the number of men fit and liable to serve in the militia, resident therein respectively, ought to be furnished by any subdivision or parish, no proceeding by ballot shall be had by such subdivision or parish, but the men required to be raised by ballot shall be apportioned among the other subdivisions or parishes. The greater number, therefore, of volunteers, which can be enrolled in any place, the better it will be, in the future proceeding by ballot, in regard to sub-divisions and parishes in which the full number of volunteers have been raised (to be ascertained on the apportionment), for then such places will be wholly exempt from the ballot; for example, if, in the parishes of A. and B. fifty men in each are required to be raised as the apportioned number, and if in A. the full number of volunteers is raised, then that parish will be wholly exempt from the ballot; whilst, if in B. only thirty volunteers should be enrolled, then the latter parish would be liable to supply, by means of the ballot, not only its own deficiency in the apportioned number, but also a proportion of the deficiency in other parishes wherein the proper number of volunteers has not been raised.

THE MILITIA.

THE following are the proceedings with respect to the militia, reported from various parts of the country.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—A meeting of the deputy-lieutenants was on Tuesday convened by Earl Fitzhardinge, the lord lieutenant of the county, to consider certain suggestions of the Secretary of State as to the best means of raising recruits for the militia by voluntary enlistment. The lord lieutenant stated the number of men to be enrolled during the present year for the county was 1,240, and next year 753. The period of service was to be for five years, and all young men were eligible as volunteers who were not less than five feet three inches in height, and not younger than eighteen, nor older than thirty-five. The bounty was to be 6*l.*, 1*l.* to be given on enlisting, and the remainder paid in monthly instalments. His lordship urged upon the deputy-lieutenants the necessity there was for them to do all in their power in their respective localities to induce the required number of men to come forward and offer their services, in order that the ballot might be anticipated, and its inconveniences prevented. That this might be done more effectually, his lordship recommended the deputy-lieutenants to communicate with the churchwardens and overseers of their parishes respectively, and that thus every facility should be afforded for carrying out the object in view. After explanations had been given as to the progressive steps to be taken in the enrolment of the men, the examination by surgeons, &c. the meeting broke up. The following are the districts into which the county is divided:—Bristol, Gloucester, Cirencester, Tewkesbury, Newnham, Stow-on-the-Wold, Dursley, Stroud, and Sodbury. Staff-serjeants of the old militia will be immediately sent into the various districts for the purpose of enrolling the volunteers.

EAST KENT.—Earl Cowper, as lord lieutenant of the county, has caused circulars to be addressed to all the officers of the East Kent militia, making inquiry whether they desire to serve in the regiment about to be re-embodied in October next. The office of paymaster in this regiment is vacant since the demise of Captain Ricketts; there are seven applicants for the appointment, which is not, as under the previous Act, in the gift of the lord lieutenant of the county, but of the Queen in Council. —Maidstone Journal.

MIDDLESEX.—On Saturday orders were issued by the lord lieutenants of this and other counties, to their deputies, to take immediate steps for raising the required number of men in their respective districts to serve in the militia, to be embodied in accordance with the Act passed in the last session of Parliament, and during the next week general Courts of Lieutenancy will be held in most of the counties throughout the kingdom to settle the preliminary matters.

THE UNIFORM.—The following is the regulation for clothing the militia:—47,000 men will have a red coatee without lace, with a skirt about nine inches long. The facings to be the same as at present worn by the militia staff of the different corps; the sleeves to have a slash on them like the Guards; black-gray trousers with a red stripe, as the regiments of the line; boots the same, and a Kilmarnock or woollen forage cap with a metal scroll, bearing the name of the regiment; the buttons to be white metal, with the crown stamped only on them. There are to be 1,500 artillery in blue, and 1,500 rifl in green uniform. Nothing is yet known respecting the officers' uniform.—United Service Journal.

THE MILITIA ACTS.—Those who take an interest in the militia, which many persons must, we suppose, from the fact that all the lieutenancies in the country are now the steps primarily required for the regular organisation of the force, clearly ought to make themselves acquainted with the several statutes relating to it. Hitherto, so far as we know, no popular compilation has appeared embracing the entire militia code. But the office of the LAW TIMES, through the industry of Mr. T. W. Saunders, of the Middle Temple, has stepped in to supply the want, and we are bound to say that in the handy little volume, under the designation of "The Militia Acts," just published, the want is supplied most effectually. The provisions of all the Militia Acts now in force are given in consecutive and logical order, with just sufficient explanatory matter to shew their practical effect. The work has been prepared with obvious care, and it has the advantage of an excellent analytical index.—Morning Chronicle.

Queries.

BASTARDY.

ON the 27th of April last an information was laid by A. B. a single woman, residing in the county of Berks, against C. D. the father of a child of which she had been delivered on the 28th March last, and application was made for a summons against C. D. No summons was, however, then granted, as C. D. was living in Ireland, and his correct address was not known; his address in Ireland has now been ascertained, and A. B. has applied for a summons against him to appear to answer her complaint at the Petty Sessions of the division in Berks in which she resides. A. B. has also applied for a summons against C. D. to give evidence on the hearing as a witness on her behalf, as she has no other corroborative evidence. C. D. is above the labouring class.

Will any of your experienced readers be good enough to state if the summonses which have now been applied for ought to be granted against C. D. and if so, how they ought to be served in Ireland, and how the service should be proved in England on the hearing; and if C. D. must be served with a summons to give evidence, and disobey that summons, before a warrant can be granted against him? Also it C. D. can be compelled to pay the expenses attending the service of the summonses. S.

RESIGNATION OF EARL BROWNLOW.—We regret to announce the resignation of our excellent lord-lieutenant. His lordship's health, we are glad to state, is not worse than it has been for some months past, but, in consequence of the enrolment of the militia, the additional labour imposed on his lordship has become so onerous, that he has thought it more consistent with his duty to place his resignation in the hands of the Queen.—Stamford Mercury.

The police stations will be shortly connected with each other, and with the railroads, by means of electric telegraphs.

SILVER MEDALS FOR POLICE OFFICERS.—On Friday, the 6th inst. all the members of the Liverpool police force who were off duty, were assembled by Captain Greig, the recently-appointed chief, in front of St. George's-hall, for the purpose of witnessing the presentation of upwards of 100 silver medals to those officers with whose long services were combined meritorious conduct. The men, upwards of 500 in number, having been drawn up in square round the steps of the hall, were briefly addressed by Mr. Tobin, the chairman of the Watch Committee, after which those to whom the honourable tokens were to be given were severally called out of the ranks, according to their positions in the force, and presented with the medals. They are made of sterling silver and bear on one side the inscription, 'Order of merit. Liverpool police force. Presented by the Watch Committee to ———, as a reward for good conduct." On the obverse side is the Liverpool Arms, with the motto "Non nobis otia fecit." The date is October 9, 1851, in commemoration of Her Majesty's visit to Liverpool. They had one, two, or three bars, according to the length of service—one bar signifying five years; two, ten; and three, 15. The medals were executed by Messrs. Allan and Moore, of Birmingham.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

THE liability of a railway company for loss of passenger's luggage was considered in The Great Western Railway Company v. Goodman, 19 Law T. Rep. 296, which was an appeal from a County Court. Their private Act empowered the company to make bye-laws, provided they were not repugnant to the laws of the realm. They made a bye-law permitting each passenger to carry a certain amount of luggage, but declaring that "the company would not be responsible for the care of luggage unless booked and paid for accordingly." The plaintiff delivered her luggage, without booking, to the porter, with directions to label it, which he did. On her arrival at the place of destination it could not be found. The company were held to be liable by the general law of carriers, notwithstanding their bye-law.

A very important question as to the liability of shareholders was decided in The Galvanized Iron Company v. Westoby, 19 Law T. Rep. 299, how far is a man bound by an agreement to take shares in a Company? It appears from this case that the agreement is a contract, but it is only conditional. Primâ facie, a person subscribing for shares is a shareholder, but this may be rebutted by other evidence, shewing that the circumstances under which he subscribed were different, as when the company had been formed with 50,000 shares, but afterwards, without his express consent, reduced the number.

We also published last week the report from the Court of Error, which had been deferred in consequence of its great length, upon the question whether an insurance office limits its liability by the common proviso in such policies, that the funds of the company only should be answerable for the moneys thereby assured. It will be remembered that in the court below it was held, that such a proviso did not limit the liability, and that an action would lie against individual shareholders for the amount. In Error the Judges were divided upon the point; but the majority have reversed the judgment of the Court below, and held the ruling of Lord CAMPBELL (who tried the case at Nisi Prius) to be wrong. Each of the Judges gave a separate judgment, and we recommend the perusal of them to all of our readers who are interested in the law of Joint-Stock Companies, and especially of Insurance. "The policy," said MARTIN, B. "expressly declares that the capital, stock, and funds of the company shall alone be liable to make good all claims under it; and the meaning of this seems to me to be, that the plaintiff agreed or consented to look not to the general property of all the shareholders, but to confine himself—first, to a fund expected to be accumulated from the payment by the shareholders of a portion of the sum subscribed from time to time, and the premiums received in the course of business, and kept by the directors for the purpose of current demands upon the company; and, secondly, as a sort of reserve fund, to the liability of each shareholder to the extent of his shares not paid up. But the policy proceeds further, and expressly declares that no shareholder shall be liable to any claim by reason of the policy, beyond the amount of his shares in the capital stock. Now, it seems to me, that it is here declared, first, that the shareholder shall be liable to the extent of his unpaid shares; secondly, that he shall not be liable further; and to hold the defendants liable in the present action might render them further liable, and would render them jointly liable, which is equally inconsistent with the above provision, which clearly contemplates a separate liability only. The plaintiff was under no obligation to assure with the company; but, as he thought proper to do so, he is, in my opinion, bound by the express declaration in the policy." (Hallett v. Dowdall, 19 Law T. Rep. 300.)

WINDING UP.

WE reported last week the judgment of the House of Lords in Hutton v. Bright, 19 Law T. Rep. 289, in which it was decided that abortive railway projects were "associations" within the provisions of the Winding-up Acts. The Common Law Judges were invited to assist their Lordships with their opinion upon this important question, and the report is, that when the argument was closed, the Judicial Bench were strongly inclined to the opinion to which all who had looked carefully into the question had previously come, that these incompleted companies were not within the Acts. When, however, the Judges retired to deliberate, it is said that two of them, who thought otherwise, fairly talked over the rest, and produced the unanimous opinion which was last week contained in these columns. If this story be true, it is a remarkable instance of the influence of argument, where there is no prejudice to combat, but only on all sides a real desire to arrive at the truth. The case will perhaps on this account be read with the more interest.

Another very interesting question in the law of winding up is reported from the Court of Appeal. In Ex parte the Assignees of Nicholas, 19 Law T. Rep. 291, it appeared that a shareholder had become bankrupt before the order for winding up. Afterwards he obtained his certificate. Was the official manager entitled to prove against his estate for calls made since the bankruptcy? It was held that he might do so, those calls being in fact in respect of debts previously incurred.

SLIGO AND SHANNON.—On Wednesday a meeting was held before Master Senior, when Mr. Coleman, the official manager, and Mr. Devonshire, his solicitor, reported that the call of 3*l.* 7*s.* 6d. per share, made for the purpose of paying off liabilities and for equalizing payments among the shareholders, some having paid more than others, had only been partially responded to. Whereupon the Master, under the provisions of the Act, directed peremptory orders to be issued for its further enforcement. The claims, which originally amounted to 6,000*l.* have been considerably reduced in consequence of the Master's decision, which has been confirmed upon appeal, to the effect that the shareholders in the railway company are not to be held liable for any proportion of the debts incurred in the promotion of the Sligo Ship Canal Company, which was to have been associated with the railway undertaking.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAYS JUNCTION.—On Monday, at a meeting before Master Brougham, it was reported that a compromise of the affairs of this undertaking had been arranged, Mr. Ashpitel, the principal claimant, having consented to an adjustment. The Master thereupon approved of the compromise. Creditors will be paid out of the funds remaining in hand, which renders any call on the shareholders unnecessary. This will be the first railway scheme out of the multitudinous offspring of the mania of 1845, referred for settlement under the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, that may be now what is called completely "wound up."

PETITIONS, ORDERS, MEETINGS, APPOINTMENTS, CALLS, &c.

[Announced, issued, and made, during the past week.]

British and American Steam Navigation Company.—Call for 65*l* per share, on the 15th of September, on all contributories who have not already paid in full or in part 65*l*. per share; and that those contributories who have paid on account of the 65*l*. per share are to pay the balance due on each share on the 15th of September.—Rose.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

WHERE a wife, having a power of appointment, appointed, by deed duly executed, in her husband's favour, the deed was held to be valid unless proved to be otherwise. The deed was drawn by the husband's solicitor, executed by her in the presence of his two clerks without being read over, and she was distressed and signed it reluctantly. But these circumstances were held not to be sufficient proof to invalidate the deed. (Nedby v. Nedby, 19 Law T. Rep. 294.)

The following was held to be a contract concerning an interest in land, and therefore within the Statute of Frauds. A. a tenant of a house, held under an agreement with the landlord for a seven years' lease, agreed verbally with the defendant to give him immediate possession of it, together with fixtures and improvements made in it, and the defendant, in consideration of this, agreed to pay A. 100*l*. The landlord assented to the exchange of tenants. The plaintiff performed his part of the contract, and the defendant in part performed his by paying to the plaintiff 51*l*. On his refusal to pay the balance, plaintiff brought his plaint to recover it. But it was held that he could not do so, the contract not being in writing, and consequently void within the Statute of Frauds. (Kelly v. Webster, 19 Law. T. Rep. 298.)

Answers to Queries.

NOTICE TO QUIT.

I SUBMIT the following in reply to R. G.'s query in your last.

D. being the assignee of the reversion of A.'s estate, notice of the assignment should be given by the former to the original tenant B. together with a notice requiring all rents due and to become due to be paid to him as such assignee. B. thereupon becomes tenant to D. (attornment in this case being unnecessary), see 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 10; and D. has then the same powers for distress for rent and determination of the tenancy as A. had; the priority of contract being transferred by virtue of such notice from the lessor A. to the assignee B. (32 Hen. 8, c. 34).

The notice to quit should then be from D. to the immediate tenant B. and not to the undertenant C. Same in the case of A., having acknowledged him as his tenant by receipt of the rent, &c.

And in case of B.'s failing to deliver up, or causing C. to deliver up, possession, B. would be liable in ejectment. G.

STAMPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As you have expressed a wish that your readers would inform you of any decisions of the commissioners of stamps in reference to deeds submitted to them,—we beg to apprise you that a conveyance of a house, subject to a mortgage for 220*l*. in consideration of an annuity of 16s. per week, upon which a 35s. stamp was impressed, was adjudged sufficiently stamped.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

THREE County Court appeals from the C. P. which had been delayed to enable the reporters to have access to the papers, and without which it was impossible to report them correctly, appeared in our last. But of these one only related to the Law or Practice of the County Courts, the others being questions of general law, and therefore noticed under their proper departments. In Cuthbertson, v. Parsons, 19 Law T. Rep. 297, there was something like a reference to County Courts Practice. The question raised was as to the liability of certain harbour commissioners for negligence under a local Act. After argument, it appeared that the decision of the judge was contrary to law, and then it was attempted to shew that he had decided upon the facts, and not upon the law, in which case the Court above would not interfere. But in this they failed, and the Court held that, inasmuch as upon no inferences of fact that could possibly be drawn from the case could the judgment be sustained in law, it must be reversed.

In the Practice of Insolvency there is a case to be noted. In Re Fisher, 19 Law T. Rep. 289, Mr. Commissioner LAW intimated that it was not a matter of course in his court that a creditor's petition should be dismissed because the creditor consented. "He never dismissed a petition and annulled the vesting order simply because a creditor consented. A man who was arrested and did not file a schedule, and after some months remaining in prison chooses to pay one creditor, had no right, simply from that circumstance, to the dismissal of the petition, the filing of which created a trust for the creditors generally."

COUNTY COURT ADVOCATES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe the letters of two correspondents in the last LAW TIMES on this head; the one evidently from an Attorney, the other as clearly from a Barrister. The former writer is troubled at the provision prohibiting an Attorney advocate being employed by another Attorney; the latter, the Barrister, on the same subject, says, in effect, "employ us in all cases, or we shall take advantage of the late Act, and do your work and our own too." Well, 'tis "a good and pleasant thing for brethren to dwell in unity!!"

My object, however, is, to inquire what there is in the late statute, or in the general law, to prevent the client changing his Attorney in the County Court as often as he pleases? What is there in law, common sense, or justice, to prevent Mr. Smith employing my friend Mr. ——, one, &c. of Dale, to enter a plaint, and get up the evidence, and then giving me an express retainer to appear in Court for him.

It must be remembered that under the recent Act Attorneys have an absolute, and not only a permissive, right to appear and be heard; and who, I should like to know, could refuse to hear an Attorney appearing upon his client's express retainer?

Again, may not a client have two Attorneys if he ease? It would be rather hard if he could not. And if he may, why may not one of them get up his case, and the other advocate it?

While certain of the junior Bar (JUNIOR they must be not to perceive their interest more clearly) are constantly waging war against the other branch of the Profession, simply because the public choose to employ the latter, who can wonder that the Attorneys should fortify themselves? If we are to run a race, let us have a clear course—a fair field and no favour.

If the Barrister is to do the work of the Attorney, without certificate, without admission, why then it is but common fairness that Westminster Hall and the Assize Courts be open to each competitor alike.

Mind, Sir, I deprecate this; I am for Barrister and Attorney working, pulling together; but if the Bar will not have this, but, on the contrary, in season and out of season, thrust themselves upon the public, nolens volens, then Dieu et mon droit is my motto.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

IT will be seen that the Lords Justices have affirmed the decision of Vice-Chancellor PARKER in Enthoven v. Cobb, 19 Law T. Rep. 291, and reported here a few weeks ago, to this effect, that where A. and B. having substantially a common cause of action against C. brought several actions, which were pending, and A. took the opinion of counsel as to his claim against C. and gave a copy of the case and opinion to B., and C. filed a bill of discovery against B. they were privileged documents.

The promised series of articles explanatory of the new procedure, both at Common Law and in Equity, has been commenced in these columns. They will be continued until the whole subject has been fully treated, and as orders issue, and decisions interpret the new law, they will be brought in this shape under the notice of the reader, so as to keep him fully and accurately informed of the law as it is.

ROLLS COURT.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

ELLIS and ANOTHER v. ELLIOTT. (a)

The new practice—An examination vivâ voce in the open Court.

This was a claim for a share of a legacy under a will made upwards of thirty years since, payable after the death of Mrs. Ellis's mother, who died about ten years ago, and the defendant, Elliott, was the surviving executor or trustee under that will.

It appeared from the affidavits in support of the claim, that soon after the death of the tenant for life, the claimants wrote letters to the trustee, and also to his solicitor, making inquiries when the money would be divided, and had letters from both parties, promising that they should have notice to attend when the money was divided.

After waiting twelve months, they wrote again, and received an answer that the money had been divided, and that the share of the claimants was paid to the representatives of Mrs. Ellis's brother William, who produced an assignment of it made in 1822; and adding that the deed was executed by a mark for Mrs. Ellis, whereas she signed her name to the notices sent to the trustee.

The defence set up was by affidavit of the attesting witness to the deed, who was still alive, after a lapse of thirty years.

The plaintiffs replied by further affidavits, that the deed was a forgery.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said such a case would usually be sent for an issue, but the small amount of the legacy (being only 100*l*.) would make such a course very undesirable on the score of expense; and as the plaintiffs, by their solicitor, had volunteered a desire to confront the witness, he was willing, and would examine the parties vivâ voce in open court, if the defendant would consent. And Simpson, on the part of the defendant, having at once consented, the cause stood over for that purpose.

On a subsequent day the parties attended for examination.

Witnesses were ordered out of court; and as they were called in, were examined from the floor of the court.

The plaintiff and wife denied the execution of the deed, and stated that they never had any deed presented to them, but that the brother (who was the purchaser by the pretended deed) did once ask the wife to sell her money under the will, but that she peremptorily refused, and never heard anything more about it.

His HONOUR required both the man and wife to write in court their names on a piece of paper, which they did; and his Honour further inquired if there was any writing by the man written some years back; and some writing, ten or twelve years old, was handed up to him, and he said he saw a similarity, though the writing to the deed was of a much larger character. Such similarity, it was explained, was easily accounted for from the circumstance of the purchaser in the deed being indebted to the pretended vendor, who had constantly sent him in bills, and had written letters for payment from which the handwriting might have been copied.

The witnesses were of course subjected to a cross-examination, but in a style much more calm and quiet than is usual in a court of Common Law.

Several other witnesses were examined on the part of the defendant, to contradict a point in the affidavit of the plaintiffs (man and wife), in order to discredit their general testimony.

His HONOUR a few days afterwards gave judgment, and disposed, first, of the discrepancy of the plaintiffs' testimony as to living at Lewes, in which it now appeared they were clearly in error; but as this was not a material point in the case, he would not discredit their testimony to the direct point of the issue. He had made up his mind that Ellis and wife had been personated by some person, who signed the deed before the old witness. Therefore he found for the plaintiff for the legacy, with costs.

(a) This case is reported here because it is the first practical illustration of the new law, which comes into operation at the beginning of next term. Here the examinations were, by consent, taken vivâ voce, according to the practice as it will be in future. It is not placed among the reports, for it decides no question of law, and therefore is only of temporary interest.

WHO IS HE?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The accompanying card and slip of a letter, addressed to a Devonshire paper in October 1849, was this day placed in the hands of a respectable firm of solicitors in this town by one of their clients, to whom they had been sent by the writer, Mr. Daniel Warren, whose name does not appear in my list of conveyancers or practising solicitors; and it may, I think, be fairly concluded that he is one of that class to whom you are in the habit most properly of giving an unenviable notoriety in the columns of the LAW TIMES.

We know nothing of this man here. I presume he has but recently commenced his disreputable career at his head quarters "near the fish market."

Pray make what use of these papers you think proper. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

CAN a person who has been articled in this country be admitted to practise as an attorney (or as an attorney and barrister, if the functions are there united) in Grenada, in the British West Indies, without having been admitted in the Courts at Westminster? And, if not, can a person admitted as an attorney in the latter courts, practise as h in suc Grenada?

I have sought for information on this subject from one or two works on colonial law which we have in the Manchester Law Library, but I can find nothing to satisfy my inquiries, excepting the few remarks contained in Bythewood's Conveyancing by Jarman (1839), p. 187, which only go to shew that in some of the islands the functions of the barrister and attorney are united, and that different qualifications are required in different islands for practising as either. THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

One of the most interesting cases, and of equal practical importance, which has been decided for some time, is that of Bodenham v. Hoskins, 19 Law T. Rep. 294, in which the relationship of a banker with his customers was very fully considered. The facts were briefly these:—A customer opened three accounts with his banker, one of which was called the "Rotherwas' Estate Account," and it was opened by the customer avowedly as receiver of the rents of an estate of that name. The customer drew cheques on that particular account to liquidate a balance due from him on one of his other accounts, called the "Office Account." The customer failed, and the owner of the estate claimed from the bankers the whole of the balance that had been paid to the estate account, including the sum drawn from it by the said cheque, and paid to the private account of the customer. And Vice-Chancellor Kindersley has held, that the bankers are liable to make good the loss. Now, the general rule is, that bankers need not inquire upon what account moneys are paid in or drawn out, and they are bound to honour such cheques as the customer may think fit to draw; but when having express knowledge that the money is not that of the customer, but only held by him in trust for another, and actually being, as it were, earmarked as the property of another, they are bound not to aid him in any malversation of that money. "A person who deals with another," said the Vice-Chancellor, "which other he knows to have in his hands, or under his control, moneys belonging to a third person, cannot deal with the individual holding those moneys for his own private benefit, when the effect of the transaction is, that this person commits a fraud on a third person."

Another banker's case is, Bell v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 292. There A., a railway contractor, wanting money to perform his contract, applied to a bank to allow him to draw, on condition of his giving an order to the company to pay over the moneys which from time to time became payable under the terms of the contract, as the work advanced. Accordingly he wrote a letter, in which he simply directed the company "to pay into the bank to the account of A. such sums as might become due in respect of his contract." The bank sent this letter to the company, requesting that it may be acknowledged. It was so, and the money due was paid to the bank. A. then made a second contract, and the company wrote to the bank, asking if they required the payment of the moneys upon that contract, as they became due, to be made to them, and they replied that they did not. The secretary also observed in his letter, that he supposed all payments, except under Contract 1, might be made as A. might direct, and the bank answered that they might. A. became bankrupt. No notice of the arrangement between A. and the bank was given to the company. It was held, that A.'s order did not amount to an assignment in equity of the sums due to him from the company; nor did the subsequent letter from the company to the bank alter the construction of that order; nor was it an admission by the company that the moneys due under Contract 1 had been irrevocably assigned.

A third banking case is, Heward v. Wheatley, 19 Law T. Rep. 293. A. had been a partner in a banking company. In a suit for the administration of his estate, it was referred to the Master to take accounts. B. a creditor of the company, prayed leave to go in and prove his debt, but the Court refused, as it was not shewn that the liability could not be satisfied by proceedings against the present members of the partnership.

There is one Admiralty case to notice. In Anonymous, 19 Law T. Rep. 304 (the name, we presume, being omitted through an oversight of the reporter), a ship was abandoned, under orders of the master, and the crew were landed by a steamer at Vigo. There they were, by the British Consul, put on board another steamer for England. On the day following they fell in with the abandoned ship. Part of the crew boarded her, and conveyed her to Corunna. The portion of the crew who did so were held to be entitled to remuneration as salvors. The judgment is a lucid and most instructive review of the law of salvage, and we recommend it to the perusal of our readers.

HOUSE OF LORDS APPEALS.

SOME extremely curious and interesting statistics of the appeal business of the House of Lords during the last sixty years have been placed in our hands, and we hasten to lay before the Profession the most remarkable results of those figures. That each of the Chancellors may have his just meed of praise, and that their relative exertions in the despatch of the business may be the more readily seen, the state of the business is shewn under the regime of each of the Chancellors in succession. These tables shew the name of the then Chancellor, the year, the number of appeals and writs of error entered, the number of cases heard, and the number decided :—

		Appeals.	Writs of error.	Total heard.	Decided.
Lord Thurlow	1790	10	4	11	12

The arrears being cleared off, the number of causes diminished. In 1818 there were only twenty appeals and eight writs of error, all of which were heard and decided. In 1820, the Queen's case occurred, and only thirteen appeals and five writs of error were heard. In 1821 and 1822 there was a great increase in the number of appeals presented, there being no less than 147 in the two years. In 1821, 1822, and 1823, the arrears became heavy, and an arrangement was made for Lord GIFFORD to hear appeals. In 1824, there were heard ninety-one appeals and writs of error; and in 1825, also ninety-one, being the greatest number ever heard, except in the year 1831. In those two years there was, by the arrangement with Lord GIFFORD, a virtual separation of the CHANCELLOR'S two duties, as there has been during the last session by the appointment of Lords Justices. But Lord ELDON never had above one Vice-Chancellor; and the Master of the Rolls did not sit above half as much as he has done since Lord ELDON'S time.

It is only common justice towards Lord ELDON, and indeed all Chancellors before the last session, to note the great difference in the judicial force which has been made at successive periods. Till 1813, there was the Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls sitting half the time he now does. From 1813 to 1842, there was one Vice-Chancellor, and the Master of the Rolls sat in the morning; but before 1835 he took no motions. From 1842 there were three Vice-Chancellors. In 1852, there have been added to them two Lords Justices, who can execute all the duties of the Chancellor, except presiding in the House of Lords.

The Bankruptcy Court has relieved the Chancellor, since 1831, very considerably. Taking that into the account, and the Master of the Rolls sitting twice as much as in former times, it may be stated that the judicial force of the Court in 1812 was as 3

From 1832 to 1842 ,, 7
From 1842 to 1852 ,, 11
And in 1852 ,, 13

This estimate proceeds on the assumption that each Judge, Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, and Master of the Rolls is equal to two; that when the Master of the Rolls sat only in the evening, he was equal to one; that the Bankruptcy Court added one; and that the Lords Justices, sitting together, only add two. If they take causes separately, an addition of at least one must be made, and the total force now will be—14.

To these interesting facts and figures we add another, equally significant. It is a list of the causes heard in the House of Lords, and waiting for judgment at the end of the session :—

1833	3	1844	1
1834	3	1845	8
*1835	4	1846	5
1836	1	1847	15
1837	12	1847-8	8
1837-8	19	1849	5
1839	6	*1850	nil.
1840	9	1851	11
1841	7	1852	2

* No Chancellor.

There is probably an error in 1837-8. The judgment not being given in the same session frequently depends on the learned Judges, when they have been called in. Sometimes it arises from the same Lords who heard the cause not being able to attend afterwards.

We leave these facts for the present to the consideration of our readers. We shall probably return to them with a commentary.

BRIBERY.

ALL agree that something must be done to raise a more effective obstacle against bribery at elections.

It had been generally supposed that the change in the law of evidence, which now permits the party to be personally examined, and therefore will subject members petitioned against to be called into the witness-box to give evidence against themselves, would have deterred candidates from resorting to bribery.

Not so, however. During the last election there was as much of it as, perhaps more than, ever before. Many of the cases have obtained a painful notoriety, but it was not less flagrant in other places, although not brought so prominently before the public. We speak from personal experience. We have seen its effects. Thirty-one promises are not broken without a consideration. Three men who go out on Friday with blue ribbons to meet a candidate and accompany him into the town, and go to his committee-room, do not, on the Tuesday following, vote against him, without substantial reasons for conduct so shameless. Everybody knows that they have been bought, and yet it is difficult of proof.

Now why is this? Why does a fact notorious to the whole town escape detection and punishment before a committee of the House of Commons? That is the question, the answer to which will exhibit the real difficulties that impede the prevention of bribery, and the true cure for the evil.

Now, what are they You know your man; you are sure who was the briber, and who the bribed. You put them into the witness-box, not to prove a case against themselves, but against the validity of the election thus obtained. But though the very men are there and the fact is within them, and only wants to be brought out, you cannot extract it.

Why not? Because of the absurd protection which our law throws round witnesses who are not bound to answer questions that might be afterwards used against them in a criminal prosecution. Thus is truth stifled and justice defeated. That is the obstacle to much of justice everywhere; but it is a positive defeat of it in an inquiry as to the bribery committed at an election.

What is the remedy? Nothing more easy and certain. Remove the obstacle. If justice is defeated by the consequences in which truth-telling would involve the witness, do not exclude the truth, but protect him against those consequences. When there is a real desire to learn the truth, this is the course adopted. It is thus that the St. Alban's inquiry was conducted, and thus the corruption of boroughs is to be ferretted out under the new Act designed for application to other boroughs like St. Alban's. But if this be efficient to promote the ends of justice when the object is to trace bribery among a constituency, why should it not be adopted also when the object is to trace the bribery of particular individuals, and discover by whom and on whose account they were bribed. The first and most effective remedy, then, for the discovery, and therefore for the prevention, of bribery, is to protect all witnesses giving evidence against any legal consequences of truth-telling, and then compelling an answer to all questions put to them, even of such as involve admissions of their own guilt.

The second remedy is the punishment of bribery when proved. Pecuniary penalties are worthless; usually the parties are too poor to pay them, and, therefore, they are disregarded. The offence should involve something which men care for more than money,—it should be followed by some infamous punishment appropriate to the nature of the offence. Some are in favour of making it felony, and inflicting hard labour in a gaol; but this would only prevent convictions, for the public mind would not be brought to place bribery in the same category with larceny, or class Major BERESFORD with a pickpocket. The punishment should be appropriate, and then it will be enforced by judges and juries; that appropriate punishment will be disfranchisement for life of the receiver, and permanent incapacity to sit in Parliament, or hold any public office, in the giver of a bribe. Whenever an inquiry is made into the existence of corrupt practices in any borough or county, let the Committee or Commissioners make a report of the names of all the persons proved to have been guilty of bribery; let that report be recorded, and upon that let the disqualification follow as a matter of course, only giving to any person thus reported an opportunity, if he pleases, of appealing to a Court of Law against the decision, by demanding to be prosecuted by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL for the alleged offence; and on that prosecution permitting himself to be examined as a witness, as well as the reproduction of all the evidence against him on which the report was founded. This would sufficiently protect the innocent against possible errors of the Committee or Commission.

And so with all givers of bribes reported. Give them the same power of appeal, and in default, or on failure, let the punishment of perpetual incapacity follow without further proceedings.

The advantages of this plan are manifold. The offence would always suggest the punishment. Courts would not scruple to enforce it, because of its fitness. It would punish only those actually guilty, and not disenfranchise a whole constituency, because some are corrupt. It would gradually weed out the venal, who are only a definite and well-known portion of the electors in any place, and it would be feared by the vilest, for it would set a mark upon them that would expose them to the contempt of their fellows.

We throw out these suggestions of experience for the consideration of those who are really desirous of applying an effective remedy to the increasing crime of bribery at elections.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

AN inaccuracy and an omission in our list of last week have been pointed out to us; and on reference to Dod's Parliamentary Companion, just published, we find the corrections of our correspondents verified. Mr. J. G. PHILLIMORE, Q.C. is member for Leominster, and not for Cheltenham as was stated in our last; and we omitted the name of Mr. FREDERICK LUCAS, member for the county of Meath, an Equity Barrister.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

Where it may be doubtful whether the action is on contract or for tort, or partakes of both, the plea is not to be objectionable on the ground of its treating it as either, if good in substance.

Pleas of payment and set-off, and other pleas capable of being construed distributively, are to be so construed; and if issue be taken thereon, and so much as is sufficient to answer part of the causes of action be found by the jury, the verdict and judgment shall be distributed accordingly.

As to traverses, it is provided that the defendant may either traverse generally such facts as might have been denied by one plea, or separately any material fact, although it might have been included in a general traverse, and in like manner with the plea, on subsequent pleading of either party.

Joinder of issue may be pleaded by either party in answer to the pleas or subsequent pleading of the other party, thus.

"The plaintiff joins issue upon the defendant's first plea," and in like manner for other pleadings; and this form of joinder is to be deemed a denial of the substance of the pleading, and an issue thereon.

By leave, either party may plead and demur at the same time to the same pleading. But the application must be on affidavit of merits of the party or his attorney, and that the matters sought to be pleaded are true in substance and in fact, and that he is advised and believes that objections are good and valid in law. In such case, it is to be in the discretion of the Court or Judge to direct which issue shall be first disposed of.

Several matters may, by leave, be pleaded by either party, but only upon affidavit of merits, that the matters so sought to be pleaded are true in substance and in fact. The costs of any issue, either of law or fact, are to follow the finding upon such issue, and be adjudged to the successful party, whatever the result of the other issues.

A Judge's order to plead several matters is to suffice, without a rule.

Objections* to the pleading of several pleas, on the ground that they are founded on the same ground of answer or defence, are to be heard on the summons to plead several matters.

The following pleas, or any two or more of them, may be pleaded together as of course, without leave :—

1. Denial of any contract or debt alleged in the declaration.
2. Tender as to part.
3. Statute of Limitations.
4. Set-off.
5. Bankruptcy of defendant.
6. Discharge under Insolvent Act.
7. Plene administravit præter.
8. Infancy.
9. Coverture.
10. Payment.
11. Award and satisfaction.
12. Release.
13. Not guilty.
14. Denial that property is the plaintiff's.
15. Leave and licence.
16. Son assault demesne.

Or any other pleas which the Judges of the Superior Courts shall, by rule or order, from time to time, direct.

With these exceptions, if either party plead several matters without leave, judgment may be signed, and shall only be set aside on affidavit of merits.

The signature of counsel to all pleadings is abolished.

One new assignment only is to be pleaded to any number of pleas to the same cause of action, and it is to be consistent with and confirmed by the particulars, if any, delivered in the action, and shall state that the plaintiff proceeds for causes of action different from those which the pleas profess to justify, or for an excess beyond what they justify, or both, and to such new assignment no plea, already pleaded to the declaration, shall be pleaded without leave, except a plea in denial.

The form of a demurrer is to be thus :—

"The defendant, by his attorney, says that the declaration (or pleas, &c.) is bad in substance."

And in the margin the matter of law to be argued must be stated, in default of which judgment may be signed as for want of a plea. The joinder in demurrer is to be in this form :—

"The plaintiff says that the declaration is good in substance."

After amendment of any pleading the other party is to plead to the amended pleading within the time specified in the original notice to plead, or within two days after amendment, whichever shall last expire, unless otherwise ordered; and unless there be such new or amended pleading the original pleading is to stand, and be deemed the answer to the amended pleading.

The statute gives, in a schedule, various short forms of pleading, which are to be sufficient, and may be used with such modifications as may be necessary to meet the facts of the case. But the letter of the forms is not to be observed if the substance be correct.

X. JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.

Where the claim is for a debt or liquidated demand, and there is judgment by default, it is to be final, and no rule to compute will be required. Where it shall appear to the Court or a Judge that the damages to be recovered are matter of calculation, no writ of inquiry shall issue, but the Court may direct the amount to be ascertained by one of the Masters, and the attendance of witnesses and production of documents may be compelled by subpœna as before a jury; and the Master is to indorse upon the order the amount found by him, and deliver it to the plaintiff; and the same proceedings as to taxation of costs, judgment, &c. are to be had thereon as upon the finding of a jury upon a writ of inquiry.

Where plaintiff recovers a sum of money, the judgment may award it to him generally, without distinction whether it was recovered by way of debt or damages.

XI. JUDGMENT OF NONSUIT.

The stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, so far as it relates to judgment in case of nonsuit, is repealed, and, instead of it, where issue is joined, and plaintiff neglects to bring it on to be tried,—in town causes, within the following Term and vacation, and in country causes, where issue joined, in or on the vacation before Hilary or Trinity Term,—and the plaintiff neglects to try at the second assizes following such Term, or where joined in or on the vacation before Easter or Michaelmas Term, and the plaintiff neglects to try at the first assizes after such term, whether notice of trial have been given or not, the defendant may give to plaintiff twenty days' notice to try at the sittings or assizes next after the expiration of the notice, and in default of his doing so, the defendant may suggest it in the record, and sign judgment for his costs. But the Court or a Judge may extend the time for trial upon terms.

XII. NOTICE OF TRIAL AND INQUIRY.

Ten days' notice of trial or inquiry is to be sufficient in all cases, whether in town or country.

Countermand of notice of trial is to be given four days before the time mentioned in the notice of trial, "unless short notice of trial has been given, and then two days before the time mentioned in the notice." This, however, appears to be a mistake in the Act, for the previous section had required ten days' notice of trial in all cases, and thus abolishing short notice.

A rule for costs of the day for not proceeding to trial, pursuant to notice, may be drawn up on affidavit, without motion.

XIII. THE NISI PRIUS RECORD.

The record is not to be sealed or passed, but delivered to the proper officer of the court in which the cause is to be tried, and records of the Superior Courts are to be brought to trial and entered and disposed of in the counties palatine in the same manner as in other counties.

At this convenient point we pause again, the next series of provisions, which relate to juries, being numerous.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

OUR remarks in the last number on the Master in Chancery Abolition Act concluded with some observations on the general rules and orders to be made under sec. 38 by the LORD CHANCELLOR, with the advice and consent of the MASTER of the ROLLS and VICE-CHANCELLORS, or any two of them, for, amongst other things, regulating the mode of procedure before the Judges sitting at chambers, and the practice of the Court generally.

The Act then proceeds to assimilate the practice before the Masters to that before the Judges, for from and after the first day of Michaelmas Term next, the course of practice and proceeding in the Masters' offices, so far as the same may be inconsistent with the rules and regulations to be made by the LORD CHANCELLOR, as before mentioned, are to be abolished, and the Masters, with reference to the proceedings before them, are to adopt all such rules and regulations, and are to conduct the business of their respective offices as nearly as may be in the manner in which similar business is to be conducted by the Judges respectively, save only that the Master, instead of communicating directly with the Judge, is to report shortly the result of his inquiries to the Court. (Sec. 39.) It will be observed that the report which the Master will have to make under this section will, or at any rate ought, to be, very different from the lengthy composition which at present goes by that name. It is to consist merely of the result of his inquiries, without the materials by which he arrives at it.

Next come some very useful causes, giving the judges power to obtain the assistance of certain skilled persons to aid them in the performance of their duties of a particular kind. First, from and after the first day of Michaelmas Term next, the Court, or any Judge thereof, when sitting at chambers, may receive and act upon the opinion of conveyancing Counsel in all cases in which, according to the present practice, the Masters receive such opinion, in the investigation of the title to an estate, with the view to the investment of money in the purchase or on mortgage thereof, or with a view to a sale thereof, or in the settlement of a draft of a conveyance, mortgage, settlement, or other instrument, or otherwise as the LORD CHANCELLOR shall by general order direct. Any party, however, may take an objection to such opinion of counsel, whereupon the point in dispute is to be disposed of by the Court, or by the Judge sitting at chambers, according to the nature of the case. (Sec. 40.) And power is given to the LORD CHANCELLOR to nominate not less than six conveyancing Counsel in actual practice, who shall have practised as such for ten years at least, whose opinion is to be acted upon in the cases before mentioned, and to supply vacancies among them from time to time, and to distribute the business among them as he shall think fit. (Sec. 41.) Under this section the LORD CHANCELLOR has appointed Messrs. BRODIE, COOTE, CHRISTIE, HAYES, JARMAN, and LEWIN, as Conveyancing Counsel. Moreover, the Court, or any Judge thereof, may, in such way as they may think fit, obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, or other scientific persons, the better to enable such Court or Judge to determine any matter at issue in any cause or proceeding, and to act upon the certificate of such person. (Sec. 42.) This provision will, doubtless, be of great practical utility, and although questions will, notwithstanding, arise in which parties may desire to have the opinion of the Court, their number will certainly be less, and will be presented to the Court in such a shape as to be more easily dealt with and disposed of. With regard to the taking of accounts the Chancery Commissioners observe, that when they are taken in the Court of Admiralty, the practice has been to associate one or two merchants with the officer of the court, and that little difficulty has been experienced in taking these accounts, and that in Scotland accounts are referred to professional accountants, though the accountants to whom such references are made are not precisely the same class of persons as accountants in England.

The allowances in respect of fees to such conveyancing Counsel, accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, and other scientific persons, are to be regulated by the Taxing Master of the court, subject to an appeal to the Judge to whose court the cause or matter is attached, whose decision is to be final. (Sec. 43.)

The salaries of the Chief Clerks are to be 1,200*l.*; of the Junior Clerks 250*l.* which may be increased by the LORD CHANCELLOR in certain events to 1,500*l.*; and 300*l.* respectively (sec. 44); and they are to have pensions in case of permanent infirmity (sec. 45). The pensions of the Chief Clerks, and the compensation to Junior Clerks of retiring Masters, is next provided for (secs. 46 and 47); and then the mode of the payment of salaries (sec. 48), and of compensation (sec. 49). Then comes a provision for the reduction of the before-mentioned salaries or retiring pensions, on the acceptance by any of the Masters, or the Chief or Junior Clerks of certain offices (sec. 50). The appropriation of the Masters' offices in Southampton-buildings is next provided for: such part of such offices as is not wanted for the Judges may be appropriated for other purposes connected with the Court of Chancery, or let for chambers; and when the Masters have resigned, died, or have been released, the same may be sold by order of the LORD CHANCELLOR. (Sec. 51.) In connection with this section, we may usefully give a passage from a speech of the LORD CHANCELLOR in the House of Lords, clearly shewing what is his opinion as to the nature of the duties to be performed by the Chief Clerks. After expressing a wish that the Chief Clerks should occupy rooms annexed to the Courts of the Judges, his Lordship adds, —"I make a great point of this. I am most anxious that the new Clerks shall not find their way to Southampton-buildings. I feel satisfied that, at such a distance from the Judges, and from old associations, and from the class of persons they will be likely to meet there, they will act as if they were Masters, and not Clerks; and I am afraid the scheme would never answer." (Hans. Parl. Deb. vol. cxx. col. 801.)

By the next section, power is given to her Majesty to appoint a successor to the Vice-Chancellor Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, who must be or have been a Barrister of fifteen years' standing at the least. (Sec. 52.) The power of such Vice-Chancellor (sec. 53), his officers, and attendants (sec. 54); his salary, and those of his officers and attendants (sec. 55), his retiring pension (sec. 56), and the appointment of court-keeper (sec. 57), are next severally limited and provided for. The appointment of another Vice-Chancellor, as a successor to Sir G. J. TURNER, in case of a vacancy occurring, is very properly provided for, as it would be impossible to carry on the increased and still increasing business of the Court of Chancery with less than the present number of Judges. Whether a greater number will not be requisite, in order to carry out the alterations shortly to be introduced in the practice of the court, is at least probable, notwithstanding the additional powers which have been conferred upon the remaining Masters, for the purpose of winding up proceedings depending before, or which have been referred to them. The Commissioners, in their report, have not recommended any increase, but they very significantly add,—"If experience should prove that the business of the Court cannot be efficiently transacted without an increased number of Judges, we confidently trust that this necessity will be promptly met by the Legislature." (Ch. Rep. 37.) This wish every one acquainted with proceedings in equity will echo—not only because it is unfair to the Judges to thrust upon them more business than they can conscientiously discharge, not only because when we consider the enormous value of the property, the right to which is determined, or the management and administration of which is regulated by the decisions of the Court of Chancery, the attempt to save a few thousands in such a manner is a species of false economy of the worst description; but because the very success of the present plan cannot be expected unless each Judge himself gives up much of his time in seeing each suit efficiently worked out in its different stages; and if he cannot do so, the business must either be done inefficiently, or after great delay, or be delegated to the clerks or other officials of the Court, and thus all the abuses of the Masters' offices, and from the same causes, would be again gradually but surely introduced.

The rights and establishments of the present Masters are to continue until they are released in pursuance of this Act. (Sec. 58.) And nothing in this Act is to affect the rights of the ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL as a Master in ordinary. Nor is he to be called upon or required to do any duties as such Master in ordinary other than such as are now usually performed by him. (Sec. 59.)

The 60th section is a step in the right direction towards remedying what has been justly the subject of great complaint, and often of much hardship and injustice; it is in these words:—"Whereas it has frequently happened that after cases have been fully heard by the LORD CHANCELLOR in the Court of Chancery, and are standing for judgment, the LORD CHANCELLOR has delivered up the great seal without being able by reason of other urgent public business to deliver judgment therein, and much inconvenience and expense to the parties has been thereby occasioned. For remedy thereof be it enacted, that in every such case it shall be lawful for the person who has so delivered up the Great Seal within six weeks after he shall have delivered up the same to give in to the registrar of the said Court, a written judgment thereon, signed by him; and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment, and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if the judgment in pursuance whereof it is drawn up had been given in open Court the day before he shall have so delivered up the great seal."

In reading over this section, it certainly seems strange why the Legislature should have apparently confined the power of the LORD CHANCELLOR to deliver judgment after his resignation of the Great Seal, to those cases where it has not been delivered by "reason of other urgent public business." Again, it is not obligatory upon the LORD CHANCELLOR to deliver judgment, it is merely lawful for him to do so; that is to say, he is at liberty to do so, without it being necessary, as at present, that the consent of all parties, if competent, should be given, in order that such judgment should be valid,—but even then the judgment must, in order to be lawful, be delivered within six weeks. Let us suppose, for instance, a Lord Chancellor resigned the seals from ill health, just previous to the long vacation, several judgments remaining undelivered, their non-delivery not being occasioned by any urgent public business, could he deliver judgment even within six weeks? or suppose he could, if from illness, or from any other cause, he failed to deliver judgment within that period, he would not, unless with the consent of all parties as at present, have any power to deliver judgment.

The evils this section were intended to obviate were glaring, and cried loudly for amendment; to a certain extent, as before observed, this has been done, but it is submitted that it would have been much more effectually done, had the delivery of judgments in all cases heard by a retired Lord Chancellor, before giving up the seals, been made obligatory upon him afterwards: and the time for delivery should not, at any rate in all cases, have been confined to so short a period as six weeks; and all mention of urgent public business, which perhaps may only be held to amount to a superfluous expression illustrative of Parliamentary prolixity, might as well have been altogether omitted.

CAP. XLVIII.

An Act for the Amendment of the Law respecting the Property of Lunatics. (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. 65, s. 28.—Whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the first year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending the Laws relating to Property belonging to Infant Femes Covert, Idiots, Lunatics, and Persons of unsound Mind," a power is given of ordering any land of any lunatic to be sold, or charged and incumbered by way of mortgage, or otherwise disposed of, for the purpose of raising money for the payment of debts, and other purposes therein mentioned, and provision is thereby made as to the surplus moneys; and it is expedient that such powers should be enlarged, and that the several provisions of the said Act relative thereto, and to the application of the money raised, and the quality of the surplus moneys, should be extended accordingly: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Powers and provisions of the recited Act extended to other cases and purposes.—The aforesaid power of selling, or charging and incumbering by way of mortgage, or otherwise disposing of the land of any lunatic, and the aforesaid provisions relating thereto, or to the application and quality of the moneys to be raised, and every of them, is and are hereby extended so as to be applicable to and include any estate or interest of any lunatic in land or stock, in reversion, remainder, or expectancy, and so as to authorise the payment out of the moneys to be raised of any expenditure made or debt incurred after inquisition found, for the maintenance or otherwise for the benefit of the lunatic, and the payment of or provision for the expenses of his future maintenance, and the costs of such sales, charges, and incumbrances, and other dispositions as are hereby or by the said recited Act authorised.

2. Modes in which future maintenance may be charged.—In case of a charge or mortgage being made by order upon an interest in contingency, or in reversion, remainder, or expectancy, for the expenses of future maintenance the order may direct the same to be payable and paid, either contingently, if the interest charged be a contingent one, or upon the happening of the event if the interest be depending on an event which must happen, and either in the gross sum or in annual or other periodical sums, and at such times, in such manner, and either with or without interest, as shall be deemed expedient, and any charge already made which would have been valid if made after this Act shall be and is hereby declared to be valid.

3. By whom jurisdiction to be exercised—The foregoing provisions to be incorporated with the recited Act.—The powers so given by the said Act as aforesaid, and the powers hereinbefore given, may be exercised by and are hereby given to the person or persons for the time being intrusted by virtue of the Queen's Sign Manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, and of unsound mind; and the foregoing provisions shall, as to jurisdiction, and also as to the interpretation of expressions, and in all other respects so far as may be consistent with the meaning of this Act, be deemed to be incorporated with the said Act.

4. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 95—Power to receive dividends of stock in lunatic's name.—And whereas by an Act of Parliament passed in the ninth year of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Regulation of the Care and Treatment of Lunatics," it was enacted, that when any person should have been received or taken charge of as a lunatic upon an order and certificates, or an order and certificate, in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act, or of any Act thereby repealed, and should either have been detained as a lunatic for the twelve months then last past, or should have been the subject of a report by the commissioners in pursuance of the provision therein contained, it should be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct that one of the Masters in Lunacy should, and thereupon one of the said Masters should, personally examine such person, and should take such evidence and call for such information as to such Master should seem necessary to satisfy him whether such person was a lunatic, and should report thereon to the Lord Chancellor, and such report should be filed with the secretary of lunatics; and it should be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make orders for the appointment of a guardian, or otherwise for the protection, care, and management of the person of any person who should by any such report as last aforesaid be found to be a lunatic, and such guardian should have the same powers and authorities as a committee of the person of a lunatic found such by inquisition then had, and also to make orders for the appointment of a receiver, or otherwise for the protection, care, and management of the estate of such lunatic, and such receiver should have the same powers and authorities as a receiver of the estate of a lunatic found such by inquisition then had, and also to make orders for the application of the income of such lunatic, or a sufficient part thereof, for his maintenance and support, and in payment of the costs, charges, and expenses attending the protection, care, and management of the person and estate of such lunatic, and also as to the investment or other application for the purpose of accumulation of the overplus, if any, of such income, for the use of such lunatic, as to the Lord Chancellor should from time to time in each case seem fit. And whereas doubts have arisen whether the last-mentioned Act extends to authorise a receiver appointed as aforesaid to re- dividends on Government or Bank Stock or Annuities standing in the lunatic's name, and it is expedient that these doubts should be removed Be it therefore enacted as follows:—Every receiver of the estate of such lunatic as aforesaid, already appointed, or who may be hereafter appointed under the powers in the said last-recited Act, shall have full power to demand, and to receive and to give effectual receipts for, the dividends due or to become due of any stock belonging to the lunatic.

5. Indemnity to Bank of England, &c.—This Act shall be and is hereby declared to be a full and complete indemnity and discharge to the governor and company of the Bank of England, and all other companies and societies, and their officers and servants, for all acts and things done or permitted to be done pursuant thereto, and such acts and things shall not be questioned or impeached in any Court of Law or Equity to their prejudice or detriment.

6 Receiver may, under order, make repairs, leases, &c.—The person or persons for the time intrusted as aforesaid may, by order upon a petition, direct the receiver to make such repairs and improvements of or upon the land of the lunatic, or to make to the tenant executing the same such allowance in respect thereof by and out of the lunatic's income, and also to make and execute such contracts, agreements, leases, or under-leases of or concerning the same, as may seem expedient for the preservation or increase of the income; and every act done according to such direction as aforesaid shall be valid and binding to all intents and upon all persons whomsoever.

7. Interpretation of words.—In the construction of those provisions of this Act which refer to the secondly-mentioned Act, the words "land," "stock," and "dividends" respectively shall be interpreted as is provided for the like words in the first-mentioned Act.

CAP. XLIX.

An Act to extend the provisions of the several Acts passed for the Conveyance of Sites for Schools. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. L.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

INSOLVENT COURTS.—A return to the House of Lords just printed states that the number of cases heard before the commissioners on circuit in 1841 was 3,832; in 1842, 2,955; in 1843, 2,533; in 1844, 1,715; in 1845, 598; in 1846, 650; and in 1847, 566. After the spring and summer ones in this year the circuits are abolished.

POST-OFFICE STATISTICS.—By the census of 1841, the population of Scotland was found to be 2,600,000, and the population of Ireland 8,175,000. In the census of 1851, Scotland stands at 2,800,000, and Ireland at 6,500,000; thus, while Scotland has gained 200,000 people, Ireland has lost a million and a half. Ireland, however, has maintained its relative position to Scotland both as regards letters and money-orders. In 1841, the number of Scotch letters was 21,234,772; the number of Irish letters being 20,794,297; in 1851, the numbers were respectively 36,512,649 and 35,982,782. As to money-orders, the comparison stands thus:—In 1841, Scotland, 51,526; Ireland, 53,507*l.*; in 1851, Scotland, 389,680*l.*; Ireland, 392,848. Thus, ten years ago, as measured by these tables, two million six hundred thousand Scots were equal to eight millions of Irish; while now two million eight hundred thousand Scots are no more than equal to six millions and a half of Irish. Pat, however, must not begin to boast as yet. One Scot in seven takes out a money-order in the course of the year, but that feat is performed by only one Irishman in sixteen. Moreover, the Irish orders, though more numerous than the Scotch, amounted in money to 653,000*l.* only, while Scotch orders amounted to 709,000*l.*; so that Sawney beats Pat in the magnitude of each transaction.

COST OF PROCURING THE SMITHFIELD MARKET REMOVAL ACT.—From a parliamentary paper just issued, it appears that the cost of procuring the Smithfield Market Removal Act was 3,612*l.* 7s. 9d.; of which sum 1,819*l.* 0s. 1d. were paid to Messrs. Lyon, Barnes, and Ellis, 1,273*l.* 5s. 6d. as fees to counsel, and 579*l.* 14s. 4d. as house fees, short-hand writers, and witnesses.

From a parliamentary return issued on the motion of Mr. Brotherton, it appears that 127 public bills were introduced during the late session. Of these 108 were originated in the Commons, and of course the remainder in the House of Peers. Thirty-eight of the measures introduced in the Commons were lost or withdrawn, and one only of the Lords' bills shared the same fate.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—The following Order in Council appeared in a supplement to the London Gazette of Tuesday:—"At the Court at Osborne-house, Isle of Wight, the 18th day of August, 1852, present, the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.—It is this day ordered by her Majesty in Council, that the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of that part of the United Kingdom called Great Britain, do issue writs for proroguing the parliament, which was appointed to meet on Friday, the 20th day of August instant, to Thursday, the 21st day of October next; and also for proroguing the convocations of the provinces of Canterbury and York, from Saturday, the 21st day of August instant, to Friday, the 22nd day of October next."

We announced some time since that parliament would not meet till November. We believe we can now state that it will assemble about the third week of that month for the despatch of business.—Globe.

THE MAGISTRATE,

THE lieutenancy in counties are now assembling their deputy-lieutenants, and making general arrangements for embodying the Militia Volunteer Force. The staff appointments begin to be filled up, and every Gazette contains the names of gentlemen appointed as deputy-lieutenants; an office which hitherto has been bestowed as a mark of favour and distinction, without any real duty attached to it, but which becomes of some importance in connection with the militia laws. The efficiency of the militia, under whatever system it is embodied, will depend upon its being properly officered. The lieutenant of each county commands the militia, and he has the appointment of all deputy-lieutenants, and of all officers of all grades, from the colonel to the subaltern, subject, however, to the approval of the Crown, and, by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 350, s. 1, subject also to the regulations of one of the Secretaries of State, as to the ages and for securing the appointment of persons as officers who are qualified to discharge their duties; and also as to drill, training, and exercise. Such officers are to rank with those of the regular army, as youngest of their rank. When the militia was last embodied some questions of difficulty arose respecting ranking with the juniors of the line, and it is desirable that the law should be rendered more clear and explicit; for not only discordant sentiments were entertained by the military themselves, but also eminent counsel disagreed upon the subject. When the militia are embodied, her Majesty may put the forces under the command of such general officers as she may appoint; but there is no power, under any of the Militia Acts, given to place the militia under the command of any regular officer of an inferior rank, or indeed any officers (except generals) who are not qualified; on the contrary, the militia forces are to be led by their respective officers. In 1798, the flank companies of the different regiments of the regular and militia forces in a particular district were ordered by the Commander-in-Chief to be formed into battalions, and those mixed bodies were put under the command of field-officers of the regular forces. Several of the militia colonels opposed that step as illegal; and on stating their case to eminent counsel, their advisers were of opinion with them; on the other side, the Commander-in-Chief consulted the Crown lawyers, who are said to have expressed their sentiments in support of his orders; but on the militia colonels declaring that, in case of the punishment of imprisoning any militia men by the direction of the regular field officer, appointed to command the detachment corps, they were determined to bring the question before a court of law, the Commander-in-Chief withdrew the regulars, both officers and men, from those battalions, and thus put an end to the dispute. Notwithstanding that, as well as some subsequent misunderstandings, no alteration or provision to meet such cases was made in the then subsequently passed Act of the 42 Geo. 3, c. 90; and it seems to have escaped notice in the late Act. The lieutenant shall have the command of the militia within the county, which implies that he shall have such command when the militia are not drawn out and embodied for actual service; for then they are to be placed under the command of general officers. Circumstances have arisen where the lieutenant of a county has found himself commanded, as colonel, by an officer of his own appointment; as where the lord-lieutenant of county (the militia of which consisted of more than one regiment) had appointed a colonel to a certain battalion, and afterwards appointed himself colonel of another battalion; the two corps being drawn out and embodied for service, and doing duty in the same garrison, the county lieutenant was commanded by his senior officer, though of his own creation. It has been suggested that the lord-lieutenant should be allowed to appoint himself brigadier-general, with a proviso that such commission should not enable him to command any colonel of the regular forces, yet give him precedency of every militia colonel not being lieutenant of a county.

The qualifications of deputy lieutenant, and officers generally are,—a deputy lieutenant, 200*l.* per annum; a colonel, 1,000*l.* per annum; lieutenant-colonel, 600*l.* per annum; a major, 400*l.* per annum; a captain, 200*l.* per annum; except in the counties of Cumberland, Huntingdon, Monmouth, Westmoreland, Rutland, and in Wales, where the qualification for a deputy lieutenant is 150*l.* per annum; a colonel, 600*l.* per annum; lieutenant-colonel, 400*l.* per annum; a major, 200*l.* per annum; a captain, 150*l.* per annum. In the Isle of Ely the qualification for a deputy lieutenant is 150*l.* per annum; and for a captain 100*l.* per annum. No qualification is now required by statute for any officer below the rank of captain. Being heir apparent of a person of double the above annual income, equally qualifies for each rank. To give such qualification, each shall be seised or possessed either in law or in equity for his own use and benefit, in possession of a freehold, copyhold, or customary estate for life, or for the life of his wife, she having a freehold, copyhold, or customary estate for her life, or for some greater estate, or of an estate for some long term of years, determinable on one or more life or lives, in manors, messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in England, Wales, or Berwick-on-Tweed, or shall be heir apparent of some person who shall in like manner be seised or possessed of a like estate as aforesaid; and by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, s. 4, a clear yearly income arising from any personal estate within the United Kingdom, of or to which, or the yearly income thereof such deputy lieutenant, or officer, is possessed or entitled at law or in equity, for his own use and benefit, in possession for his own life, or for the life of his wife, or for some greater estate or interest, shall be deemed equivalent to an estate in lands of the yearly value of the same amount with such yearly income; and such yearly income from personal estate shall be admitted in whole or in part of any such qualification accordingly; of which real estate required as qualification, one moiety shall be situate or arising within the respective counties, ridings, or places in which the officers shall be appointed to serve. For the Isle of Ely, the moiety is required to be either situate therein or in the county of Cambridge.

In cities and towns that are counties within themselves, and which raise a separate militia, the lieutenant, or in case there should not be one, then the chief magistrate, shall appoint the deputy-lieutenants and the officers; the qualification for a deputy-lieutenant being in real estate 150*l.* a-year, or personal, or real and personal property, to the amount of 3,000*l.*; for a field officer, a real estate of 300*l.* a-year, or 5,000*l.*; and for a captain, a real estate of 150*l.* or 2,500*l.* By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, s. 3, any person holding, or having held the rank of captain, or any higher rank in her Majesty's other forces, or in the forces of the East-India Company, may be appointed a major of militia; and a major in the army, &c. may be appointed a lieutenant-colonel of militia, without any property qualification. Peers, and their heirs apparent, are exempted from the qualification clauses.

The inconvenience arising from confining the qualification, or, at least, one moiety of it, to the county, riding, or place, is partially remedied by a qualification being also permitted in respect of being possessed of personal estate within the United Kingdom; but if officers who derive their income from land, and should be desirous to serve in any particular corps elsewhere, they must resort to the expedient of effecting a sale, or an exchange of property of equal value, with some friend.

No deputy-lieutenant, nor any officer, superior or subaltern, shall be appointed till his qualification shall be delivered to the Clerk of the Peace, who shall transmit a copy to the lieutenant of the county, riding, or place. The Clerk of the Peace must enter the qualifications upon a roll, and cause the names, and rank of officers, together with the names of the officers in whose room they are appointed, to be inserted in the London Gazette; and in the month of January in every year, he is to transmit to the Secretary of State an account of the qualifications so left with him to be laid before Parliament. All deputy-lieutenants and officers of militia shall, at some general quarter sessions, or in one of the Courts of Record at Westminster, take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, within six calendar months after appointment. Persons who shall execute any of the powers of deputy-lieutenants or field officers not being duly qualified, or who have not delivered in their qualifications, shall forfeit 200*l.*; captains to forfeit 100*l.*; one moiety to go to the person who shall sue for the same; proof of the qualification will lie upon the person against whom the action, suit, or information shall be brought.

Form of a specific Description of Qualification for a Commission in the Militia, or Deputy Lieutenant, to be delivered to the Clerk of the Peace prior to the granting of the Commission:—

To the Clerk of the Peace for the county of Wilts, or his deputy.

Pursuant to the directions of the militia laws, I, A. B. esquire, do hereby certify unto you, that I am qualified to accept a commission as captain in the Wiltshire regiment of militia, videlicet, by being possessed in my own right [or in the right of my wife; or, being eldest son and heir apparent of C. D. esquire, who is possessed, &c.: or, by being a younger son of C. D. esquire, who is (or, at the time of his death was) possessed in his own right] of the following manor, messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments (as the case may be), to wit:—

A messuage and tenement, and 200 acres of land in fee (as the case may be) called "The Home Farm," situate in the parish of , in the said county of , of the clear yearly value of 200*l. and upwards*; or (describing several tenements), which said tenements together are of the clear yearly value of 200*l. and upwards*; or, a clear yearly income of 200*l. arising from personal estate within the United Kingdom, and invested and standing in my name* (as the case may be) in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England (describe from what source such income arises).

ARE DISSENTERS LIABLE TO TOLL WHEN TRAVELLING TO THEIR USUAL PLACE OF WORSHIP?—This question, involved in the case of Phillips v. Creese, has been decided by the magistrates at Hereford, in favour of the exemption. Mr. W. James having declined to act, the defendant was fined in the sum of 41s. in order to enable an appeal to be instituted at the ensuing sessions. This is a most important point, and it is most desirable that it should be set at rest by the decision of a competent tribunal. The question is not whether the authority of the head of the Roman Catholic Church is "paramount" to that of the Queen in Council, as it has been very foolishly represented by some parties, but whether the Act of Parliament, in reference to the exemption from tolls on week days, by the use of the words, "services by authority ordered to be celebrated," refers to the "authority" of each Dissenting church, or to such occasions as a fast or general thanksgiving ordered by the Government. If the case is ultimately decided in favour of Mr. Phillips, the exemption will equally apply to all other Dissenters who are "tolerated" by law. The Congregationalist, Methodist, Baptist, or Quaker, will probably, on the same ground, claim exemption when on their way to attend their union meetings, chapel anniversaries, preaching station, quarterly, or district or camp meetings. The question is thus one which will materially affect the income of the turnpike trust, here and elsewhere. — Hereford Times.

ASSAULT BY THE MAYOR OF BLACKBURN. — On Thursday last the grand jury at Liverpool found a true bill against Mr. W. H. Hornby, mayor of Blackburn, for a misdemeanour in striking, on the previous Saturday, Mr. Thomas Dugdale, chairman of the East Lancashire Railway Company, a violent blow on the left cheek. A bench warrant was immediately afterwards granted, calling upon Mr. Hornby to find sureties to keep the peace and to answer any charge that may be preferred by the prosecutor at the next assizes.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

A RAILWAY Act provided, that the purchase-money of vicarage lands should be reinvested on the petition of the vicar and patron, with consent of the ordinary. An order was made for the Master to report on the proposed investment, and this being favourable, a petition was presented by the vicar and patron to confirm the directions. The bishop was held to be entitled to his costs of appearance on this petition. (Ex parte the Vicar, &c. of Creech St. Michael, 19 Law T. Rep. 312.)

A case is reported very fully from the Court of Error, which is one of considerable importance to railway companies. In the Eastern Union Railway Company v. Hart, 19 Law T. Rep. 311, it was held that a company could be sued by a mortgagee upon a covenant implied in the condition for repayment of the money on a day named in the deed, and that such right was not affected by the provisions of the Consolidation Acts. "We are clearly of opinion," said the Court in its judgment, "where a corporation is created for certain purposes, with power to sue and be sued, and to borrow money for the completion of those purposes, and to receive the repayment of such money by an instrument which on its face imports a covenant for repayment, if money be so borrowed and so secured, an action upon promises may be maintained against the corporation on a breach of the covenant."

Another case of no less importance, as defining the powers of companies and of their directors, is that of Macgregor v. The Official Manager of the Dover and Deal Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 316, in which it was held by the Court of Error that an incorporated company cannot apply the corporate property to any purpose not authorised by the Act; therefore, that a contract made by such a company to pay the costs of an application to Parliament for an Act to authorise the making of another railway, projected by other parties, was illegal and void, unless the power to do so was expressly conferred by the Act. Nor is it less a void contract, although in form it is a contract by the chairman that the company shall pay.

WINDING UP.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR, upon appeal, has reversed the decision of Vice Chancellor BRUCE, and determined that clubs are not within the operation of the Winding-up Acts. His Lordship remarked, in his very able judgment:—"I am happy to say that the law does not, as has been erroneously supposed, render any of the members liable to the creditors of the club, except for what they may have individually ordered or agreed to become liable for." It will be observed that the LORD CHANCELLOR, in this case, takes a much more limited, and, as it seems to us, more rational view of the meaning of the term "association" in the Winding-up Acts, than was taken by the House of Lords in Hutton v. Bright. He says:—"The term association must have a limited meaning." "An association may mean a partnership: but to make it a partnership it must be associated for the purpose of trading, and for the making of profits." "It is impossible to say that the word club can come under any of the denominations specified in the Act." (Re The St. James's Club, 19 Law T. Rep. 307.)

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

THE House of Lords continues to supply some interesting and curious cases, and necessarily they are always important ones. Such was Stoddart v. Grant, 19 Law T. Rep. 305. The facts were these:—A illiterate old lady left seven testamentary writings each purporting to be "my will," the third and fourth to be "my last will;" and four of them were in her own handwriting. In the first four documents there were alterations, erasures, and words written on them, and numerous blanks and mis-spelled words. No one of the documents revoked the others, either generally or specially though the first, fifth, and sixth were prepared by the same solicitor, and the sixth referred to the fifth, as an existing will, but to no other. Several legatees had each legacies of different amounts under two or more of the instruments. No residuary legatee was named, except by the first, but the sixth reserved power to do so, which power was never executed. The funds were sufficient to satisfy the legacies given by all the instruments. It was held that all the seven were to be admitted to probate as the will. "I consider the general rule to be," said the LORD CHANCELLOR, in giving the judgment of the House, "that all these documents being found under circumstances which entitle them to consideration, are primâ facie to be regarded as one will. They may be altered, and they may be partially revoked, or they may be inconsistent, without the latter operating as an entire revocation of the former. The circumstances of a partial inconsistency, as it is called,— that is to say, dispositions in two documents, both of which cannot be fulfilled,—is held only to operate as a revocation pro tanto, and only to bear on the particular legacy in which that inconsistency exists."

The LORD CHANCELLOR has confirmed, upon appeal, the judgment of Vice-Chancellor BRUCE, in Walter v. Selfe, 19 Law T. Rep. 308, already noted here, granting an injunction to restrain a person from making a brick-field, and burning bricks in a field adjoining a house and grounds of another, which had been occupied as a private dwelling for several years previously.

His lordship has also confirmed the decision of Lord CRANWORTH, in Kemp v. Sober, 19 Law T. Rep. 308, who had held the keeping of a school for young ladies to be "a calling" within the restrictive words of a covenant in a lease, "that the lessee should not carry on any trade, business, or calling" on the premises in question.

Four cases on the construction of Wills were reported last week, but they turn entirely upon the meaning of the particular words, and decide no point of law capable of being stated apart from the facts of the case itself, and, therefore, we do not attempt to note them in this summary, in which it the design only to direct the reader's attention to the new law decided by the Courts.

In the law of Vendor and Purchaser, we find a case that appears to be of some importance. One of the terms of a contract for the purchase of land by a railway company was, that the title previous to the year 1821 should be taken to be good. A petition was presented, praying a reference to the Master to ascertain if a good title could be made 1821. But the MASTER of the ROLLS refused the order, without some satisfactory evidence of the validity of the title previous to 1824, and he directed the Master to ascertain if it was for the benefit of the parties that the contract should proceed, and, if so, that then he should inquire whether, according to the contract, a good title could be made. The practical result of this case, as it appears to us, is, that even though the contract (and, by consequence, a condition of sale) restricts an inquiry into title, the vendor could not compel the purchaser to accept a bad title. (Ex parte Lowe, 19 Law T. Rep. 310.) Another case, in the same branch of the law, is Abbott v. Sworder, 19 Law T. Rep. 311, where, in a suit for specific performance, occasioned by the misconduct of the purchaser, a reference as to the title was directed, and the purchaser ordered to pay the costs of the reference and the other costs of the suit, although the Master found that a good title was shewn only a few days before the date of his report.

In Sidebottom v. Bostock, 19 Law T. Rep. 316, there was a demise, with liberty to cut a goit out of a river, &c. and from time to time to view, repair, and amend the goit. It was made and covered, but being found too small, it was re-opened and widened. The Court of Error, affirming the judgment of the Court below, has held that the power being only to make a goit, and then to repair it, &c. it was determined by once making a goit, and the widening of it was a trespass.

It is stated that Mr. Fearon, the Attorney-General's Solicitor for Charities, was last week on a visit to William of Wykeham's much-abused foundation, St. Mary's College, Winchester, with, it may be hoped, a view to the better administration of the noble endowments, which cannot be less now than 20,000*l.* a year.

COUNTY COURTS.

COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the LAW TIMES of August 7, you assumed that the words in the new statute, "concerned generally in the action for such party," are restricted to those concerned generally as Attorneys of the parties, but I think the intention of the Act was merely to restrict Attorney advocates, who shortly before the trial received their instructions from some other Attorney in whose establishment they were not generally engaged. It so happens, that I am in a solicitor's office, having entered into an arrangement as regards the profits of my private practice, and being in the receipt of a salary for attending to the business of the office when unoccupied with my own, and nearly all the County Court matters devolve upon me. So situated, immediately I read an outline of the late Act in your columns, it occurred to me that it was not framed, either in intention or terms, so as to oblige me to obtain the client's consent to permit me to appear as his Attorney in each particular action, but that my being "concerned generally in the action" (though not as Attorney of the party), was sufficient guarantee to the Legislature that I had not, at the ninth hour, stepped in for the mere purpose of conducting the cause in Court. About three weeks since I had occasion to make an application to Mr. Fraser, of the Wandsworth County Court, and afterwards I asked him to favour me with his opinion as to the situation in which the Act placed me; and in reply, he very kindly told me that if I appeared before him as an Attorney engaged in the establishment of the plaintiff's or defendant's Attorney, and having had the conduct of the cause, he would not hesitate to hear me, although I might not directly represent either of the parties thereto. There are many in my position who will feel obliged by your influence being bestowed in seeking this construction upon the late Act. I am Sir, yours, &c.

J. FIELD ROBERTS.

2, Bedford-terrace, Clapham-rise, Aug. 9, 1852.

[NOTE.—We have no doubt that our correspondent falls fairly within the limits of admission. Being an Attorney, and conducting the case as such, he is so far the Attorney concerned generally in the action as to be entitled to be heard.—ED. LAW T.]

DEFECT IN COUNTY COURT LAW.—At the Sheriff's Court, Guildhall, on Saturday, Mr. Ashley, a solicitor, applied to his Honour, Mr. Gurney, under the following circumstances.—His client, a Mr. Bett, had obtained a judgment in the Shoreditch County Court for a debt of 50*l.* which, not being paid, execution had issued, and as the defendant resided in the City, the process was sent to the high bailiff of his Honour's court, who, however, sent word to the high bailiff of the Shoreditch Court that he could not execute it, as he had no jurisdiction to distrain beyond 20*l.* His Honour said he could give no relief, for he had no power in the matter. Mr. Ashley said, what was singular in the case was, that his Honour's high bailiff had served the summons and put the machinery in operation at a cost of 7*l.* to his client, knowing that the object could not be carried out, although they had received the fees for doing so. His Honour repeated that he could not interfere.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Two or three points of practice were to be noted last week. Where parties decline to try an action as to matters alleged in a bill, and request the decision of the Court upon a motion, without any assistance from a jury or a Court of Law, they cannot appeal from that decision. (Walter v. Selfe, 19 Law T. Rep. 308.) A motion cannot be heard before the Lord Chancellor without leave of the Court. (Kekewich v. Marker, 19 Law T. Rep. 308.) In Re Reynolds, 19 Law T. Rep. 311, a receiver of the rents of real estate has been appointed upon petition; and in Re ——, 19 Law T. Rep. 311, an allowance out of an infant's estate to her father, who was in great need, was refused.

Query.

A friend of mine has recently purchased a considerable quantity of land in Australia, and is about to emigrate there with his family, consisting principally of sons. As he is desirous of bringing up one of his sons to the profession of the Law, would any reader kindly inform me if, on his being articled in Australia, his son would be obliged to come to England to be admitted, in order to practise in the colony? If such be the case, and should his son prefer remaining in England, would he be allowed to practise here, having served his articles in Australia. The stamp, I presume, would be 120*l*.: is this correct? T. E

Answers to Queries.

ATTORNEYS IN THE COLONIES.

It would seem that neither a person who has been articled, nor an admitted Attorney of the Courts at Westminster can, by virtue of such qualification, be admitted to practise in the Courts at Grenada. It is by rule of Court provided that a person keeping twelve terms at home, or six at home and attending during the sittings here [Grenada], two years (making twelve courts), may practise as Counsel and Attorney, the two characters being blended.—Vide Clarke's Colonial Law, p. 213. Glancing at this long list of books on a single subject, the query at once suggests itself, by what calculations authors write and publishers hazard the cost of printing a law book? There is but one prudent and rational motive for the labour of the one or the speculation of the other—namely, the existence of an hiatus in legal literature; a positive demand for a book upon the subject proposed; a field either vacant or insufficiently supplied. It is in consequence of their forgetting this rule that so many legal authors continually labour in vain, and so many publishers of law books go into the Gazette. Survey the lists of new works as they are announced, and it will be apparent how strangely this rule, which would seem to be one of the most ordinary deductions of common sense, is continually violated, to an extent that would be ludicrous but for the melancholy consequences that result from it to those who fall into the fatal error. You will continually see announcements of new law books upon subjects that are already abundantly written upon, and these pretending to nothing of novelty that offers the most remote chance of their superseding their predecessors. To whom, then, do they appeal? Why is it supposed that the Profession will resign an author with whose book they are familiar for a new book from a strange pen? But if this is not the hope of author and publisher, what is it?

The same error, to a less extent, pervades all literature; and it is remarkably shewn in the history of periodicals; hence the extreme rarity of their success. The enterprise is usually undertaken for the very reason that should have been deemed conclusive against it. A newspaper or a magazine starts, not because there is an unoccupied field, but because some other periodical has already succeeded there, forgetting that the very success of its predecessor ensures its own failure. A new book, or a new periodical, can only prosper by novelty; it must open a new territory for itself; it must offer to the public something which it had not before, but which is adapted to its requirements, which supplies a want; then it will succeed, after a time. Otherwise it will end in great pecuniary loss to the publisher, and greater disappointment to the author.

These reflections were suggested by the pile of books upon our table professing to supply the Lawyers with the Practice of the County Courts. Here already are six, and we have heard of eight or nine more that are in course of composition. Now it is certain that all of these cannot be successful. There are 430 Courts, and if we allow three copies to each Court, which is the largest number of "Practices" that are ever likely to be bought, there is a total of about 1,300 volumes required to supply the Profession. For this there are already six candidates, with others coming. Now it is certain that they will not equally divide the spoil; if they were to do so, all would suffer a grievous loss. Some are already established favourites, as is proved by the number of editions through which they have passed, and which fact constitutes, perhaps, the surest test of the practical value of a law book, because it has thus been attested by those who have tried it and found its usefulness and sufficiency for their requirements. But then, for the reasons above stated, the very success of these elder and approved books is discouragement for others, unless they can offer something altogether superior in quality. But can they reasonably hope to do so? If the whole law and practice are contained in the books already in the hands of the Profession, and stamped with their approval, what probable prospect is there of the Lawyers resigning these established authorities and familiar friends for books that cannot give them more than they already possess, nor put it into a much better shape? Here, for instance, is Mr. Archbold's Law of the County Courts, manifestly popular, for several editions of it have issued, although it is not, in fact, a treatise on the Practice of the County Courts, so much as a collection of the statutes relating to them, with notes and index. Then we have Cox and Lloyd's Practice of the County Courts, of which five editions have been called for; this last one, however, not being a reprint of the whole work, but only of so much of it as was affected by the statutes of last session, with the introduction of all the cases that have been decided upon County Courts law since the issue of the 4th edition, so that it contains the entire of the law and practice as it is at this moment. This volume is both a treatise on the practice and a collection of all the statutes, rules, and forms, so that it effects a double purpose. Mr. Jagoe's work also has enjoyed considerable popularity, and is remarkable for the care with which it was compiled. But the untimely death of the author has probably prevented the issue of a new edition containing the changes of the last two years.

These three were the original occupants of the newly-opened field of the County Courts. They made their first appearance immediately on the establishment of the Courts, and they have kept the ground of which they then took possession, only improving and extending themselves, step by step, as the Courts, of whose practice they treated, were enlarged in jurisdiction, adopting whatever experience proved to be desirable. Then followed, after a long interval, Mr. Columbine, who wrote a book, which, however, was designed and adapted rather for the use of the general public, than of the Profession. Next in order of time was Mr. Pollock, whose work differs from those of his predecessors mainly in abbreviation. He has followed their plans and given no information which they do not give, but he omits much that they have included. Apparently his purpose, as that of his successor, was to make a smaller volume. But this, we think, is a mistake in both. A book of practice cannot be too full and complete. Condense as much as you please a book for the study of the law; a book for the practice of it cannot be too ample. Its whole value consists in the fulness of its information. It should contain every statute in its very words. It should give the substance of every decided case. It should set forth at length every required form. It should be minute, almost to tediousness, in its instructions, because it is designed to guide action, and is usually consulted in the urgency of the moment, when the practitioner has little time for reflection and less for research, often, especially with County Courts practice, amid the noise and hurry of a trial. Hence, labour bestowed on compression is worse than wasted in a book designed for practice, however commendable in a book for reading in the study, where there is ample time for the mind to pause and think, or where search may be made elsewhere for anything wanting in the volume in hand. Mr. Broom also has overlooked this important characteristic of a book of practice. Accustomed to write excellent books for reading, he has followed the same design in a book for reference, and has so much curtailed a work, whose peculiar nature and uses require the fullest treatment, that he completes the whole subject in somewhat less than 300 pages of tolerably large type, so that it is rather a sketch of the Law of the County Courts, written with the usual ability of the author, than a practice, properly so called. It will do well for a reader desirous of obtaining a general knowledge of the County Court system, but the practitioner would probably find it insufficient for his purposes, not only from its brevity, but for another even more serious defect,—its omission of the statutes, for which no treatise, however excellent, is a substitute, and to which the practising Lawyer is compelled to make continual reference, and which, consequently, are a necessary appendage to books that treat of any single branch of the law, for they are the text upon which the essay of the author are but a commentary.

It is not often that six works upon the same limited subject come together under the notice of a legal journal. We have briefly stated the characteristics of each of them. Necessarily they resemble each other in what they do contain, for all deal with precisely the same statutes, rules, and decisions; they differ only in this, that some are established and accepted favourites, some are new aspirants to favour; some treat their subjects largely, others briefly; some aim at fulness, others at condensation. Readers will judge for themselves which of these claims they prefer, and we can assure them that all, according to their several designs, are well executed, and creditable to their authors.

COURT PAPERS.

Proclamation of Outlawry.—On Thursday, at the Sheriffs' Court, Red Lion-square, Mr. Hemp, the principal officer to the Sheriff of Middlesex, proclaimed the following persons as outlaws:—The Rev. J. Prendergast Walsh; E. H. Lane, at two suits; Sir J. Malcolm, Algernon Massingberd, at four suits; William Thos. Thornton, at two suits; O. H. Sumpays, G. A. Laing, Augustus Mayhew, Wm. Wilson, Wm. D. Sheriff, F. Smith, Wm. Burt, Sidney Wm. Alston, F. J. Manning, J. Armine Morris, J. Cruikshank, Walter Lockhart Scott, G. Spiller, F. Angerstein, at two suits; Edward Addison, T. Baddely, Margaret Coleman, G. Chitty, J. D. Hinxman, Augustus Nugent, and Edw. J. Dare.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Vacant Vice-Chancellorship.—The few stragglers of the Chancery Bar still lingering in London are occupying themselves in speculations on the vacancy in the office of a Vice-Chancellor, caused by the death of Sir James Parker. The political right to this valuable and responsible judicial office is, of course, considered to belong to Mr. John Stuart, Q.C. the new member for Bury St. Edmond's, and who is said, in his electioneering expenditure, to have barely exceeded the legal expenses in turning out Mr. Bunbury. Mr. Stuart, however, haughtily refused the offer of the Solicitor-Generalship on the formation of the present Government, and was reported to be highly indignant that he did not receive the Great Seal. The hon. and learned gentleman may not press his claim in the present instance. Certainly his opposition to Chancery Reform and his notorious ultra-Toryism would render his appointment unpopular, however he might reconcile acceptance to himself. Other names were mentioned in the clubs. It was said that Mr. Walpole might not unadvisedly descend from the Home-office and ascend the judicial seat. The right hon. gentleman's practice at the Bar, so recently and gallantly abandoned for the uncertain tenure of political office, was considerable and increasing; and his elevation to the Bench would, doubtless, be comparatively agreeable and popular out of doors and with the Bench and Bar. Lord St. Leonard's is known also to be well disposed to Mr. Swanston, Q.C. whom he regards as the most eminent equity lawyer of the day. Mr. Roundell Palmer would probably have been the choice of the Peelites, but they are hors de combat.—Globe.

NOVEL CASE.—The Scotch courts are likely soon to be engaged in the trial of a somewhat novel case. Mr. Griffin, an English engineer, who has been employed for the last two or three months superintending the laying down of the submarine telegraph between the coast of Wigtonshire and the opposite coast of Ireland, was in the habit of attending the parish church of Stranraer with some of his female friends. Mr. Simpson, the parochial minister, thought, however, that the conduct of this gentleman during the period of divine service was not quite suited to the solemn occasion, and one day, before the service commenced, he referred to the subject, at the same time warning the gentleman that if there was a repetition of this conduct he would consider it his duty to direct the church officers to expel him. Mr. Griffin, as might be expected, was not a little annoyed at this public rebuke, and he has commenced an action against Mr. Simpson in the Court of Session for defamation. The damages are laid at 500*l.*—Dundee Advertiser.

DIXON.—On the 17th inst. the lady of J. Dixon, esq. of Astle-park, of a son.

MARSLAND.—On the 13th inst. at Bolton, the wife of Mr. George Marsland, of a son.

PLUMPTRE.—On the 15th inst. at Dawlish, South Devon, the wife of Charles John Plumptre, esq. barrister-at-law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

BAYLY, Henry Elliott, esq. of her Majesty's 58th regiment, second son of Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Bayly, K.H. of Burly-villa, Lyme Regis, magistrate for the counties of Dorset and Devon, to Thomasine Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Oliver, esq. of the Royal Crescent, Bath, on the 17th inst. at Brighton.

BROTHERTON, James, esq. of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, receiver-general of her Majesty's Inland Revenue, and only son of Joseph Brotherton, esq. M.P. to Mary Hannah, eldest daughter of John Roberts, esq. R.N. of Chesterfield, Derbyshire, on the 17th inst. at the parish church of Chesterfield.

FERRIER, Alexander John, of Lincoln's-inn, barrister-at-law, eldest son of John Turing Ferrier, esq. of Brussels, and eldest grandson of the late Sir Alexander Ferrier, K.G.H. her Majesty's consul at Rotterdam, to Emilia Lillias, fourth daughter of the late Alexander George Milne, esq. of the Court-yard, Eltham, on the 17th inst. at the parish church of Eltham, Kent.

KINNEAR, John Boyd, jun. esq. of Kinnear, Fifeshire, advocate, to Sarah Harriet, only child of the late George Frith, esq. Worksop, Notts, on the 12th inst. at Stockton-upon-Tees.

DEATHS.

BENT, Jeffrey Hart, Chief-Justice of British Guiana, on the 29th of June, at Georgetown, Demerara, aged 71. The deceased held the commission of judge under four sovereigns, his first appointment to the Bench of New South Wales bearing date in 1814. He was subsequently, in succession, Chief-Justice of Grenada, of St. Lucia, first puisne judge of Trinidad, and for the last sixteen years Chief-Justice of British Guiana. He served in the West Indies (with but one leave of absence) for thirty-two years. During the entire of his judicial life he sustained an unblemished reputation as a judge, and held the highest character as a lawyer. So long a career of useful and honourable service, unrewarded by any mark of distinction from the Sovereign, is totally unprecedented.

THE DUKE OF HAMILTON, the premier peer of Scotland, at his mansion in Portman-square. His grace was one of the oldest, if not the very oldest member of the peerage, having been born in the year 1767, and consequently he had attained the patriarchal age of 85. He succeeded his father, who was the ninth duke, in 1819, taking his seat in the House of Lords by two titles—the Duke of Brandon and Baron Dutton.

NORTON, Robert Bruce, Lieutenant 35th Regiment N.I. Bengal Army, third surviving son of the late Sir John David Norton, one of the judges of the Supreme Court at Madras, on the 15th inst. at St. John's-hill, Wandsworth, aged 30.

PARKER, Vice-Chancellor Sir James, on the night of Friday, the 13th inst. at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, aged 49.

WELLBORNE, Elizabeth Anne, on the 11th inst. aged 7, and Henrietta Ada, on the 14th inst. aged 4, the beloved daughters of Charles Wellborne, esq. of Loampit-hill, Lewisham High road, and 17, Duke-street, Southwark, solicitor.

THE LAW TIMES.

THE NEXT STEP.

The Reforms in the procedure of the Common Law Courts which are to come into operation at the beginning of the next legal year, are admitted by all to be but an imperfect remedy for the evils against which they were directed, and are only to be lauded if they are offered as the first step, to be followed by many bolder ones in the same direction. Of themselves they will do the greatest amount of harm to the Profession with the least possible benefit to the public. Accompanied by others they might be the means of securing great advantages both to the Profession and the public. We know now precisely how far change has proceeded, and that the alterations already made have necessitated a multitude of others. The first step is concluded, and we can now take accurate measure of our progress. The question is, for present consideration, what should be the next step, for it is even more important than that which has been already taken.

We have secured something like simplicity and rapidity of pleading. If a demand is not disputed, judgment and execution can be obtained far more quickly and even more cheaply than in the County Courts, certainly with far less trouble. The cause of action in a disputed demand may now be stated briefly, and it will be very difficult for the most ingenious pleader to construct a demurrer for the single purpose of delay or to defeat the claim by raising another issue than its merits. It is a fair question for difference of opinion whether it would be desirable to abolish all forms of pleading and substitute an untechnical statement of the demand and the defence; but all must agree that, assuming a preference for a formal pleading, it would scarcely have been more simplified and shortened than by the new statute it has been. In the vast majority of disputed claims it will be impossible to prevent the issue from being joined and all being ready for trial within a month from the service of the writ. An action in the County Court is not often brought to trial in less time than this. Thus, up to this point, the reformed procedure of the Superior Courts will place them on a par with the County Courts as regards cheapness and simplicity.

Why, then, is there still a doubt whether the Superior Courts will be able to maintain themselves against the rivalry of the County Courts? If they are cheaper, why will they not be preferred? If the procedure is as simple, why should it not be as much approved? Have they not as good Judges? Is not the justice dispensed there as perfect as in the Inferior Courts? The whole Profession and the public also will answer yes. They will say that they prefer the regular Judge of Assize and a formal court, and a choice of Advocates for the trial of their causes. If they be asked why, thus preferring them, they reject them and go rather to the Courts they esteem less, what is their answer? "You tell me of speed and cheapness in your courts; but of what use are these to me: they do not help me to that which is my object—judgment and execution. Of what service to me is it that you can bring your pleadings to an end and be ready for trial in a month, if I must wait during one part of the year for four months, during the other part for eight months before I can go to trial?"

And our clients are right. It is a mockery to boast of hastening the preliminaries to a trial, if you do not hasten the trial itself. Of what use is it to be ready to try, if there be no Court at which to try. The next step, then, must be to provide for more speedy trial, without which the reforms that have been made in pleading are practically worthless.

We have already shewn our readers how easily and effectively this may de done. As it is a rule with us never to point out a mischief unless we are prepared also to shew how it may be remedied, we have not repeated this complaint of the unfrequency of trial, without stating explicity how it may be removed. The plan has been already submitted to the Profession in these columns, but only as part of a larger plan for the reform of the procedure in the Superior Courts of Common Law. Some portions of that plan being now adopted as the law, and the importance of this part having been increased by the greater urgency there is now for it, in order to save the Courts at Westminster from dying of inanition, we repeat it again, lest, amid the other topics that now agitate the Lawyer, the details of this one may have been forgotten.

We propose, therefore, the following plan for securing more speedy trials:—

We propose that the Circuits should be increased to twelve.

That four Assizes in each year should be held in every county.

That the legal year should be thus subdivided—

November and December, a circuit.
January, sittings in banco.
February and March, a circuit.
April, sittings in banco.
May and June, a circuit.
July, sittings in banco.
August and September, a circuit.
October, vacation.

In this we name two months as the period of each circuit, which would allow for any extra time that might be rendered necessary by accidental influx of business; but with the circuits increased in number as we propose, the regular period occupied by the business of each circuit would not usually exceed a month or five weeks, thus giving to the Judges and Counsel a holiday varying from a fortnight to three weeks after each circuit, and a long vacation in the autumn of from six weeks to two months. Three sittings in banco, each of a full month, would amply suffice for the despatch of the business there.

We propose also that one Judge only should go upon each circuit, and we would thus dispose of the fifteen Judges:—

Twelve to be engaged on the twelve circuits.

Two to sit at Nisi Prius for a Metropolitan District Court, to comprise all the district now included in the Central Criminal Court.

One to sit daily in the Bail Court, or some more convenient court in one of the Inns of Court, to hear motions and despatch publicly the business now done privately in chambers.

In order to relieve the Judge of Assize, he should try only the criminals charged with crimes punishable with transportation. The Court of Quarter Sessions to sit simultaneously with the Court of Assize to try the minor offences, thus avoiding the inconvenience of calling juries, &c. from their homes more than four times in a year.

The Judge of Assize to hear appeals from the County Courts, and from Magistrates' Courts.

As soon as possible regulations to be made for holding the Assizes in each county alternately, at four of the principal towns within it.

Such is the plan we have proposed, and which has been approved by the Profession and by not a few of the most eminent of the Law Reformers. We repeat it now because preparations will soon be made for the business of the session of the new Parliament; and as a matter of vital moment to the Superior Courts, it may be hoped that this necessary supplement to the Procedure Act of last session will form a part of the programme.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

An omission in our list of Lawyers in the New Parliament has, by the kindness of a friend, been pointed out to us. The name of Mr. William Eccles, M.P. for Blackburn, should have appeared in the list, that gentleman having been for many years, previous to his entering into the cotton trade, a Solicitor of large practice in that borough. We believe the list is now complete and correct.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

XIV. JURIES AND JURY PROCESS.

All the former jury processes are abolished, and instead of them the precept issued by the Judge of Assize to the Sheriff, shall direct the common jurors to be summoned for the trial of all issues, whether civil or criminal; and thereupon the jurors are to be summoned as at present. A printed panel of the jurors summoned is to be made by the Sheriff seven days before the commission day, and kept in his office for inspection, and a printed copy given to any person at the price of 1s. and such copy is to be annexed to the Nisi Prius Record.

In like manner as to special juries, the Judges are to direct the Sheriff to summon a sufficient number of special jurymen, not exceeding forty-eight in number, to try the special jury causes, and they are to be the persons to try them, subject to the usual right of challenge, and the panel is to be kept, and a printed copy supplied as with the common jury. At the trial, the special jury is to be ballotted for as common juries now are. But power is reserved to the Court or a Judge to order a special jury to be struck as now, if sufficient cause be shewn.

A special jury is to be obtained in country causes thus. The plaintiff is to be entitled to it on giving notice in writing to the defendant, at such time as would be necessary for a notice of trial. The defendant may obtain it by a like notice to the plaintiff, within the time now limited for obtaining a rule for a special jury. But the Court or a Judge may order any case to be tried by a special jury if they think fit.

In London and Middlesex, special jurors are to be nominated and reduced by and before the Under-Sheriff, or Secondary as hitherto, by the Master, upon the application of either party, and the names so struck are to be placed on the panel, and affixed to the Nisi Prius record.

Where notice of special jury appears to be given by a defendant for the purpose of delay, and the venue is in London or Middlesex, the Court or a Judge may order the cause to be tried by a common jury.

Where notice of special jury has been given, either party may, six days before the sittings, or commission day, give notice to the sheriff that the cause is to be tried by a special jury, otherwise no special jury need be summoned or attend, and the cause shall be tried by a common jury, unless otherwise ordered by the Court.

A view may be had by a rule of Court or Judge's order, without a writ as heretofore, and the sheriff is to give to either party the names of the viewers, and return their names to the associate for the purpose of their being called as jurymen at the trial.

The jurors so contained in such panels are to be the jurors to try all causes at the assizes or sittings for which they were summoned. But nothing in the Act is to affect the right of a defendant to take down a cause for trial after default by plaintiff to proceed to trial; and if records are entered for trial both by plaintiff and defendant, the defendant's record shall be treated as standing next in order after the plaintiff's record in the list of causes, and the trial shall take place accordingly.

XV. ADMISSION OF DOCUMENTS.

Either party may call on the others to admit any document; in case of refusal or neglect to admit, the costs of proving are to be paid by the party so refusing, unless at the trial the Judge shall certify that the refusal to admit was reasonable. No costs of proof are to be allowed, unless such notice be given, except in cases where, in the opinion of the Master, the omission to give the notice is a saving of expense. An affidavit of the Attorney in the cause, or of his clerk, of the signature to any admissions made in pursuance of notice, is to be sufficient evidence of such admissions, as also of the notice itself, and of the time and place of service thereof.

XVI. EXECUTION.

On a cause tried out of Term, the successful party is to be entitled to issue execution within fourteen days, unless the Judge who tries the cause, or some other Judge, or the Court shall order it earlier or later. A writ of execution may issue at once into any county, and be directed to and executed by the sheriff of any county, whether county palatine or not; and in counties palatine writs of every description are to be directed and issued to the sheriffs, and returned by them in the same manner as with the sheriffs of other counties.

It is expressly provided that in executions the poundage-fees and expenses of the execution may be levied over and above the sum recovered.

A writ of execution will remain in force for one year, but it may be renewed, at any time before its expiration, for another year, and so on from time to time, by seal of the Master of the Court out of which it issued, or by giving written notice of renewal to the sheriff, signed by the party, or his Attorney, and bearing the like seal of the Court; and such a writ is to be entitled to priority, according to the time of the original delivery thereof, and its production, with the seal, shall be sufficient evidence of its renewal.

The sheriff or gaoler may discharge a prisoner on written order under the hand of the Attorney in the cause, unless the party for whom the Attorney professes to act shall have given written notice to the contrary to such sheriff or gaoler. But such discharge is not to operate in satisfaction of the debt, unless made by the authority of the creditor. But it is expressly provided that nothing in the Act shall justify an Attorney in giving such order for discharge without the consent of his client.

Where a party is already in prison, it is not to be necessary to sue out a writ of habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum, but he may be so charged by a Judge's order, made upon affidavit that judgment has been signed, and is not satisfied, and the service of such order on the keeper of the prison is to have the effect of a detainer.

XVII. REVIVAL OF JUDGMENTS, &c.

Execution may issue without a revival of the judgment, during the lives of the parties, or of those of them during whose lives execution may at present issue within a year and a day without sci. fa. and within six years from the recovery of the judgment.

Where it becomes necessary to revive a judgment, the party may either sue out a writ of revivor, or apply for leave to enter a suggestion on the rolls to that effect, such leave to be granted by the Court or a Judge, upon a rule to shew cause or a summons, or as the Court or Judge may direct, and on such application, such suggestion may be allowed to be entered, and execution to issue thereon; and if it does not manifestly so appear, the rule is to be discharged or summons dismissed, with or without costs, with liberty for the party making the application to proceed by writ of revivor or action on the judgment.

The writ of revivor is to be directed to the party called on to shew cause why execution should not issue, and after reciting the reason why it has become necessary, it is to call on the party to appear within eight days after service to shew cause why execution should not issue, and it is to give notice that, in default of appearance, the party issuing the writ may proceed to execution. And this writ may be served in any county, or proceeded on either in Term or Vacation, in the same manner as a writ of summons; the venue may be laid in any county, and the pleadings, proceedings, and costs are to be the same as on other actions.

Writs of scire facias are to be acted, directed, and proceeded upon in the same manner.

Notice in writing to the plaintiff, his attorney, or agent, is to be sufficient appearance to a writ of revivor. This writ is to be allowed without any rule or order to revive a judgment, less than ten years old; if more than ten years old, it is not to be allowed without a rule of Court or a Judge's order; and if more than fifteen, not without a rule to shew use.

At this point we pause again, that the lesson of the week may not be too long for the reader to learn and digest.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

Having, in the last number (p. 171) completed the sketch of, and the remarks upon, that part of the New Chancery Practice which is introduced by the Master in Chancery Abolition Act, we may now proceed to the examination of "The Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery" (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), which is to commence and take effect from and after the 1st November next. It commences with some novel, but it is believed some very useful, provisions, viz. after the commencement of the Act, the practice of engrossing on parchment bills of complaint or claims, and filing the same, is to be discontinued, and the Clerks of Records and writs are to file, in lieu thereof, a printed bill of complaint or claim (sec. 1); and the writ of subpœna, to appear to and answer a bill, and the writ of summons upon a claim are respectively abolished (sec. 2), and the defendant is to be served with a printed bill of complaint or claim in the mode and according to the practice now adopted with reference to such writs respectively, the same being endorsed in the mode set out in the schedule, by which an appearance within eight days is required, and being also stamped by one of the Clerks of Records and Writs, indicating the date of the filing thereof (sec. 3), and the filing and service of a printed bill or claim, is to have the same effect as the filing of a bill or claim, and the service of the writ of subpœna or writ of summons respectively, and is to entitle the plaintiff in such suit to such remedies for default of appearance, and otherwise, as he is now entitled to in case of the proper service of a subpœna, to appear to and answer a bill of complaint or of a writ of summons on a claim. (Sec. 4.) The service of a printed copy of a bill or claim is to be effected in the same manner as the service of a writ of subpœna to appear to and answer a bill is now effected, save only that it is not to be necessary to produce the original bill or claim, which will be on the files of the court; and the Court is to be at liberty to direct substituted service of such printed bill or claim, in such manner and in such cases as it shall think fit. (Sec. 5.) However, notwithstanding the before-mentioned provisions, a written copy of any bill may be received and filed by the Clerk of Records and Writs, and being stamped and endorsed as before mentioned, its service is to have the same effect as the service of a printed copy, upon the personal undertaking of the plaintiff or his solicitor to file a printed copy of such bill within fourteen days, in the following cases, viz.:—

Any bill praying a writ of injunction;
Or a writ of ne exeat regno;
Or where filed for the purpose either solely or among other things of making an infant a ward of the Court. (Sec. 6.)

The plaintiff, upon application being made to him, is bound to deliver to the defendant or his solicitor such number of printed copies of his bill or claim as he shall have occasion for at a rate to be prescribed by any General Order of the Lord Chancellor. (Sec. 7.)

The provisions before mentioned with respect to filing, serving, and delivering printed copies of any bill or claim, are upon the amendment of any bill, or claim, to extend and be applicable as far as may be thereto; and where, according to the present practice, an amendment of a bill or claim may be made without a new engrossment thereof, or under such circumstances as the Lord Chancellor may prescribe by General Order, a bill or claim may be wholly or partially amended by written alterations in a printed bill or claim. (Sec. 8.)

Next come some not very usual, though perhaps not unconstitutional powers, conferred upon the Lord Chancellor alone, enabling him in effect to repeal so much of preceding part of this Act of Parliament which relates to the printing of bills and claims, or otherwise, and to restore the old practice. We give it verbatim:—

"It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make any order or orders directing that the provisions hereinbefore contained as to printing or otherwise shall be discontinued or suspended until further order, and to direct that all or any of the present practice as to the filing of bills and claims, and the issuing and service of subpœnas and writs of summons may be revived and come into operation as if this Act had not passed." (Sec. 9.)

This power of, in effect, repealing the first eight sections of the Act, is, it seems, conferred upon the Lord Chancellor alone, without the advice or assistance of any of the other Equity Judges (three of whom at the time of the passing of the Act were members of the Chancery Commission) being requisite; for it will be observed, on looking at the 66th section of the Act, it is only the expression "general order of the Lord Chancellor" is to mean "general order of the Lord Chancellor with such advice and assistance as aforesaid." And what is still more strange, there is a strict provision in the 64th section of the Act, that "all general rules and orders of the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid," are to be immediately laid before Parliament, if then sitting, or within five days after the next meeting thereof, and the resolution of either of the Houses of Parliament, made within thirty-six days after such rules and orders have been laid before them, may determine that either the whole or part thereof ought not to continue in force. But with regard to the order or orders to be made by the Lord Chancellor alone, there appears to be no such provision. This may be the result of a mere oversight in drawing the Act of Parliament; if it is not, and although, after due deliberation, Parliament has enacted that certain important alterations recommended by the Commission should be made in the procedure in Chancery, it was intended that a power of revocation (if we may borrow the expression) should be reserved, not for the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, or subject to be rescinded by a resolution of either House, but for the Lord Chancellor alone, without the advice or assistance of the other Chancery Judges, not subject to be rescinded by an order of either House, and unless re-enacted by "further order" of the Lord Chancellor, only again to be introduced by Act of Parliament. If this be the intention of Parliament, greater powers to deal with its deliberate enactments have been conferred upon an individual Judge, the highest though he may be in the realm, than one would have imagined accordant with the practice, or consistent with the dignity, of the Legislature.

With regard to the first eight sections of the Act, the printing of the bill will, it is believed, in most cases be more economical than making copies according to the present practice; and it will render it much easier to the Judge and Counsel to get up the case, and by the service of the printed copy upon the defendant, he will at once know what is sought from him, of which he is not informed under the present practice, and cannot know until he has appeared, and taken an office copy of the bill, the cost of which, with the fees, is often very great, and has often been used by a disreputable plaintiff, extending the bill to an enormous length, for the most oppressive purposes. The plan introduced by the Legislature (if acted upon) will put a stop to this most effectually.

Next come some very useful provisions, which will, in all probability, do away with claims, as the same end may, it seems, under the following sections, be obtained at as little expense by a bill in the new form, while certain objections which are applicable to claims as to the mode of taking evidence upon points of conflict, can, in all cases where such points arise, be readily obviated. That is to say, all the advantages of cheapness and despatch now to be gained by claims can, it is conceived, be attained, by a concise bill filed without interrogatories, on which a decree may be obtained on affidavits; while, if necessary, interrogatories may be filed after the bill, and evidence gone into, in the same manner as at present.

Now the provisions are as follows:—Every bill filed after the commencement of this Act is to contain merely a concise narrative of facts, on which the plaintiff relies, divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, with a prayer for specific and general relief, but it is not to contain any interrogatories for the examination of the defendant. (Sec. 10.) It may here be remarked, that in all cases where a suit is stopped at once, either by a plea, demurrer, or compromise, the insertion of interrogatories in the bill is a needless expense, as is also the case when the facts are not disputed.

In order to guard against any person's name being used in any suit without his knowledge, either as next friend of an infant, married woman, or other party, or as relator in any information, such person is to sign a written authority to the solicitor, to be filed with the bill, information, or claim. (Sec. 11.)

The plaintiff, within a time to be limited in a general order of the Lord Chancellor, may, in any suit commenced by bill, if he require an answer, file in the Record Office interrogatories for the examination of a defendant, a copy of which, or of such of them as he shall require any defendant to answer, are to be delivered to him or to his solicitor within the time so to be limited, or within such further time as the Court shall think fit to direct; otherwise the defendant will not be called upon to put in an answer. (Sec. 12.)

The defendant in a suit commenced by bill, whether any answer is or is not required, may, without leave of the Court, put in a plea, answer, or demurrer, within the time now allowed for demurring alone, or within a time to be fixed by general order of the Lord Chancellor; after that time he must obtain leave of the Court, which, if granted, suspends the plaintiff's right to move, under the 15th section of the Act, for a decree or decretal order. (Sec. 13.)

The answer, as at present, may contain, not only the answer to the interrogatories, but also the defence, and is to be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, each paragraph containing, as nearly as may be, a separate and distinct statement and allegation. (Sec. 14.)

The plaintiff in any suit commenced by bill may, after the time allowed for answering (but before replication), move upon notice (to be prescribed by a general order) for such decree or decretal order as he may think himself entitled to; and affidavits may be filed both by the plaintiff and defendant, to be used on the hearing of the motion; and if the motion is made after answer, it is for the purposes of the motion to be treated as an affidavit. (Sec. 15.) The Court may either grant or refuse this motion for a decree or decretal order, or make an order for the further prosecution of the suit, as the circumstances of the case may require, and also as to costs. (Sec. 16.)

Much expense and delay will also be put an end to by the next section, whereby the practice of excepting to bills, answers, and other proceedings for impertinence, is abolished; and the Court is at liberty to direct the costs occasioned by any impertinent matter introduced into any proceeding to be paid by the party introducing the same, upon application to the Court for that purpose. (Sec. 17.)

Power is given to the Court, upon the application of the plaintiff by bill or claim, and in the former case, although the defendant's answer may not have been required, or he may not have been interrogated as to documents, to make an order for the production by any defendant, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit, as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents when produced in such manner as shall appear just. (Sec. 18.)

By the next section, discovery may often be obtained by a defendant without the necessity of resorting to a cross bill. For the defendant may, in any suit commenced by bill or claim, but in the former case, if he is required to answer, not until he has put in a full answer, and without filing a cross bill of discovery, file interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiff, to be delivered to the plaintiff or his solicitor, to which is to be prefixed a concise statement of the subjects on which discovery is sought, and the plaintiff must answer the interrogatories in the same way as if it had been contained in a cross bill filed against him. The practice of the Court with reference to excepting to answers for insufficiency, or for scandal, is to extend and be applicable to answers put in to such interrogatories; but in determining the materiality or relevancy of any such answer, or of any exception thereto, the Court is to have regard, in suits commenced by bill, to the statements contained in the original bill and in the answer which may be put in thereto by the defendant, exhibiting such interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiff, and in any affidavits which may have been filed, either in support thereof or in opposition thereto. It is however, provided that a defendant, if he shall think fit so to do, may exhibit a cross bill of discovery against the plaintiff, instead of filing interrogatories for his examination. (Sec. 19.)

Moreover, the Court may, on the application of any defendant, in any suit commenced by bill or claim, but in the case of a bill where an answer is required, not until a full and sufficient answer has been put in, unless the Court make an order to the contrary, make an order for production by the plaintiff, on oath, of such documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit, as the Court shall think right. And the Court may deal with such documents when produced in such manner as shall appear just. (Sec. 20.)

THE LEGISLATOR.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, the 20th, having been the day on which the writs for the assembling of a new Parliament were made returnable, the House of Lords was opened shortly before two o'clock, for the purpose of proroguing Parliament, by royal commission, until Thursday, the 21st of October next, in conformity with the command of the Queen in Council, the official notice of which was published in an extra Gazette to Tuesday's Gazette.

The Duke of Northumberland and Lord Howard de Walden, who were the only peers present, entered the House a few minutes before two o'clock; and Mr. Shaw Lefevre, the Deputy Clerk of Parliament, took his place at the table before the business commenced.

At two o'clock precisely, the Lord Chancellor entered the house, and standing before the throne, said,—My lords, her Majesty has been pleased, under her writ, sent under the great seal, to prorogue Parliament until Thursday, the 21st of October next.

Mr. Pulman, Yeoman Usher of the Black Rod, having gone for the Commons, he shortly appeared at the bar, accompanied by Mr. Ley, the assistant clerk of the House of Commons, attended by several other officers of that House, when

Mr. Shaw Lefevre read her Majesty's writ.

The Lord Chancellor then bowed; and Mr. Ley and the other officers, who represented the Commons, withdrew; and the proceeding, which did not occupy five minutes, terminated.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

The Census of Ireland.—A portion of the census returns of Ireland, shewing the area, population, and number of houses, by townlands and electoral divisions, in the county of Wexford, has been printed, by command of her Majesty. It appears by the poor-law valuation of Ireland, made in 1851, that the unions in the county were valued at 330,537*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*; but by the government valuation of the county, made by Mr. Griffiths in 1847, the value was stated to be 390,177*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* The area of the county contains 573,199 acres. The population, according to the census of 1841, was 202,033—viz. 97,918 males and 104,115 females. The population, by the last census (1851), was 179,793—viz. males 86,770, females 93,020. The decrease of population, therefore, in the ten years, amounts to 22,243. The total number of inhabited houses in the county, in 1841, was 33,507; of uninhabited, 1,108; and building, 102. The total number of inhabited houses, in 1851, was 29,479; of uninhabited, 1,776; and building, 50. The result of the return, therefore, shews a decrease of population of 22,243; of inhabited houses, 3,828; and of houses building, 52. The only increase shewn by the return is in the number of uninhabited houses, which presents an increase, in 1851, of 668, as compared with 1841.

The Patent Law Amendment Act.—This Act, which received the royal assent on the 1st instant, "for Amending the Law for granting Patents for Inventions," contains fifty-seven clauses, and a schedule of forms. It will take effect from the 1st of October next. The Lord Chancellor and others are constituted Commissioners of Patents for Inventions, three of whom may act, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls being one. The commissioners are to use a seal, and to frame rules and regulations, which are to be laid before Parliament. The Treasury is to provide offices for the purposes of the Act, and officers may be appointed. Every petition and declaration is to be compared with the provisional specification. "Every application for letters patent made under this Act shall be referred by the commissioners, according to such regulations as they shall think fit, to one of the law officers." No letters patent are to be issued after three months from the date of the warrant—they are to be valid, when issued under the Great Seal, for the whole of the United Kingdom. A register is to be kept of all letters. The fees and stamp-duties to be paid are set forth in the schedule annexed to the Act.

INDIA IN THE NEW PARLIAMENT.—There are still five directors of the East-India Company who have seats in the House of Commons: Mr. Masterman, Sir James Hogg, Mr. R. D. Mangles, and Mr. M. T. Smith. Mr. Plowden has lately lost his seat for Newport, but General Caulfeild has been returned for Abingdon. In addition to those members, not officially connected with the Indian Government, who are conversant with Eastern politics, such as Sir James Matheson, who served in the last Parliament, Mr. Macaulay, son of the celebrated Zachary Macaulay, the Indian lawgiver, has been returned for Edinburgh. All the old members connected with the India-House are Liberals or Free-traders.—Globe.

THE MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.—Parliament, says the Observer, will not be called together for "despatch of business" before Thursday, the 11th of November, when it will be assembled for a short session before Christmas, of four or five weeks, unless something important and unforeseen shall occur in the mean time, and will then be adjourned for the Christmas holidays.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

THE MILITIA.

So many questions are addressed to us respecting the militia, that we think it well to give a place in our columns to the following official intimations and regulations, which have recently been issued under authority:—

Duty of, and pay and allowances to be granted to, the officers and non-commissioned officers of the militia in England and Wales, when detached from head quarters upon the service of raising and enrolling volunteers.

1. It will be the duty of the adjutant to superintend the enlistment and enrolment of the volunteers, and to take charge of the payment of the bounties, and other expenses to be incurred upon such enrolment.

2. For this duty he will be allowed, while absent rom head quarters, his full training pay of 8s. 6d. a day, with an addition of 4s. 6d. for performing this extra duty.

3. He will be entitled to an allowance also of 5s. a day to cover the expense of living at an inn.

4. He will be allowed 2s. a day for the forage of a horse; or if forage be not drawn, he may be paid the actual expense of travelling by railway; or when not so proceeding, an allowance of 9d. a mile.

5. He will be required to give the security of a guarantee society policy of 500*l.* for a regiment of eight companies and upwards; of 300*l.* for a regiment of less than eight companies; and of 200*l.* for a regiment of less than four companies.

6. The surgeon of the regiment will accompany the adjutant for the purpose of examining the volunteers at particular places and on particular days, to be appointed by the commanding officer, and will be then allowed a daily pay of 11s. 4d. with an allowance of 5s. a day to cover the expense of living at an inn, and 2s. a day for forage for a horse; or, if the forage allowance be not drawn, the actual expense of travelling by railway; or when not so proceeding, receive an allowance of 9d. a mile.

7. Non-commissioned officers and drummers when absent from head quarters upon this duty will be allowed the full training pay, viz.:

	Per diem.
Sergeant-Major	2s. 0½d.
Sergeant	1s. 6½d.
Drummer	1s. 1d.
And beer-money, each, at	0s. 1d.

8. Marching-money for each non-commissioned officer and drummer, at 1s. 1d. a-day (which includes the allowance to the innkeeper for the hot meal), will be allowed for each day's march, and ½d. a day while detained in billet more than one day.

9. A sergeant, selected to assist the adjutant in paying the bounty and keeping the accounts of bounty and expenses incurred, will be allowed the pay of paymaster-sergeant, viz. 2s. 0½d.

W. BERESFORD.

War-office, 16th August, 1852.

The subjoined regulations for the militia have been made by the Secretary-at-War, in pursuance of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50:—

1. The age of the volunteers, as an ordinary rule, is to be from age eighteen to thirty-five.

2. Volunteers above thirty-five years of age, on being certified by a military or militia medical officer to be fit for duty for five years, and recommended by the adjutant of the regiment to the Secretary-at-War, may be enrolled after his approval.

3. Men who have been discharged from the army after three years' service with good character may be accepted up to the age of forty-five.

4. Any discharged soldier above that age can only be accepted with the sanction of the Secretary-at-War.

5. Volunteers of 5 feet 4 inches and upwards may be accepted.

6. Should eligible volunteers of 5 feet 3 inches offer, they may be accepted, with the sanction of the Secretary-at-War.

7. Volunteers must, at the time of their engagement, be resident in the county in the militia of which they engage to serve.

8. Every volunteer must be examined before being enrolled by a militia, or by a military medical officer; or, in the event of no such medical officer being available, by two private medical practitioners. If it be impossible to obtain the certificate of two private medical practitioners, that of one may be accepted.

9. The allowance for medical examination of each volunteer, by one or two private medical practitioners, will be 2s. 6d. for each volunteer. Instructions for this purpose will be furnished to the medical officer by the War-office.

10. Volunteers must be attested upon the form prescribed, and will then be enrolled. The attestation will be preserved at the head-quarters of the regiment, and the names and descriptions of the men enrolled must be sent half-monthly by the adjutant to the clerk of general meetings for the county.

11. Every volunteer is to receive the sum of 10s. as a bounty on being enrolled, and 10s. at the termination of the first training, if his conduct has been good; and after that time he is to be paid at the rate of 2s. a month during his term of service, until he shall have received by way of bounty, allowances, and periodical payment, the full sum of 6*l.* This payment will be made either monthly, quarterly, or otherwise, as may, according to circumstances, be hereafter ordered by the Secretary-at-War.

12. Commanding officers of militia may, if they think fit so to do, advance, after the second training, the amount of the next ensuing six months' instalments to those men who have conducted themselves creditably during the period of their training, on their departure home.

13. Men who are appointed sergeants or enlisted as drummers on the permanent staff will only be allowed a bounty of 15s. on enrolment, and will be required to take the oath prescribed in section 3 of the 51 Geo. 3, c. 118.

They need not have been residents in the county. Drummers may be accepted at sixteen years of age, and under 5 feet 3 inches.

14. Volunteers who, after enrolment, desire to change their place of residence, may be permitted to do so upon notifying their wish to the adjutant of the regiment in which they are enrolled; and on receiving the sanction of the Secretary-at-War, may, by a certificate from the commanding officer and adjutant, be transferred for the remainder of their service to the militia regiment of the county in which they purpose to reside.

15. Representations having been made to the Secretary-at-War from various quarters by the colonels or commanding officers of militia, with respect to the method of paying the bounty, this additional regulation is issued to permit the colonel of militia to authorise the adjutant either to pay the bounty or allowance as prescribed above by the 11th and 12th regulations, or, if they prefer it, in the following manner, with the annexed conditions in either case, viz. 10s. on enrolment; 1*l.* 1s. during the first period of training; and 1*l.* 1s. during each successive annual training. The periodical payment and allowances are to be made on condition that the necessaries furnished to the militia-man by Government, and which he is permitted to take away with him, are at all times in serviceable order, his allowances being subject to a deduction for repairing and replacing them. W. BERESFORD.

MEDICAL CERTIFICATES.

On Enlistment.

I have examined the above-named volunteer, and find that he has no rupture or ulcer adhering to the bone, and has the full power of motion of the joints and limbs. He is well formed, and has no scrofulous affection of the glands, or inveterate cutaneous eruptions, and he is free from any trace of corporal punishment, and not marked as a deserter with the letter D. His respiration is easy, and his lu[ngs] appear to be sound. He has the perfect use of [his] eyes and ears. His general appearance is healthy, and he possesses strength sufficient to enable him to undergo the fatigue to which soldiers are liable. I consider him fit for service in the militia. He has the following particular marks or scars: ———

THE TRUCK ACT.—The report of the commissioner appointed under the provisions of the Act to inquire into its operation, and into the state of the population in the mining districts, for the year 1852, has been issued. The report commences by tracing the results effected by the "Anti-Truck Associations," and then proceeds to examine and report upon three points suggested last autumn by Sir George Grey:—"1. Whether the evil still existing is one of magnitude. 2. Whether it appears that the defects in the law, and not the unwillingness of the parties affected by it to enforce the law, are the cause of the evil. 3. Whether any amendments could be made in the law with the prospect of a beneficial result." The first question is considered in three points of view. First, with reference to workmen. The report, after alluding to numerous cases brought under the commissioner's notice, states:—"If there can be no doubt that the evil of the truck system is one of magnitude to those who are subject to it, as little can there be of the very considerable number of the working classes who are exposed to it in various degrees of rigour." Second, with reference to the retail tradesman:—"The diversion of so large a portion of the profits of retail trade from those whose proper business it is to the hands of large capitalists is considered a great grievance by the very large class of persons affected by it." Third, with reference to the masters who pay in money, it is stated that in times of bad trade they are undersold by the truck-paying masters, who by this violation of the law gain an extra advantage of from ten to fifteen per cent. on a large proportion of their capital. In answer to the second question, it is said that there is no backwarding on the part of the tradespeople and the money-paying masters, and that the workmen do not acquiesce in the system unless under the pressure of circumstances, in event of not getting work elsewhere, and being able to move to obtain it; and that the money-paying masters can always command the best men. On the third point the commissioner is of opinion that such amendments can be made, and proceeds at considerable length to explain the proposed amendments in detail. In conclusion, the report notices the proposition made to extend the principle of the education clauses to the mining districts, but recommends that, "instead of the Amended Factory Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 15), the Print-works Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 29) affords a precedent more applicable to the circumstances of the mining districts. And, accordingly, if the [illegible] to the following, namely:—That all boys at work in the collieries and iron mines, between the ages of ten and fourteen, shall be compelled to go to school for 'thirty days, or 150 hours, in every six months' (in the words of the Print-works Act), or a little more than an average of one school-day, or five hours and a half per week, it would be acceptable in all the principal mining districts, and would be followed by results of much value."

(a) If the volunteer has served as above, he is to state the particulars of his former service and the cause of his discharge, and is to produce the certificate of his discharge if he has it with him.

IMPORTANT RAILWAY COMPENSATION CASE.—On Tuesday a special jury, summoned by the sheriff of Staffordshire to assess the compensation to be paid to Messrs. Sparrow, pursuant to the recent decision of the Lords Justices of Appeal, in reference to the intended passing of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway through Messrs. Sparrow's iron and tin-plate manufactory, in Horsleyfields, Wolverhampton, met at the Assembly-rooms, Queen-st. Mr. Serjeant Channell, of the Home Circuit, appeared as assessor for the sheriff. Sir Alexander Cockburn and Mr. Bovill had been specially retained by Messrs. Sparrow; and the Attorney-General (Sir Frederick Thesiger) and Mr. Phipson had also been specially brought down by the company. After the jury had waited a considerable time, it became reported in the room that the respective counsel and parties in the case were discussing the terms of a proposed compromise at the Swan Hotel, and at the expiration of two hours and a half, Mr. Bovill and Mr. Phipson, the two junior counsel, came into court and made the announcement to the learned assessor and the jury that the case had been settled satisfactorily to both parties, at the same time apologising for having detained them so long. We understand that the respective parties met their counsel on Monday afternoon, and having viewed the manufactory in question, long conferences took place until a late hour at night, and were again resumed on Tuesday morning, with the result above stated. It was ultimately arranged, we understand, that Messrs. Sparrow should exonerate the company from the purchase of the whole manufactory, and that as compensation for the line being carried through it the company should pay 10,000*l.* to Messrs. Sparrow. This arrangement, however, was accompanied with several other terms of a comprehensive nature satisfactory to both parties, the details of which would not be of any public interest.—Birmingham Journal.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

ANOTHER interesting case on the liability of railway companies for the loss of a passenger's luggage came before the Court of Ex. by appeal from a County Court, in Shepherd v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 324. In that case the plaintiff, a passenger by an excursion-train, placed a box, a carpet-bag, and some parcels, each containing a quantity of ivory handles, intended for use by the plaintiff in his trade, in the receptacles of a carriage usually appropriated to luggage, each package bearing the plaintiff's name and address. No notice was given to the company of the nature of the goods conveyed as luggage, nor was any opportunity afforded the company of discovering, without special search, that the packages contained anything other than ordinary luggage. A collision of trains took place, after which the plaintiff removed to another train, leaving his luggage in the damaged carriages, having received assurance from one of the servants of the company that the luggage would be "all right." A great part of the luggage was lost. Under these circumstances, the questions arose—first, whether the company were liable for the loss of articles of merchandise carried as luggage, without insurance or notice of contents; secondly, whether the plaintiff and his wife, who travelled with him, were entitled to carry between them 112 lbs. weight of luggage. In the course of the argument PARKE, B. threw out, obiter, a remark, the substance of which forms the basis of the judgment:—"Here the company say, 'We will take you and your luggage,' but there is no special contract; they do not undertake to carry merchandise, unless properly declared and paid for. If you do not give them notice, they cannot know the nature of the contents of the packages, and the risk they incur in carrying them. In this case there was false colour, whether intentionally or not does not signify, since it had the effect of preventing inquiry, and did not give the defendants full opportunity of knowing the contents." The Court held that the company were not liable, reversing the decision of the Judge of the County Court. In the judgment, PARKE, B. defines what is "luggage," and what articles might perhaps be admitted as coming within that term. He said, "In this case, there being no special contract, the defendants were only bound to convey the plaintiff and his 'luggage,' and under that term may be comprised his clothing and everything required for his personal convenience; and perhaps even a small present, had he had such with him, or a book to read on the journey, might also be included in that term; but they were certainly not bound to carry merchandise and materials intended for trade and to be sold at a profit. If this plaintiff had exposed these goods, and the defendants had known, and had full notice of what they were carrying, they would have been responsible; but they were not bound to carry merchandise, articles wholly disconnected with personal luggage." Upon the second point, as to which we are surprised there could have been any doubt, the Court held that the rule permitting every passenger by a third-class Parliamentary train to carry with him 56lbs. weight of luggage, empowers a husband and wife travelling together to take between them double that quantity. Of course, where special contracts are entered into respecting luggage and merchandise between passengers and railway companies, questions varying with the peculiar circumstances of each case will from time to time arise; but we think the law as to the liability of railway companies, as common carriers, in the matter of passengers' luggage, may now be regarded as settled with tolerable clearness and certainty. Three leading cases, first reported in this journal, may be referred to on this question with profit. The first is the case of Richards v. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, 13 Law T. Rep. 139, C.P. where the duty safely to deliver luggage, as well as safely to carry and convey, is laid down. The two others are Goodman v. The Great Western Railway Company (reported the week before last), 19 Law T. Rep. 296; and the present case; the first of which settles the law as to the effect of bye-laws, giving notice of non-responsibility where luggage is not declared and insured, and the last that of carrying goods as luggage, which properly do not come within the meaning of that term.

WINDING UP.

THE only case under the Winding-up Acts reported since our last notice is a case before the MASTER of the ROLLS—Ex parte Lake, re The Northern Coal Mining Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 323. In that case an order was made for winding up the affairs of a coal mining company, and a call of 10*l.* per share was made on all the shareholders. A claim for the amount due on the call was carried in and proved in a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased shareholder, and subsequently a balance order was issued charging L. as administrator of the estate simply with the amount of the calls and the interest thereon. This order was discharged on the ground that it was made personally against L. as administrator, and because interest was chargeable thereon. On motion to vary or discharge the order discharging the Master's order, the Court held that the Master's order must remain discharged, but the order discharging it must be varied so as to allow the official manager to prove for the calls in the suit for administration against the assets without prejudice to any claim for interest to be made in that suit. It is to be regretted that a most important question raised incidentally in this case, whether calls made under the Winding-up Acts are to be considered judgment debts under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, was not decided. The reason for avoiding the question given by the MASTER of the ROLLS was, that the application was not made to him in the administration-suit, and his decision, if he should make one in the case, would not be final, as the parties might open the question again in the administration-suit. As the point is one of some interest and importance, and it is desirable it should be speedily settled, we hope it will be raised in the administration-suit.

IMPORTANT DECISION: LIABILITY OF PARTNERS.—In the County Court (Liverpool), recently, Mr. Pollock delivered a judgment, with respect to partnership liability, of great importance. An action had been brought by a creditor of the late firm of Messrs. Doran and Wilson, of this town, against Mr. Wilson alone for 32*l.* 15s. 10d. due by the firm to the plaintiff, Mr. Hume. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had brought an action on a bill of exchange for 252*l.* 6s. 8d. against Doran and Wilson, and it was contended that the present claim was included in the former action. This, however, proved not to be the fact. The second ground of defence, which was the most important, was that, in the month of September last, Mr. Doran made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and the plaintiff came in under the assignment, which purported to be not only for the benefit of the separate creditors of Doran, but also of the creditors of Doran and Wilson; and the several creditors, including the plaintiff, executed the deed and received the composition, entering into a covenant not to sue Mr. Doran for any of the debts of the firm. Mr. Wilson had not assigned over. An action was brought by the plaintiff to recover the debt from him. The learned judge quoted the case of Hutton v. Eyre, in which it was held that, although a release to one portion was generally a release to all, yet a covenant not to sue one of several partners will not operate as a release to the others. The verdict must, therefore, be for the plaintiff. In answer to a remark by Mr. Hime, the learned judge said he was desirous that the matter should have been put in a train for the consideration of the Superior Court, but he could not see how it could be done.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

A CURIOUS case of spoliation of a will, in which the Court visited the party who tore up the will with costs of an issue required by him by way of punishment, is reported in the Rolls Court. (Middleton v. Middleton, 19 Law T. Rep. 323.) The decision is thus stated:—"Where the heir-at-law, shortly after the death of the testator, tore the will in pieces, but the paper-writing was afterwards restored and proved, and in a suit the heir required an issue devisavit vel non, the Court, upon the validity of the will being established, ordered that the costs of the issue should be paid by the heir in consequence of his misconduct in tearing the will." A case under the Trustee Act of 1850, is Re Mais, 19 Law T. Rep. 324. It was therein held that the sections 22 and 32 of the Trustee Act, 1850, do not give the Court power to remove a trustee merely because he is out of the jurisdiction, and to appoint another in his stead. Many important points upon the construction of a will, the doctrine of cypres, the questions of remoteness, void devise, life estate, issue, shifting clause, and recovery by tenant for life, were raised and considered in Moneypenny v. Dering, 19 Law T. Rep. 321, which came before the LORD CHANCELLOR, on appeal from a judgment of the Vice-Chancellor WIGRAM. The length of the statements, and complexity of the points, unfit them for review here; it is therefore only necessary to direct attention to them as useful for perusal.

CHARGES FOR DRAWING MORTGAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will some of your readers be so obliging as to inform me upon the following?

It is customary here, in the north, in all conveyances, mortgages, &c. to charge 1*l.* per skin for drawing, and 10s. per skin for engrossing, and nothing for fair copy. Is not every attorney entitled to 2s. per folio (including drawing fair copy and engrossing), and what is the authority for making such charge? I am, Sir, yours, &c. W

MORTGAGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will you allow me to put an imaginary case on the subject of your suggestion as to mortgages?

Suppose A. and B. to be in league together; A. mortgages to B. an imaginary estate, or an estate worth some 500*l.*; the mortgage is made for 1,000*l.*; the deed is registered, and twenty certificates of 50*l.* each are issued. B. parts with the certificates in the market, and in course of time they fall due,—what happens then? Is B. in any way liable, unless fraud could be clearly proved?

I submit there is this difference between these certificates and bills and notes,—that whereas no one would take either a bill or note, unless perfectly satisfied of the responsibility of the borrower, in this case they would see nothing more than a certificate for 50*l.* without knowing either the responsibility of the party or the value of the property.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Can any of your readers help me to find or refer me to a case reported in your paper some time ago upon the following point?

An attorney acting for a person wanting a loan, applies to another attorney, who agrees to lend it. The mortgagor afterwards declines to complete the business when he has put the lender to much expense. In the case I allude to the lending attorney sued the mortgagor, and it was held that he should have sued in his client's name.

THE INCUMBERED ESTATES' COMMISSION.—The Evening Post furnishes the following accurate return of the sales in the Incumbered Estates Court, from the opening of the commission until the 9th inst. when further sales in Dublin were suspended until after the summer vacation:—

"The number of estates sold was 777, in 4,083 lots.

Private sales	1,002,280	12	8½
Total	£7,353,736	2	8½

This amount far exceeds the general calculations of the value of the property which has changed hands under the operation of a commission intended by its promoters to lay the groundwork of great social and agrarian improvement in Ireland. As might, indeed, have been expected on the introduction of so decided a change in the laws regulating the sale and transfer of landed property, the commission, at the outset, had been decried by ignorant or interested clamour; but gradually, as its advantages were understood, and people had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the integrity, strict impartiality, and efficiency of the commissioners and their officers, the public of all classes placed the most implicit confidence in the Court; and it is now regarded as a model tribunal, calculated to confer inestimable benefits upon the country."

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

IF the County Court Amendment Acts have deprived the Bar of business in the matter of "Entering Suggestions," and some other forms, they have compensated for the loss by increasing the facilities for appeals; and thus, as our columns have shewn, have given rise to many very interesting and important cases, throwing light not only on the law and practice of the County Courts, but illustrating the general principles and effect of the common and statute law. One of these cases, Shepherd v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 324, is reviewed in the present number, under the head "Joint-Stock Companies' Law Journal," and therefore needs no further notice here.

NEW SCALE OF COSTS.

THE following are the five County Court Judges appointed by the LORD CHANCELLOR, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to Attorneys in the County Courts, to be allowed as between attorney and client, and as between party and party:—

JAMES MANNING, Queen's Ancient Serjeant.

JOHN HERBERT KOE, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

WILLIAM WALKER, } Barristers-at-Law.
WILLIAM TURNER, }

Secretary, Mr. HENRY NICHOLL, of the Treasury.

ADVOCACY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I addressed you last week respecting advocacy in the County Courts; but if I had merely quoted a portion of the Act, interposing a few words in parenthesis, I should I think have conveyed my meaning more clearly to you. The Act runs:—"That it shall be lawful for the party to the suit or other proceeding, or for an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, being an attorney (not the attorney, as it should read if 'attorney' were to be taken in immediate conjunction with 'for such party') acting generally in the action (conducted or carried on) for such party; but not an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney to address the Court," &c. In the last number of your paper Mr. Gibson asks what there is in this Act to prevent the client employing one attorney to enter the plaint and get up the evidence, and then by special retainer to engage another attorney to appear in court for him. Now it seems to me that no judge who wishes to enforce either the letter or spirit of those words already quoted, which require that the attorney who appears in court for the client shall be the one concerned "generally in the action," will hear an attorney advocate who is expressly engaged as such, even though he may hold the client's express retainer for that purpose; and the judges will pay but an indifferent compliment to the Act itself, if they allow such palpable evasions of it as Mr. Gibson suggests.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE PROFESSION AND THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The letter which appeared in the LAW TIMES of August 7, signed "Nisi Prius," is evidently written with the intention of promoting a good understanding between Barristers and Attorneys, with regard to conducting the business of the new County Courts; but it seems to me to be written from a locality (the Temple) and by an individual above such minor matters, and consequently destitute of any practical acquaintance with the subject; and with your leave I will point out one or two portions which seem to be very much open to observation.

If I am not mistaken, the general object of the writer is to procure the assimilation of the business of the new County Courts to the course of practice pursued in the Courts of Quarter Sessions that is, for the Attorney to conduct the matter up to the time of appearing in court, and then hand a brief to the Barrister. But then it must be borne in mind, that in the Courts of Quarter Sessions (at least in all that I know of) there is a regular scale of fees, which never varies to any considerable extent, whatever may be the nature of the case. The allowance, as a general rule, is considered a fair remuneration both to the Counsel and Attorney, and finally, are paid out of the public purse; but I am afraid, unfortunately, this will afford no comparison with the general run of cases in the new County Courts, where the majority of the debts are below 10*l.* and where not only are the costs not paid by the public, but the losing party has to pay both sides; and though as between Barristers and Attorneys they may be well satisfied with the existing regulations in the Court of Quarter Sessions, yet when a third party is brought in, namely, a private client, who has to pay out of his own pocket, that makes a wonderful difference in the matter.

One argument used by "Nisi Prius" is, that the habitual attendance of a "Bar" would prevent irregularities and improprieties which are apt to arise in courts free from such salutary control. Well, but the County Court judge is situated very differently to the Judge in Westminster Hall, because the former is a bird ever on the wing, continually traversing his circuit; and if the "Bar," who are to correct him, are to keep in his wake, I should like to know in what school they are to be trained, to confer the necessary qualifications for keeping him up to the mark; because, for my part, I can see no other teacher, under such circumstances, than the County Court judge himself, or, in other words, the very individual with respect to whom they are supposed to have the task of keeping in order.

There is another fallacy into which "Nisi Prius" has unwittingly fallen, and that is, in assuming that there is business enough in every court to maintain a "Junior Bar." Why, Sir, how many dozens of places are there in which County Courts are held where the business of the court would not even maintain a solitary Attorney—let alone a Junior Bar, with a host of Attorneys to employ them? Sometimes, indeed, it may be, that in the courts alluded to there is a case requiring the attendance of a couple of attorneys, but very often this occurs only twice or thrice in the course of a year; and what is to become of a "Bar" in such places, I should like to know?

I could mention towns containing from 30,000 to 100,000 inhabitants, where courts are held once a fortnight, but where a Barrister is not called in as much as once a year—and for this simple reason, that the cases are not of that importance to require such assistance.

For my part, I should be very glad to see the suggestions brought into usage, but I know they are entirely out of the question, because the business to be done is quite insufficient to allow it.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—A case, which in the Court below attracted much attention, and which involves an important principle, was lately decided in the House of Lords. (Dimes v. The Company of Proprietors of the Grand Junction Canal and Others, 19 Law T. Rep. 317.) In that case a public company, established for constructing a canal, was incorporated, and they bought some land for the purpose of making the canal; a person claiming adversely an interest in such land recovered the property by ejectment. The corporation then filed a bill against the claimant, and to have their title confirmed. The Lord Chancellor (COTTENHAM) had an interest as a shareholder in the company to the amount of several thousand pounds, which was unknown to the defendant, and his Lordship granted the injunction and the relief sought. The question arose upon these facts, whether this was a case in which the order and decree of the Lord Chancellor were void, on account of his interest, and of his having decided in his own cause. It was held by the House of Lords that the order for the injunction and the decree were voidable, on account of the interest the Lord Chancellor had in the suit, and the order and decree were, upon appeal, reversed. It was, furthermore, held, that the signature of the Lord Chancellor to authorise a decree or order to be enrolled is discretionary and ministerial only; and any disqualification in the Lord Chancellor as judge in the cause, on the ground of interest, cannot prevail; and, therefore, that such signature for such enrolment is neither void nor voidable. Another important point arising out of these proceedings was also settled in the same case. It was held that the Vice-Chancellor of England is not the mere deputy of the Lord Chancellor, and all orders and decrees pronounced by him are obligatory, and not affected by any disqualification of the Lord Chancellor; consequently such orders and decrees were neither void nor voidable. The terse and clear language of Lord Campbell, C.J. in giving his opinion to the House of Lords on the first and most material question, that of disqualification of the Lord Chancellor, will well repay perusal, and justifies an extract here.

"With respect to the point upon which the learned judges were consulted, I must say that I entirely concur in the advice which they have given to your lordships. No human being can suppose for an instant that my Lord Cottenham could be in the remotest degree influenced by the infinitesimally small interest that he had in this concern, nor if his interest had been ever so great; but, my lords, it is of the last importance that that maxim should be held sacred, that no man is to be a judge in his own cause; and that is not to be confined to a cause in which he is a party, but a cause in which he has an interest. Since I have had the honour to be Chief Justice of the Court of Q.B. we have again and again set aside proceedings in inferior tribunals, because an individual who had an interest in a cause took a part in the decision. And it will have a most salutary influence when it is known that this high Court of last resort, in a case in which the Lord Chancellor of England had an interest, considered that his decree was not according to law, and must be set aside. This will be a lesson to all those in the inferior tribunals to take care that in their decrees they may not be influenced by their personal interest, and to avoid the appearance of doing what is wrong."

A point worthy of note as to production of documents arose in Gough v. Offley, 19 Law T. Rep. 324. That was a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased mortgagee, and it was therein held that the executors may be compelled to produce the mortgage-deeds admitted by their answer to be in their possession, although the mortgagors are not parties to the suit, and although such production might be attended with loss to the estate of their testator.

THE COMMON LAW BAR.

Before the commencement of Michaelmas Term next, nearly a hundred barristers, hitherto enjoying a moderate share of practice, will have been completely removed from the opportunity of competition with their forensic brethren. We allude to the judges of the County Courts throughout England and Wales, who, up to the present moment, have not been disqualified, through their judicial position, from active practice at the Bar. Under the Act, however, just passed, regulating the practice of County Courts, it is no longer competent for any judge of those courts to act as a barrister or special pleader, or to be concerned, either directly or indirectly, as a conveyancer, solicitor, attorney, or notary. Many of the judges of the County Courts have long ago voluntarily retired from practice at the Bar, while not a few have still continued in the strife. The recent changes in the profession—chiefly arising from the extension of the powers of those tribunals—are known to have reduced, in numerous cases, incomes of from 2,000*l.* to 2,500*l.* per annum to less than 1,000*l.* per annum; and many gentlemen of considerable professional name have in consequence become not only ambitious of the position of County Court Judge, but have even been thoroughly reconciled to the rule which debars them for ever from practice at the Bar. Notwithstanding the immense number of the members of the Bar, amounting to about 2,000, the average number of practising barristers, or barristers laying themselves out for practice, at the Common Law Bar, for the last ten years, has been about 300, upwards of five-sixths of whom are located within the precincts of the Temple. Granting that only one-half the number of County Court Judges have continued till the present moment in active practice, and supposing that, on an average, they did not earn each more than 200*l.* per annum, some slight benefit must necessarily arise from the recent change to those who have hitherto been obliged to compete with them. Of the 300, at least 150 never behold the face of attorney or client, or only on occasions "few and far between," so that in reality there are only about 150 who actually enjoy practice. Of this number of 150, there are about eighty whose only earnings are derived from the defence of prisoners, either on circuit or at provincial sessions, or at the Central Criminal Court, and not from their skill in the law of Nisi Prius, or law proper, as displayed in the Nisi Prius Courts on circuit, or in the Courts of Westminster Hall; forty, again, may be said to possess practice embracing both the defence of prisoners and cases at Nisi Prius; and this number, added to the previous eighty, makes 120 who are in the enjoyment of very small practices, averaging from 100*l.* to 600*l.* per annum. The great prizes of the Profession, arising from the great bulk of business of the most profitable kind, fall into the hands of about twenty men and these are the names daily seen in the newspaper law reports. Of these twenty, again, only about ten or twelve are in leading, that is, first-rate practice; while the remaining eight or ten are only second raters. Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Sir Frederick Thesiger, and Sir Alexander Cockburn, may be regarded as the most prominent of the former; but it would be invidious to mention any other name on the number as entitled to greater prominence than their fellows.—Morning Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ARTICLED CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In many of the provincial towns in this kingdom, where there are but a few studious articled clerks, great difficulty is experienced by them in the study of their profession, in not having the means of discussion, which are afforded by debating societies in larger towns, upon difficult passages in text-books, and moot points which may arise in the course of study. In order to remedy this, I propose that the articled clerks in various parts of the kingdom, similarly situated, should unite and form themselves into a society for mutual correspondence, the results of which should be published in a small pamphlet for the benefit of the whole community, quarterly or otherwise, as may hereafter be determined upon, in which essays on various branches of the law might be written by the various members, which would be found both instructive and amusing, and would prove beneficial by causing the writer to make every search upon the branch of the law upon which he might choose to fix.

To carry this plan into effect, I propose that a fund should be raised by subscription, or otherwise, out of which the necessary expenses of publishing might be paid.

If this could be carried out, a great benefit would be derived, besides which, it would in a great measure be the means of doing away with that coolness of feeling which now exists in the Profession, and be the means of forming a friendly feeling amongst the law students by bringing them into collision with each other and by the mutual intercourse which would be thereby kept up. Hoping this plan will meet with the approbation of some of your readers, I am, Sir, yours, &c.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I admit the propriety of your suggestions relating to the prevention of bribery at elections by compelling direct evidence from all witnesses to the questions put; but this is far from meeting the general question, and only applies where petitions are actually presented. The most crying evil is that of the innkeepers, which affects every contested election, whether appealed against or not, for it is a notorious fact that this class of persons are numerous enough in every borough to turn the scale in the elections. Speaking from experience, the innkeepers will not promise their votes until nearly the day of election, and not then without having had considerable sums of money spent at their houses by the candidates or their friends: this amounts indirectly to a purchase of such votes, and has a most demoralising tendency to bribery, which can only be effectively remedied by disfranchising every retailer or licensed vendor of liquors. By doing this, intemperate meetings by the voters at the inns would be avoided, and the great part of Bribery cases, which mostly arise from suggestions made at such associations, would be cured. I have had much experience in these matters, and have witnessed the effect on the innkeepers and their immediate friends [illegible] ure from an influx of musicians, staff-men, &c. &c. within the week immediately preceding the day of election, wherein the candidates are almost compelled to rival each other to carry the votes of these parties and their friends. All this, and the expense attendant thereon, can be remedied by the above hint being carried into execution in getting rid of innkeepers, musicians, and staff-men. I am, Sir, yours, &c. A. P.

COURT PAPERS.

City of London Registration.—Mr. T. Y. M'Christie, the Revising Barrister, has given notice that he will commence his registration this year of voters for members to serve in Parliament for the city of London on Thursday, the 16th of next month.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

Medical Jurisprudence. By Alfred S. Taylor, M.D. Fourth Edition. London: Churchill.

Dr. Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence is an authority in all our courts. It is the best book on the subject of which it treats, and it is not only approved by the legal world, but it is held in high esteem among medical men, who are best able to appreciate its scientific worth. This fourth edition has been considerably enlarged by the introduction of many cases of importance and some modern discoveries; so that it exhibits a complete sketch of the present state of knowledge in this branch of science. We need not commend it to our readers, for it has already commended itself. It bears upon its title-page the stamp of public approval.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Metropolitan Law Association.—A second number of the circular, issued by the committee of this association, has been forwarded to us by the secretary. It is devoted to the alterations which have been effected in the law during the past session. First, with reference to equity reform, the Master in Chancery Abolition Act is taken into consideration. After discussing the principal amendments, the committee state that they have still some fear that the wholly insufficient number of judges provided for bringing the new practice into operation may cause some confusion in the business of the court, and that thus the practice may become discredited before it has had a fair trial. The committee, therefore, felt it to be their duty to call the attention of both Houses of Parliament to this, and prepared a clause for increasing the number of judges, which was moved in committee in the House of Commons, but rejected. A report has reached the committee that it is the intention of the judges to do but little at chambers, but they cannot believe that the judges will pursue a course which would inevitably defeat the intention of the Legislature and the fair expectation of the public. The committee then proceed to examine the improvements of the Jurisdiction of Equity Act, by which they consider very numerous and important changes have been made. Several of the most important alterations in these Acts have been contained in various memorials and petitions presented by the committee, whose unceasing efforts have been directed to the reform of the procedure in equity. The Enfranchisement of Copyholds Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31; the Wills Amendment Act, 1852; the Extension of the Trustees Act; the Act to facilitate and arrange Proceedings in the County Courts, and the Common Law Procedure Act are examined and discussed. We may probably make some extracts from this useful circular on a future occasion.

The High Sheriff of Lancashire.—We are requested to publish the following statement respecting the conduct of the High Sheriff of Lancashire, lately commented on by Lord Campbell in his address to the grand jury at Liverpool. It seems that an expression used by his lordship has been misinterpreted, and has rendered the present explanation necessary. Mr. Weld Blundell, as sheriff, appointed no chaplain. He intimated to the incumbents of the church where the judges are accustomed to attend service, that the usual service would be required for her Majesty's judges, and he requested them to be kind enough to make the necessary arrangements. To this request the reverend gentlemen acceded.—Morning Chronicle.

THE SHRIEVALTY.—To the great surprise of the City authorities, Mr. Chandler, who was elected sheriff at the last Common Hall, has not only signified his intention not to serve the office, but has already paid the 600*l.* penalty. The reason which Mr. Chandler has assigned to the friends who proposed him to the Livery is, that the large business of the house to which he belongs will require his peculiar attention, in consequence of the delicate state of his father's health, which has been for some time on the decline. It is expected that a Common Hall will be summoned in the course of the week. As the fees of under-sheriff have been by recent changes in professional charges considerably diminished, one great element in sheriff-making has been almost completely dissolved, and it is believed that vigorous measures will be adopted to destroy every part of the system.

The remains of the late Vice-Chancellor Parker were interred in a vault beneath the chapel adjoining Rothley Temple on Friday afternoon. The funeral service was read by the Rev. E. T. Vaughan, vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester, and the following gentlemen were the principal mourners:—Mr. G. Parker, Mr. H. Parker, and Mr. C. Parker (brother and two sons of Sir James), Mr. Cardwell (late M.P. for Liverpool), Mr. C. Cardwell, Dr. Rainey, Mr. Tennant, Rev. J. Babington, Rev. A. Babington, Mr. W. H. Babington, Rev. E. Rose, Mr. Thomas Macaulay, Mr. Colin C. Macaulay, Mr. A. Smith (secretary to the late Vice-Chancellor), and Mr. Moultrie. The corpse was borne to its resting-place by six tenants, and eight other tenants officiated as pall-bearers. The chapel in which the interment took place is a small building connected with the Temple; and in vaults beneath the floor there had previously been interred several members of the Babington family (ancestors and relatives of Lady Parker), and the Hon. Mrs. Erskine, wife of the present Dean of Ripon, who is Commissary of the Peculiar of Rothley.

MONEY ORDERS. — GENERAL POST-OFFICE, August, 1852.—1. On and after the 1st of September, 1852, an additional commission will be charged in every case of transfer or repayment of a money order. 2. The payment of the additional commission, viz. 3d. on all sums not exceeding 2*l.* and 6d. on all sums between 2*l.* and 5*l.* must be invariably made by postage stamps transmitted with the application for transfer, or repayment, and unless the amount be so transmitted, the application will not be complied with. 3. All applications for transfer or repayment must be addressed to the President of the London, Dublin, or Edinburgh Money Order-office, according as the order was issued in England (or Wales), Ireland, or Scotland. 4. To prevent the necessity of a transfer, in consequence of an order being erroneously drawn on a different office from the one at which payment is desired, the public are advised to furnish in writing to the issuing Postmaster at the time of application, the full particulars of the money order required, and also to ascertain, before quitting the issuing office, that the order corresponds with those particulars.

HOPE FOR CHANCERY SUITORS. -The cause of Beckford v. Jasper, begun above a hundred years ago, is now in a fair way of being wound up. The original plaintiff was Thomas Beckford, executor of one James Pope, a merchant in Madeira, and Edward Jasper, also a merchant, was the original defendant. Jasper owed Pope 10,000*l.* and Pope died in 1713, and in 1718 Beckford, his executor filed this bill against Jasper, who died before he could put in an answer. The suit was revived against Jasper's executors, and in 1753 the cause was heard before Lord Chancellor Hardwick, and referred to the Master to take accounts. In 1764 and in 1772 further proceedings were taken, and 630*l.* in Bank Stock and 553*l.* were lodged to the cause, which then slept until 1851, when Mr. J. D. Wadham obtained administration to Pope, the original testator, and revived the bill against Jasper's representatives. The funds to the credit of the cause had, by accumulation of dividends, bonuses, &c. amounted to 70,000*l.* Wadham had to take out administration to five intermediate estates, and to pay 778*l.* for the stamp duties. The case is now wound up by an order to pay the costs of all parties out of the funds in court, and to share the remainder according to the respective rights of the claimants.

THE LAW TIMES.

THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Newspaper writers, who know little of law, or of the practical difficulties in its application to the complicated facts of human affairs, and philosophers and philanthropists who weave fine schemes for social reform, in which they always forget to take into their calculations that rather important element—human nature—have taken it into their heads that the obstacle to all improvement in England is the Law of Partnership; and hundreds of articles have been written, and vehement speeches uttered, and heavy pamphlets published, and, finally, a Parliamentary Committee appointed, with a purpose to procure the abolition of the existing law, and substitute another more in accordance with the views of the agitators.

The principle of the present law is simply that of "pay your debts." The principle sought to be substituted is that of repudiation. As it is, every partner is liable for the whole of the debts of the concern; that is to say, for all the debts which he, or his agents on his behalf, have contracted. As it is sought to be, each partner is not to be liable for all his debts, but only for so much of them as it may please him to be responsible for. Stated thus nakedly, the true character of the proposition becomes apparent, but it is disguised under a fine name, in which it has been exhibited to the unthinking public. Partnership en commandite is nothing more than permission given to a party of persons to go into trade, and carry on *un*limited dealings, and contract unlimited debts, with only limited liabilities. In some cases, doubtless, it would work justly, and even beneficially, as, where all the parties concerned are honest men. But laws must not be made on the assumption that all men will be always honest; it is necessary, also, to ascertain whether rogues might not use them for their own purposes. Let us see whether this would not be the consequence of the desired change in the Law of Partnership. At present, the security against improvident partnerships is the knowledge that, if the honest man chooses to link himself with the rogue, or the rich man with the pauper, the former will pay the penalty. But if there be only limited liability, the man who can pay will be enabled to join a partnership with the man who cannot. The rogue having everything to gain, and nothing to lose, will be enabled to speculate to any extent, and contract debts to any amount; and when the debtor sends in his claim, the wealthy man, who has shared the chance of the gain of the speculation with the poor rogue, will escape with only his fraction of the liabilities, and laugh at the plundered public. If there be limited liability, there must also be limited power to contract debts, and if that limit is exceeded, then, for all beyond, all the partners should be liable individually as now. That would be an efficient protection against the consequences of so monstrous a combination as unlimited debts with limited liabilities. But this would not answer the purposes of the promoters of the scheme, who, however benevolent their motives, have not looked at it in all its aspects, nor considered how it might be misapplied, as well as what advantages might accrue from it.

Unfortunately, while pursuing this will-o'-the-wisp, people have lost sight of the real defects of the existing law of partnership, and are losing the advantage of those improvements in it which might be secured easily without revolutionising it altogether. Our readers know from the experience of their offices what those defects are, although perhaps the remedy might not have suggested itself to them. It may be, therefore, that we shall do some service by pointing out two or three of these defects, and endeavouring to shew how they may be cured.

There are few matters that produce more social and commercial troubles, or are more difficult for the Solicitor to deal with, than the settlement of partnership affairs, especially small partnerships, where the sum involved is trifling, the debts and credits few, the parties poor, and therefore a suit out of the question. If one of the parties is a rogue or a fool, resolved to ruin the other, he is enabled to do so with certainty, and without fear of consequences to himself. Every Attorney in practice sees daily instances of this, and must acknowledge that the cause of the mischief lies in the want of a cheap and speedy tribunal for the settlement of the disputes and affairs of small partnerships. This being the evil, let us now see what may be the remedy.

Let jurisdiction be given to the County Courts in all partnership disputes or windings up where the assets do not exceed a certain limited sum, say 500*l.* with power to either party to remove it to the Superior Court, by permission, on good cause shewn. The proceedings in the County Court may be in form almost the same as in Chancery—a complaint by the party desiring the interference of the Court, to which the other party should be required to answer, and then upon a hearing of both parties in open Court, the Judge should adjudicate the question in dispute. If it be a matter of account between them, he should order an account to be taken, either by the clerk or by an arbitrator appointed by himself. If the object be a dissolution of the partnership, he should direct such dissolution, with an account to be taken in like manner.

The advantages of this are sufficiently obvious. The smallest partnership disputes might thus be determined with speed and cheapness. The parties will be examined, and the grounds of their differences ascertained, and the law will enforce upon the refractory that which an impartial arbitrator has determined to be the measure of justice between them. We know of nothing to which the County Courts might be more usefully applied than to this fruitful source of contention and ruin.

Already the County Court has a jurisdiction in partnership accounts where they have been made up and agreed to between the parties. But this does not meet the evil we have described, the want of a cheap and speedy means of enforcing the settlement of accounts, and relieving partners from the dangers and inconveniences of a connection that is injurious to them.

This would be a vastly greater improvement in the practice of the Law of Partnership than any of those alterations of its principle which have been lately so much in vogue.

RECEIPT STAMPS.

We do not suppose that Mr. Disraeli reads the Law Times; but many Lawyers connected with the Government do so, and a hint to them may thus be conveyed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is engaged in the arduous task of reconstructing the taxation of the country.

Many are the interests claiming relief. We of the law have our own peculiar claims. We are demanding the repeal of the Attorney's Tax. That demand would be strengthened if, at the same time, we could shew a substitute for it, and it would be irresistible if that substitute were also a benefit to the entire community.

The substitute we suggest is a very simple one—a uniform penny receipt stamp. It would yield an immense revenue, and it would cost nothing in the collection. It might be sold by all vendors of postage stamps, and included in the same accounts. Extend this penny stamp to bankers' cheques. As it is, the receipt stamp is evaded in ninety-cases in a hundred; so little is it respected, that it is almost deemed an insult to demand a stamped receipt. But let the receipt stamp for any sum whatever be a penny, and it will be required in all cases. If cheques also were required to be stamped, the bankers would sell stamped cheque-books at the price of the stamps, and then the production of the stamped cheque endorsed by the receiver would be a receipt. Even as a matter of convenience and security, this advantage would be more than an equivalent for the trifling cost,—it would be deemed a positive relief by the public, and yet would the revenue be largely increased.

It is difficult to present any figures that would exhibit the probable results of such a stamp. But every reader has only to ask himself how often he has taken or given receipts without a stamp, as compared with the occasions when he requires or is asked for it, and he will be enabled to form some notion of the profit that would accrue to the Exchequer from this source. Officials may be slow to acknowledge it, for they are hostile to all changes that involve additional labour and compel new arrangements. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer has a public to please, and his own fame to consult, and he could not more effectually do so than by substituting a uniform penny receipt stamp for the unjust Attorney's Tax.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

It was very fortunate that Lord Robert Grosvenor was prevented, by the accident of a count out, from bringing on his motion for the repeal of this tax, for it would have been certainly defeated upon the plea that the Government was only acting provisionally, and that it was pledged to make no changes in taxation during the then Parliament. This would have deterred many members favourable to our cause from voting with us against a Government whom they were desirous of supporting; it would have placed us in a certain minority, and all the prestige of past victories would have been destroyed by the least defeat. As it is, we hold an excellent position. We can now point to an unbroken succession of majorities which, in a matter of taxation peculiarly the province of the House of Commons, ought to be deemed decisive against the continuance of the tax so solemnly pronounced to be unjust. Even those who voted against its repeal were compelled to admit its iniquity. They could find no argument, except the law of the strongest, to justify the imposition of a special tax upon one class of the community in addition to those taxes which they pay in common with every other class. It was put to the House, by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, purely as a question of necessity. "I want money—I must get it somehow—unless you are prepared to revise the whole scheme of taxation, I cannot give up one tax and another tax merely because it is unjust in principle or inconvenient in practice." It was the tyrant's plea, but it was at the moment unanswerable, and therefore we were unsuccessful though victorious.

But now that plea must be abandoned, and if the Attorney's Tax is to be maintained at all some other argument must be found for it. The scheme of taxation is actually in process of revision. Mr. Disraeli is known to be engaged in preparing for the great and difficult task to which he has pledged himself, and which is to be the mission of Lord Derby's Government. What the issue will be, how far a large revision is practicable, if proposed, whether it will be accepted by the public and a hostile Parliament, are questions hidden in the future; but with the unreversed divisions of the House of Commons against the Attorney's Tax, its indefensible injustice, and its small amount, the Chancellor of the Exchequer cannot fail to include it in his list of taxes to be swept away. We have not the slightest doubt that its repeal will form a part of Mr. Disraeli's budget, and that in a few weeks it will be our pleasing duty to congratulate our readers on their having obtained a ministerial condemnation of the Attorney's Tax.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

In continuation of our summary of, and remarks upon, the New Practice of the Court of Chancery, contained in the "Act to Amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery" (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), we may now proceed to notice a very useful reform, which will tend greatly to diminish the expenses in many Chancery suits.

The practice of the Court, of issuing commission to take pleas, answers, disclaimers, and examinations in causes and matters, is, with respect to pleas answers, disclaimers, and examinations to be taken within the jurisdiction of the Court, abolished and they may be filed without any other formality than is required in the swearing and filing of a affidavit. (Sec. 21.)

The next section will be of great utility in authenticating, at little expense, such part of the pleading or evidence as may be taken out of the jurisdiction It enacts that all pleas, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, declarations, affirmations, and attestations of honour in causes or matters, and also acknowledgments required for the purpose of enrolling any deed in the court, are to be sworn and taken in Scotland or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any Judge, Court, Notary Public, or person in such places lawfully authorised to administer oaths, or before any of her Majesty's Consuls or Vice-Consuls in any foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions, and the Judges and other officers of the Court of Chancery are to take judicial notice of the seal or signature, as the case may be, of any such Court, Judge, Notary Public, person, Consul, or Vice-Consul. (Sec. 22.)

All persons wilfully and corruptly false swearing, declaring, affirming, or attesting, before any person authorised by the Act to administer oaths, and take declarations, affirmations, or attestations of honour, are to be liable to all such penalties, punishments, and consequences, as if they had done so before any Court or persons now by law authorised to administer oaths, and take declarations, affirmations, or attestations upon honour. (Sec. 23.) And if any person forge the signature or the official seal of any such Judge, Notary Public, or other person lawfully authorised to administer oaths under the Act, or tender in evidence any plea, answer, disclaimer, examination, affidavit, or other judicial or official document, with a false or counterfeit signature or seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person will be guilty of felony, and will be liable to the same punishment as any offender under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Admission in Evidence of certain official and other Documents." (Sec. 24.) And pleas, answers, disclaimers, or examinations, whether taken by commission out of the jurisdiction of the said Court, or otherwise, may be filed without the oath of a messenger; and any alterations made therein previously to the taking thereof are to be authenticated according to the practice now in use with respect to affidavits. (Sec. 25.)

Next as to the mode of joining issue. In suits, which have been commenced by bill, and notice of motion for a decree or decretal order has not been given, or having been given, where a decree or decretal order has not been made thereon, issue is to be joined by filing a replication in the form or to the effect of the replication now in use; and where a defendant has not been required to answer and has not answered the plaintiff's bill, he is to be considered to have traversed the case made by the bill. (Sec. 26.)

Where a defendant to a suit commenced by bill has not been required to answer and has not answered the bill, he is to be at liberty to move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, as prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor. (Sec. 27.)

Next follows the most important part of the Act, perhaps the most important part of the whole of the reforms in the Chancery practice, viz. that which relates to the new mode of taking evidence. According to the old system (the evils of which are well detailed in the report of the Chancery Commissioners), after the cause is at issue the Counsel of the parties prepare written interrogatories for the examination of witnesses, whose evidence, in London, is taken before an examiner, in the country before a commissioner specially appointed, but in both cases in private, none of the parties or their agents being present. The interrogatories being framed beforehand by counsel, without its being certain what witnesses will be forthcoming, or what answer a witness will give to any particular question, are framed to meet the contingencies which are likely to occur, and are deemed necessary to be provided against. Several witnesses are frequently produced to prove the same facts, or to prove facts leading to the same material conclusion, from the uncertainty whether one witness (who if examined orally and publicly would have been found sufficient) has in his deposition given sufficient evidence of the necessary facts. The examiner or commissioner takes down and records the answers of the witnesses to the written interrogatories, and is under the obligation of an oath not to disclose the evidence taken. The theory of the Court is, that the witnesses are subject to cross-examination; but the cross-examination by written interrogatories of witnesses whose examination in chief is not known, is so ineffective and dangerous, that it is seldom resorted to except where the witness is known to be friendly to the cross-examining party, and has previously communicated facts to be the subject of such cross-examination. If the witnesses are to be examined in the country, a special commission issues to the purpose. Formerly there was a commissioner on each side; but by a recent rule of Court only one commissioner acts. This has diminished the expense; but has been complained of as leading to another evil,—that the acting commissioner being named by one party, it is supposed that the evidence on that side is taken more carefully and favourably than the evidence on the other side. The obtaining the commission is a matter of considerable expense. A day is appointed for opening the commission, generally at an inn. Besides the commissioner, there is a clerk, who is also sworn to secrecy. The commissioner is furnished with the interrogatories and cross-interrogatories of the parties; and each witness is sent in with a note specifying the interrogatories which are to be administered to him. The commissioner puts the interrogatory to the witness, often, if not generally, being obliged to translate it into less technical language, more intelligible to the witness, whose answers are taken down and are copied by the clerk. The process is very slow. The solicitors and the witnesses are in attendance during the execution of the commission, which often lasts several days, and has not unfrequently lasted weeks, the commissioner and his clerk being entitled to daily fees, and heavy expenses being incurred by the attendance of the solicitors and witnesses. The depositions being completed, are sealed up by the commissioner, and returned to the Office of Records, either by himself or by some messenger on oath.

A day is fixed for what is called the publication of the evidence:—"The parties then, for the first time, get copies of the depositions, for which copies fees are of course charged. After publication no further evidence can be adduced without special leave of the Court." Other objections to the old system are mentioned, for "sometimes the parties move to suppress the depositions, by reason of the interrogatories being leading, or otherwise objectionable, or by reason of some irregularity in the mode of taking or returning the depositions. Sometimes it is discovered that, through an accidental slip, either of the Solicitor or Counsel, or of the Commissioner, some material piece of evidence has been omitted, and it is necessary to make a special application to the Court to supply the omission by a further examination conducted in the same way." (Chan. Commissioners' Rep. 7, 8.)

This part of the Act commences by abolishing the present mode of examining witnesses in causes, and all the practice of the Court in relation thereto, so far as such practice is inconsistent with the mode thereinafter prescribed of examining such witnesses, and the practice in relation thereto. It is provided, however, that the Court may, if it shall think fit, order any particular witness or witnesses within the jurisdiction of the said Court, or any witness or witnesses out of the jurisdiction of the said Court, to be examined upon interrogatories in the mode now practised; and that with respect to such witness or witnesses, the practice of the said Court, in relation to the examination of witnesses, is to continue in full force, save only so far as the same may be varied by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, or by any order of the Court with reference to any particular case. (Sec. 28.)

When any suit commenced by bill is at issue, the plaintiff, within the time to be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, is to give notice to the defendant that he desires the evidence to be adduced in the cause to be taken orally or upon affidavit, as the case may be; and if the plaintiff desires the evidence to be adduced upon affidavit, and the defendant or some or one of the defendants, if more than one, shall not, within the time to be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, give notice to the plaintiff or his solicitor that he or they desire the evidence to be oral, the plaintiff and defendants respectively are to be at liberty to verify their respective cases by affidavit. (Sec. 29.)

When any of the parties to any suit commenced by bill desires the evidence to be adduced orally, and gives notice thereof to the opposite party as thereinbefore provided, the same is to be taken orally, in the manner thereinafter provided; if, however, the evidence be required to be oral merely by a party without a sufficient interest in the matters in question, the Court may, upon application in a summary way, make such order as shall be just. (Sec. 30.) These are very important enactments; they give, in effect, parties to a bill the option of having the evidence taken orally, or by affidavit: in many cases the truth, or, at any rate, the whole truth, can only be elicited by oral examination; in many cases it may be arrived at quite as satisfactorily by affidavits.

Next, as to the mode of examining witnesses orally under the provisions of this Act. They are to be so examined by or before one of the examiners of the Court, or an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court; the examiner being furnished by the plaintiff with a copy of the bill and of the answer, if any, in the cause; and such examination is to take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents; and the witnesses so examined orally are to be subject to cross-examination and re-examination, which is to be conducted as nearly as may be in the mode now in use in courts of Common Law with respect to a witness about to go abroad, and not expected to be present at the trial of a cause. (Sec. 31.)

The depositions upon any such oral examination are to be taken down in writing by the examiner, not ordinarily by question and answer, but in the form of a narrative, and when completed, are to be read over to the witness, and signed by him in the presence of the parties, or such of them as may think fit to attend: and if the witness refuses to sign the said depositions, the examiner is to sign the same, and such examiner may, upon all examinations, state any special matter to the Court as he shall think fit. It is, however, to be in the discretion of the examiner to put down any particular question or answer, if there should appear any special reason for doing so; and any question or questions which may be objected to are to be noticed or referred to by the examiner in or upon the depositions, and he is to state his opinion thereon to the Counsel, Solicitors, or parties, and to refer to such statement on the face of the depositions, but he is not to have power to decide upon the materiality or relevancy of any question; and the Court is to have power to deal with the costs of immaterial or irrelevant depositions as may be just. (Sec. 32.)

It may here be remarked that great as is the improvement effected by the new mode of taking evidence orally, especially with regard to cross-examination, the present manner of conducting which has been aptly designated by the Lord Chancellor as "a mere farce," still the improvement would have been much greater if oral evidence were in all cases to be taken before the Judge who decides the case instead of the examiner. This seems to have been the opinion of the Chancery Commissioners. But then they add,—"Practically it would be impossible to carry on the business of a Court of Equity if all the evidence were taken vivâ voce before the Judge; and the inconvenience to persons liable to be called as witnesses would be intolerable if they were brought to London and kept until the cause or matter was called on; while the expense to the parties would make justice itself too dear." (Chan. Com. Rep. p. 21.) This remark of the Chancery Commissioners admits of no dispute; there is, however, one point of view in which the matter must, sooner or later, be looked at which does not appear to have come within their consideration. Why should all Chancery suits necessarily be heard in London? If it be found that the oral examination of witnesses is preferable in the majority of suits, and that it could be resorted to more frequently and with greater effect, if it were taken before the judge himself, which it cannot well be done in London, the plain question then arises (assuming, for the present, that there will be no fusion of law and equity),—whether there ought not to be District or Circuit Chancery Courts, by which the effective administration of justice should be brought near to the suitor's door? Why should there not be District Chancery Courts as well as District Bankruptcy Courts? If it were proposed that all bankruptcy cases should be disposed of by judges at some central place,—as, for instance, London—that the evidence should be taken not by the Judges, but by examiners, in the mode set forth in this Act, the faultiness of such scheme would at once be apparent, and if it is overlooked in the present, it is only because the attention of most persons is drawn to the really great improvements which it has, on the whole, effected.

Another, amongst many other reasons which might be urged in support of these views, is this: The unnecessary expense occasioned to the suitor who resides in the country in being obliged, in most cases, to employ and pay two sets of Attorneys—his usual man of business in the country, and the London agent—when the former, in all probability, from his knowledge of the different facts and circumstances, would be able much better to conduct the cause himself than through the medium of a third party. At all events, the expense occasioned by the employment of the that third party is one that it is hard that a suitor should be compelled to submit to.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

XVIII. DEATH, MARRIAGE, AND BANKRUPTCY.

We have next to review the effect of death, marriage, and bankruptcy upon the proceedings in an action, as settled by this statute. An action is not to abate on the death of either plaintiff or defendant, but may be continued as follows:—Where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more dies, if the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiff, or against the surviving defendant, the action shall not abate, but, the death being suggested on the record, shall proceed. Where a sole plaintiff dies, his legal representative may enter suggestion of the death and that he is legal representative, and proceed with the action.

In case of the death of a sole defendant, where the cause of action survives, the plaintiff may make a suggestion of the death in the pleadings if the cause has not advanced to issue, or in a copy of the issue if it has so arrived, and that a person therein named is the executor or administrator, and may thereupon proceed as in other cases against such executor, or administrator. If no pleadings have taken place before the death, the suggestion is to form part of the declaration.

The death of either party between the verdict and the judgment is not hereafter to form ground of error, so as such judgment be entered within two terms after verdict.

If plaintiff happen to die after interlocutory but before final judgment, the action is not to abate if it might be originally prosecuted by the executor or administrator of such plaintiff; and if defendant die after interlocutory and before final judgment, in like manner such action is not to abate; and the plaintiff, or, if dead, his executors or administrators, shall have a writ of revivor (in form given) against the defendant, or his executors or administrators, to shew cause why damages should not be recovered against him or them; and if no sufficient cause be shewn to arrest final judgment, such judgment shall in due course follow.

Upon marriage of a woman, plaintiff or defendant, the action is not to abate, but may be proceeded with to judgment, and execution issued against the wife alone, or by suggestion or writ of revivor judgment may be had against both husband and wife, and execution thereon issue. In case of judgment for the wife, execution may be issued by the authority of the husband without writ of revivor or suggestion; and if the wife shall sue or defend by attorney appointed by her when sole, such attorney may continue the action or defence, unless his authority be countermanded by the husband, and the attorney changed according to the usual practice of the Court.

The bankruptcy or insolvency of a plaintiff in any action maintainable by the assignees, shall not be pleaded in bar unless the assignees decline to continue and give security for costs under a judge's order, but proceedings may be stayed until such election is made by them, and if they neglect or refuse to continue the action, and give such security, the defendant then may after such neglect or refusal plead in bar the bankruptcy.

Such are the new regulations respecting death, marriage, and bankruptcy; and it will at once be be seen that they are not the least beneficial and serviceable of the enactments of this statute.

XIX. ARREST OF JUDGMENT, AND JUDGMENT NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

Upon motion in arrest of judgment, pursuant to 1 Wm. 4, c. 7, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, by reason of the non-averment of some material fact or allegation, or other cause, the party whose pleading is alleged to be therein defective, may, by leave of the Court, suggest the omitted fact or other matter which would remedy the defect. If the fact, &c. suggested be admitted, or found to be true, the party suggesting shall be entitled to judgment, as if such fact or allegation had originally been stated in the pleading. On arrest of judgment, or judgment non obstante, the Court shall adjudge to the party against whom such judgment is given, the costs of trial of any issues of fact arising out of the pleading, for the defect of which the judgment is given; and such costs shall form the subject of set off against any money or costs adjudged to the opposite party, and execution may issue for the balance.

XX. ERROR.

The provisions of the law in the matter of error are no less lengthy than important; they extend to some 22 sections.

No judgment may be reversed for any error or defect therein, unless error be brought within six years after such judgment. There follows a proviso for disabilities, in the case of infants, femmes covert, persons non compos mentis, or beyond seas, and these are to bring error within six years dating from the removal of such disability.

The writ of error is abolished, and proceeding to error is to be a step in the cause.

Either party alleging error may deliver to a Master of the Court, a memorandum in writing (in a form supplied by schedule), alleging that there is error in law in the record and proceedings; the Master is to acknowledge receipt of the same by a note, a copy of which, together with a statement of the grounds of error for argument, may be served on the opposite party.

Proceedings in error are to be deemed a supersedeas of execution from time of the service of the above-mentioned note, until default in putting in bail, or affirmance of the judgment, or discontinuance of the proceedings in error; but if the grounds of error shall appear to the Court to be frivolous, the Court or a Judge may order execution to issue.

Execution is not to be stayed by proceedings in error, or supersedeas thereon, without any order of the Court or a Judge, unless the person in whose name error is brought, with two or more sureties, shall be bound to the party for whom such judgment is given in double the sum recovered by the said judgment, to prosecute the proceeding in error with effect, and also pay the sum of money and costs adjudged in the former judgment, and all costs and damages of delaying execution.

A suggestion to the effect that error is alleged and denied is henceforth substituted for assignment of and joinder in error.

In cases where error is brought by one of several persons against whom judgment has been given, and the other persons decline to join in the proceedings in error, the same may nevertheless be continued.

Courts of Error are to have power to quash proceedings in error in all cases where error does not lie, or they are taken against good faith; and such Courts shall have such jurisdiction over the proceedings as now, by writ of error.

Where either party alleges error in fact, he is to give notice to the Master in the manner we have seen indicated in error in law, and the master is to take like steps, and similar notice is to be served on the opposite side.

The plaintiff in error, whether of fact or law, may discontinue proceedings in error by giving notice to the defendant, who thereupon may sign judgment for the costs of such proceedings in error, and may then proceed on the original judgment.

The defendant in error may, by following a similar course as regards notice, confess error and consent to the reversal of the judgment, and there upon plaintiff may sign judgment of reversal.

The death of a plaintiff in error is not to cause abatement of the proceedings; and in case of death of one of the plaintiffs in error, a suggestion may be made of the death, and the proceedings be continued. In like manner, the death of a defendant in error is not to abate proceedings. In case of the death of a sole defendant, or of all the defendants in error, the plaintiff may still proceed on giving notice to the representatives; or, if no notice can be given, then by leave of the Court or a Judge upon giving such notice to the parties interested as may by the Court be directed.

The marriage of a woman plaintiff or defendant is not to abate proceedings in error.

Here, for the present, we close our review of the provisions of this statute. It will be seen that the proceedings in error are far more simple, practical, and effective than those hitherto laid down for relief and forming the existing practice.

MR. TUDOR'S EDITION OF THE CHANCERY REFORM ACTS.

The delay in publishing this work has been occasioned by the non-appearance of the rules and orders necessary to render it complete. The orders which appear in to-day's Law Times, apply to one of the Acts only, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The orders about to be issued under the Master in Chancery Abolition Act, and which it is expected will be of considerable importance, are not yet ready, and any edition of the Act without these orders must necessarily be incomplete. The editor prefers to delay the appearance of his edition of these Acts, and thus secure as nearly as possible a perfect and practicable work.

ADVERTISING LAWYERS.

The following unprofessional advertisement appeared in the Times of 27th August last. The discovery and exposure of the advertiser would be a service:—

Law Reform.—A qualified Attorney, desirous of increasing his practice, undertakes to recover tradesmen's accounts, &c. in town and country, without charge for his trouble where costs not paid by the debtors. All the County Courts attended, and every other description of business at charges much lower than usual.—Apply by letter to M 29, City-terrace, City-road.

AFFILIATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—In the present rage for emigration the following is a case of not infrequent occurrence.

A. is duly adjudged to be the putative father of a bastard child, and ordered to pay the mother, until the child shall attain the age of thirteen years, a certain sum per week, and the costs incurred in obtaining the order. A pays the costs and the instalments regularly for six months, and then, to the alarm of the mother, gives out that he is going to the "diggings," about which there can be no doubt, as he has abandoned his regular employment, and is seen busily engaged in preparing for the voyage. He has taken care, however, not to be in arrear with the weekly payments, and on the day of his departure, about which he makes no secret whatever, there is nothing due to the mother of the child. He has hitherto "obeyed" the order. When the next instalment becomes due the defendant is far away upon the main—and a "warrant of apprehension" is of course out of the question. Can any of your correspondents, familiar with affiliation practice, suggest a course by which the weekly provision for the child may be secured when the putative father insolently advertises his intention to leave the country under the circumstances I have described? The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, and 8 Vict. c. 10, seem to afford no remedy in such a case.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. J. B.

THE MILITIA.

Westminster.—On Wednesday notice was given to the inhabitants of the city of Westminster, that the number of men to be called out to serve in the Royal Westminster Middlesex Militia was 607. Each man who shall volunteer to serve five years is to receive a bounty of 6*l.* and not to be under the standard of five feet four inches in height, and between 18 and 35 years of age. Ten shillings will be paid to every recruit when attested by the respective sergeants of the district, and ten shillings more at the expiration of the first twenty-one days' training, and the remainder of the 6*l.* will be paid by monthly instalments. It is expected that very few will be tempted by the proffered bounty, and it is generally believed that there will be great difficulty in raising the required number, unless resort be had to the ballot.

St. Mary, Islington.—The churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary, Islington, have issued a notice to the inhabitants, stating that the Lord-Lieutenant of Middlesex has called their attention to the Act of last session, by which it is enacted that volunteers may be raised to serve in the militia, and that a bounty not exceeding 6*l.* is given to each volunteer, and urging upon the inhabitants that the opportunity thus given to prevent the inconvenience of the ballot should not be neglected. The quota of men to be furnished by the parish is 216.

The following buildings are certified as places duly registered for solemnising marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85:—Furrough Cross Church, St. Mary Church, Devonshire. John Alsop, superintendent registrar.—The Church of the Sacred Heart, Howden, Yorkshire. George England, superintendant registrar. A building in Walkergate, Louth, Lincolnshire.—Cross-street Baptist Chapel, St. Mary, Islington.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Some cases of interest for this department of our Journal are reported in our last number. The first is that of The Sutton Harbour Improvement Company v. Hitchins, 19 Law T. Rep. 332. The facts and the effect of that decision, which is not unimportant as regards the question of costs, may be thus stated:—A lessee of a warehouse adjoining some works of an incorporated company carried on under the powers of an Act, wherein the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act were incorporated, claimed compensation under the 68th section of the latter Act for damages to his property, "injuriously affected, as he alleged, by the works of the company, or that the damages should be ascertained by arbitration." A bill being filed to restrain proceedings under the Lands Claus Consolidation Act, the Court of Appeal dissolved an injunction granted by the Master of the Rolls on the authority of The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Smith, 1 Mac. & Gord. 216, since overruled. A notice of motion was thereupon given by the defendant before the Master of the Rolls to dismiss the bill with costs, and afterwards notice of a cross-motion was given by the plaintiff to dismiss the bill without costs, and, on the hearing of the motions, no order was made on the former, and the latter was dismissed without costs. It was held by the Lords Justices on appeal from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, and varying his decision (the cause being treated, by consent, as if it had come regularly to a hearing), that the defendant ought to have had his costs of his motion to dismiss, and that as the plaintiffs were justified in filing their bill by the authority of The London and North-Western Railway Company, v. Smith, their bill ought to be dismissed without costs; but leave was given to the defendant to apply as to costs if he succeeded in obtaining compensation.

A curious question affecting a railway company was raised as to the adoption by a third party of a contract made between others, the enforcing specific performance, and the abandonment of a scheme, was raised in Gooday v. The Colchester and Stour Valley Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 334. In that case a railway company who had projected and were promoting a new line of railway, being opposed by a landholder on the line, arranged, through a third party, who professed to be the agent of the company, to purchase his land at a certain price. The landholder accordingly withdrew his opposition, and the Bill passed authorising the construction of the new line. No steps, however, were taken to carry out the scheme, and the compulsory powers having expired, though the time for completing the line had not, the landholder filed his bill against the company for specific performance of the contract to purchase his land. The Court held, that there was no contract between the plaintiff and the company, for before they obtained their new Act they could not enter into a contract; and as to their adoption of the contract made by their professed agent for their benefit, as a corporation subsequently established, there had been nothing done after obtaining the Act which the plaintiff's withdrawal of opposition had enabled them to do, and therefore they could not be said to have adopted it. The Court refused even to put the company on terms to admit the contract at law; but dismissed the bill with costs. Speaking to the point that there was here no contract between the plaintiff and defendants, the Master of the Rolls referred to the rule of law as settled by recent cases, and said that assuming a contract to have existed between an individual and a company, if the undertaking had been abandoned, the Court will send the case to law, instead of granting specific performance. The substantial point raised and the reasons for the judgment on it are clearly stated in the close of the judgment:—"Here the question is, whether the defendants did adopt the agreement previously entered into by their agent, or alleged agent, with the plaintiff. The contract was entered into with the plaintiff for the benefit of a corporation not then, but subsequently, established, and the withdrawal of the plaintiff's opposition, which was part of the contract, enabled them to obtain their Act of incorporation. Since the Act was obtained, however, nothing has been done, nor any step taken to construct the railway. There is no distinct evidence, indeed, that the railway has been abandoned; but no money has been paid, no land taken, nor any movement made towards carrying on the scheme, and the compulsory powers of the Act have now ceased. Under these circumstances I cannot say that the company has adopted the agreement, or is bound by its terms; and therefore I do not think that I can compel them to admit the contract in an action at law. I must dismiss the bill, but without costs."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Some cases of interest under the Trustee Relief Acts of 1847 and 1850, have recently been reported, and deserve noting. In the case of Re Mais, 19 Law T. Rep. 324, a petition had been presented on behalf of certain infants for the removal of a trustee on the ground that he was residing in Jamaica out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and praying the appointment of another trustee in his stead. It was urged, on the authority of Re Hobson's Settlement, 15 Jur. 352, that the Court had power, by secs. 22 and 32 of the Trustee Relief Act, 1850 (13 & 14 Vict. c. 60), to remove a trustee under such circumstances and nominate another. But it was held by Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY, after consultation with the other Vice-Chancellors, that under those sections the Court took no such power. "The words of the sections referred to," said his Honour, "were very general, but he did not think that the Legislature could have intended that a trustee should be summarily removed because he was out of the jurisdiction, which probably might be the case only for a short time."

In Lewis v. Hillman, 19 Law T. Rep. 329, it was held by the House of Lords that a trustee acting under a deed in which is contained a power of sale, cannot be the purchaser under such power of sale. In the same case, an interesting point as to the purchase of property by a Solicitor concerned in the cause, in the name of a sub-agent, and a question under the Trustee Relief Act of 1847, were considered. These points are reviewed in another column.

The case of Re James's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 338, arose also under the Trustee Act of 1850. In that case an attorney had been declared by the Court a trustee of certain copyhold lands, and had been ordered to surrender them. The Court, upon evidence that he could not be found, and on a statement in the petition that it was uncertain whether he was in England or abroad, but if still in England he was avoiding his creditors, and could not be found, ordered the appointment of some person to surrender the lands in his stead. A case of practice as to the confirmation of the Master's report approving of a new trustee is Re Farmer, 19 Law T. Rep. 338. The Court held that such an application must be made, not by petition, but by motion. An important case under a will, affecting a tenant for life, and the accumulation of capital for remainder-man, is that of Meyer v. Solomon, 19 Law T. Rep. 337. In that case a testator gave the residue of his property to his wife and to any persons who might be executors or trustees of his will upon trust to pay or permit his wife to receive the income and profits so long as she should continue his widow, and after her death to other persons. A sum of 12,000*l.* the testator's share of the capital of a partnership, was, after the testator's death, secured to be paid to his estate according to the articles of partnership, by the warrant of attorney of the surviving partner in the following manner:— The capital was to be paid off by annual instalments of 1,500*l.* and interest at 5*l.* per cent. per annum was payable on the debt until discharged. The question submitted, on a special case, to the Court was whether the widow was entitled to the whole of the interest payable by the surviving partner, and if not, what part was to be considered as interest and what part capital. The Court held that she was entitled to 4 per cent. only of the interest, and that the remaining 1 per cent. must be treated as capital and invested, but the widow should enjoy the interest of such investment. A nice question as to whether a gift in a codicil was in addition or substitution of a gift in the will was considered in Sawrey v. Rumney, 19 Law T. Rep. 337. In that case a testatrix by her will gave 1,000*l.* stock upon trust for the maintenance of A. B. until she attained twenty-two years of age, and then for A. B. absolutely. By a codicil the testatrix confirmed the bequest except as to the trusts, which she revoked, and declared the trusts to be for A. B. for life, and afterwards for A. B.'s children. By a subsequent codicil the testatrix thus expressed herself:—"I have altered my views as to A. B. respecting the 1,000*l.* as left in my will, and which I now think may prove a snare for her. I now leave 500*l.* for schooling and board, when at a proper age to be sent to a respectable place for useful teaching." The Court held, that the 500*l.* was an additional gift, and not a gift in substitution for the 1,000*l.* the trusts of which were declared by the former codicil. In the case Re Tinkler's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 338, where an annuity charged on real estate with power of distress and entry had fallen into arrear, and a railway company had taken a portion of the estate, and paid into court the purchase-money, the Court directed such money to be paid to the annuitant in discharge of the arrears of her annuity, the VICE-CHANCELLOR remarking that "the annuity was, in a sense, charged on the corpus."

A case, not unlike Ogle v. Morgan, which recently arose under the will of the late EARL of ABERGAVENNY, and was much litigated in Chancery, came before Vice-Chancellor TURNER, in Blackwell v. Pennant, 19 Law T. Rep. 336. The testator's will contained the bequest "to all my servants living with me at the time of my decease, who shall then have lived in my service for three years, one year's wages." The Court held that, under this, all servants at a yearly hiring were entitled, although not resident with the testator; but that a gardener, who was engaged at a stated sum per week, although it was paid at irregular intervals, was not entitled, although he had lived more than three years in the testator's service. "I am bound," said the VICE-CHANCELLOR, "to adopt Lord COWPER's opinion, in Townsend v. Windham, 2 Vern. 516, that the description 'servants living with me at the time of my death' is not to be confined to such servants only as were in the testator's house, or had diet from him. But then there is the case of Booth v. Dean, before Sir JNO. LEACH, which is not opposed to this view, but has an important bearing on the present case, because there, as here, a servant hired by weekly wages, claimed under a gift of a year's wages to all servants living with the testator at the time of his death; and the MASTER of the ROLLS decided that the expression 'a year's wages' clearly had reference to a yearly hiring—to servants 'usually hired by the year.' And this I take to be the right interpretation. When the testator gives to his servants a year's wages, he gives it to those whom he had hired at yearly wages."

Query.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Can any of your conveyancing readers answer the following query, or refer to any case bearing upon it?

Certain leasehold property was sold by auction to B. The vendor's solicitors being unable or unwilling to remove some of the objections taken by the purchaser's solicitors to the title, it was ultimately agreed that the deposit should be returned, without interest and without costs, and the contract rescinded. This was done, and the vendor's solicitors now (some time afterwards) claim to have the abstract returned. This abstract contains the purchaser's solicitors' remarks, and the advice and observations of counsel upon it. Are they entitled to it?

I am, Sir, yours, &c. M.

Answers to Queries.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The case alluded to by your correspondent A. of Leeds, in the LAW TIMES of the 28th instant, is, I presume, Hallett v. Chamberlayne, 12 Law T. 272.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. J. S.

COUNTY COURTS.

WE have been favoured with a copy of the following letter on the subject of the new scale of costs to be allowed as between Attorney and client, and party and party, which has been forwarded, by the Secretary of the Committee of Judges appointed to frame the scale, to the Secretary of the Law Institution. No doubt any suggestion from our readers which may be forwarded to Mr. NICOL, the able Secretary of the Committee, will be acceptable, and may be serviceable to the Committee in the important duty they have to discharge:

"Treasury Chambers, Whitehall, 27th August, 1852.

Sir,—The LORD CHANCELLOR having, under the provisions of the County Courts Acts Amendment Act of last session, appointed Mr. Serjeant MANNING, Mr. KOE, Mr. Serjeant DOWLING, Mr. WALKER, and Mr. FURNER, being five of the Judges of the County Courts, to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to Attorneys in the County Courts, to be allowed as between Attorney and client, and as between party and party, I have been directed by those gentlemen to forward to you a copy of the above Act, and to request that you will lay the same before the members of the Law Society, of which you are the Secretary, and move them to communicate to me any suggestions they may wish to make with reference to the powers conferred on the Judges by the LORD CHANCELLOR's appointment.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—From the case of Lewis v. Hillman, 19 Law T. Rep. 329, which was an appeal to the House of Lords from a judgment of Lord Chancellor COTTENHAM, some useful points may be abstracted. And first with regard to the purchase of property by a Solicitor, it was held that if an Attorney or agent can shew by circumstances that he was entitled to purchase the property, as a stranger might buy it, yet if, instead of openly purchasing it, he purchases in the name of another person, a sub-agent, the Court will set aside such purchase. So if an Attorney put forward a clerk as bonâ fide purchaser, for the purpose of perfecting the title to the property sold, such a purchase will be set aside. These points should be noted in Pulling's Law of Attorneys. In the same case the appellants had, in the court below, petitioned under the Trustee Relief Act of 1847, to have a trust-fund paid out to them; there was no cross-petition, but the respondents had consented that the case should be treated as if there had been a cross-petition; the VICE-CHANCELLOR had ordered the money to be paid out to the petitioners. On appeal to the LORD CHANCELLOR, the order on the petition was reversed, and the LORD CHANCELLOR ordered the money to be brought back into Court, and a declaration to be made, on the petition, that the deed of sale (on which the order of the VICE-CHANCELLOR was founded) was invalid and could not stand. It was held by the House of Lords that the declaration on such petition was good in point of form. In Magan v. Magan, 19 Law T. Rep. 338, a point of practice was decided. An order, of course, in a cause attached to any one of the Vice-Chancellors' Courts, may be obtained in the Court of any other Vice-Chancellor. In the same case the word "had," in the fifth General Order of 1841 (11th November), affecting motions and petitions, was read as "heard." A point also worthy of notice in Pulling's Law of Attorneys, relative to the giving security for costs to married women, entitled to separate estate, was settled in Re Waugh, 19 Law T. Rep. 334. In that case, a married woman entitled to separate estate had employed Solicitors to act for her, and had given them some securities for costs incurred by them on her separate estate. She then obtained an order of course for delivery and taxation of their bill of costs, but without the intervention of a next friend. On motion to discharge the order for irregularity in not having a next friend, or in the alternative that security for costs might be given, the MASTER of the ROLLS held, that security for costs must be given, or the order must be discharged; that there was no real distinction between the case of an order of course and any other case; but that the practice having been, though erroneously, to give orders of course without the intervention of a next friend, there could be no costs of the motion. With regard to the costs of the application to discharge the order, or that security for costs might be given, it may be as well to add, that the MASTER of the ROLLS said, "As for many years it has been the practice to give orders of course, without the intervention of a next friend, I will give no costs of this application, but will, if it is desired, make the costs abide the result of the taxation."

NEW CHANCERY ORDERS.

WE invite attention to the New General Orders and Rules in Chancery, under the recent Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), the appearance of which has been awaited with anxiety by the Profession. Although dated on the 7th of August, they were only issued from the printers on Thursday last. They are the first orders regulating the future practice of the Court under the Acts passed in the last session of Parliament.

The Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw, Lord St. Leonard's, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Lord Cranworth, the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir George James Turner, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Torin Kindersley, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Parker, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the 15th and 16th years of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct:—

That all and every the orders, rules, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, "General Orders and Rules of the High Court of Chancery," viz.:—

PRINTING.

1. Bills and claims are to be printed on writing royal paper, quarto, in pica type, leaded; and the copy to be filed is to be interleaved with paper of the same description.

2. No costs are to be allowed either as between party and party, or as between solicitor and client, for any written bill or written copy of a bill, filed under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 6, or for any written copy thereof, served upon any defendant thereto, or for any written brief of such bill, unless the Court shall, in disposing of the costs of the cause, direct the allowance thereof.

3. The clerks of records and writs shall, at the expiration of fourteen days from the filing of any written bill or written copy of a bill, take off the files of the Court, without further order, the bill or copy so filed, unless a printed copy thereof shall in the meantime have been filed, and the plaintiff in the suit, or his solicitor, who shall personally have undertaken to file such printed copy, shall pay to the defendant all the costs incurred by him in the suit, such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master, without further order, upon production to him of the certificate of the Clerk of Records and Writs, that a printed copy of the bill has not been filed pursuant to such undertaking, and to be recoverable in like manner as costs ordered to be paid by a party in a suit to another party in a suit are now recoverable.

4. In lieu of the fees now payable to solicitors for instructions for bills, for engrossing bills and claims, for copies of bills and claims, for abbreviating bills and making a brief thereof, solicitors shall be entitled to charge, and be allowed in suits commenced after these orders come into operation, the fees specified in schedule A. to these orders.

5. The payment to be made by the defendant to the plaintiff for printed copies of the bill or claim shall be at the rate of one halfpenny per folio.

6. No defendant shall be at liberty to demand from the plaintiff more than ten printed copies of his bill or claim.

AMENDMENT OF BILLS AND CLAIMS.

7. Where, according to the present practice of the Court, an amendment of a bill or claim may be made without a new engrossment thereof, a bill or claim may be amended by written alterations in the printed bill of complaint or claim so to be filed, and by additions on the paper to be interleaved therewith, according to the directions of Order 1.

8. The practice of amending a defendant's copy of the bill shall, with respect to the amendment of bills filed after these Orders come into operation, be abolished.

9. A copy of an amended bill or claim, whether upon an amendment by a reprint or by such alterations and additions as mentioned in Order 7, is to be served upon the defendant or his solicitor; and such copy may be partly printed and partly written, if the amendment is not made by a reprint; but in every case the copy to be served is to be stamped with the proper stamp by one of the Clerks of Records and Writs, indicating the filing of such amended bill or claim, and the date of the filing thereof.

10. In all cases where, according to the present practice of the Court, a subpœna to appear to and to answer an amended bill may be served upon the solicitor of a defendant, service upon the defendant's solicitor of a copy of an amended bill, whether wholly printed or partly printed and partly written, shall be good service on the defendant.

11. Where a defendant has appeared in person to any bill, service at the address for service of such defendant of a copy of an amended bill, whether wholly printed, or partly printed and partly written, shall be good service on the defendant.

LIMITATION OF PRECEDING ORDERS.

12. None of the preceding Orders shall apply to bills or claims filed before these Orders come into operation, though afterwards amended; and the existing practice of the Court is to continue in force, with reference to the amendment of such bills and claims.

13. The existing practice of the Court with reference to issuing and serving writs of subpœna to appear to and answer bills and writs of summons on claims is also to continue in force with respect to bills and claims filed before these Orders come into operation

FORM OF BILL.

14. Bills may be in a form similar to the form set out in Schedule (B) to these Orders, with such variations as the nature and circumstances of each particular case may require.

INTERROGATORIES.

15. The interrogatories for the examination of the defendant to a bill may be in a form similar to the form set out in Schedule (C) to these Orders, with such variations as the nature and circumstances of each particular case may require.

16. In cases in which the plaintiff requires an answer to any bill from any defendant or defendants thereto, the interrogatories for the examination of such defendant or defendants are to be filed within eight days after the time limited for the appearance of such defendant or defendants.

17. If the defendant appear in person, or by his own solicitor, within the time limited for that purpose by the rules of the Court, the plaintiff is, within eight days after the time allowed for such appearance, to deliver to the defendant or defendants so required to answer, or to his or their solicitor or solicitors, a copy of the interrogatories so filed as aforesaid, or of such of them as the particular defendant or defendants shall be required to answer. And the copy so to be delivered is to be examined with the original, and the number of folios counted by the Clerks of Records and Writs, who, on finding that such copy is duly stamped and properly written, are to mark the same as an office copy.

18. If any defendant to a suit commenced by bill do not appear in person, or by his own solicitor, within the time allowed for that purpose by the rules of the Court, and the plaintiff has filed interrogatories for his examination, the plaintiff may deliver a copy of such interrogatories, so examined and marked as aforesaid, to the defendant, at any time after the time allowed to such defendant to appear, and before his appearance in person or by his own solicitor; or the plaintiff may deliver a copy of such interrogatories, so examined and marked as aforesaid, to the defendant or his solicitor, after the appearance of such defendant in person or by his own solicitor, but within eight days after such appearance.

19. A defendant required to answer a bill must put in his plea, answer, or demurrer thereto, not demurring alone, within fourteen days from the delivery to him or his solicitor of a copy of the interrogatories which he is required to answer; but the Court shall have full power to enlarge the time from time to time upon application being made to the Court for that purpose.

20. After the time allowed by Order 16, for filing interrogatories for the examination of any defendant, no interrogatories are to be filed for the examination of such defendant, without special leave of the Court, to be applied for upon notice of motion.

FORM OF ANSWER.

21. Answers may be in a form similar to the form set out in Schedule (D) to these Orders, with such variations as the nature and circumstances of each particular case may require.

MOTION FOR DECREE.

22. One month's notice is to be given by the plaintiff to the defendant or defendants of the motion for a decree or decretal order.

23. The affidavits to be used in support of such motion are to be filed before the service of such notice, and a list of such affidavits is to be set forth at the foot of such notice.

24. The defendant, within fourteen days after service of such notice, is to file his affidavits in answer, and to furnish the plaintiff or his solicitor with a list thereof.

25. Within seven days after the expiration of such fourteen days the plaintiff is to file his affidavits in reply, which affidavits shall be confined to matters strictly in reply, and he is to furnish the defendant or his solicitor with a list thereof; and except so far as these affidavits are in reply, they are not to be regarded by the Court, unless upon the hearing of the motion the Court shall give leave to the defendant to answer them, and in that case the costs of such affidavits, and of the further affidavits consequent upon them, shall be paid by the plaintiff, unless the Court shall otherwise order.

26. No further evidence on either side is to be used upon such motion for decree or decretal order without leave of the Court.

27. Every notice of motion for a decree or decretal order is to be entered with the registrar, who is to make out a list of such motions, and the same are to be heard according to such list, unless the Court shall make order to the contrary.

28. Where a defendant shall not have been required to answer and shall not have answered the plaintiff's bill, so that under the 15th and 16th Victoria, chap. 86, sec. 26, he is to be considered as having traversed the case made by the bill, issue is nevertheless to be joined by filing a replication in the form or to the effect of the replication now in use.

DISMISSAL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION.

29. A defendant to a suit commenced by bill, who shall not have been required to answer the bill, and shall not have answered the same, shall be at liberty to apply for an order to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, at any time after the expiration of three months from the time of his appearance, unless a motion for a decree or decretal order shall have been set down in the meantime, or the cause shall have been set down to be heard; and the Court may, upon such application, if it shall think fit, make an order dismissing the bill, or make such other order or impose such terms as may appear just and reasonable.

IMPERTINENCE.

30. The application to be made for the costs of any impertinent matter introduced into any bill, answer, or other proceeding, is to be made at the time when the Court disposes of the costs of the cause or matter, and not at any other time.

EVIDENCE.

31. The time within which the plaintiff in any suit commenced by bill is to give the defendant notice of the mode in which he desires that the evidence to be adduced in the cause shall be taken, is to be seven days after issue joined therein; and if the plaintiff shall not, within such time, give any such notice, or if the plaintiff shall give such notice, and shall therein desire the evidence to be adduced upon affidavit, the plaintiff and defendant respectively shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases by affidavit, unless the defendant, or some or one of the defendants, if more than one, shall, within fourteen days after the expiration of the said period of seven days, give notice to the plaintiff, or his solicitor, that he or they desire the evidence to be oral.

32. The evidence on both sides in any cause, to be used at the hearing thereof, whether taken orally (and including the cross-examination and re-examination of any witness or witnesses) or taken upon affidavit, is to be closed within nine weeks after issue joined therein, except that any witness who has made an affidavit intended to be used by any party to such cause at the hearing thereof shall be subject to cross-examination within one month after the expiration of such period of nine weeks.

33. No affidavit filed before issue joined in any cause shall be received or receivable at the hearing thereof, unless within one month after issue joined notice in writing shall have been given, by the party intending to use the same, to the opposite party of his intention in that behalf.

34. Any party desiring to cross-examine a witness who has made an affidavit in any cause intended to be used at the hearing thereof, shall give forty-eight hours' notice to the party on whose behalf such affidavit was filed, or to the party intending to use the same, of the time and place of such intended cross-examination, in order that such party may, if he shall think fit, be present at such cross-examination.

35. The re-examination of any such witness is immediately to follow his cross-examination, and is not to be delayed to a future period.

36. Any party in any cause or matter requiring the attendance of any witness before an examiner, for the purpose of his being examined or cross-examined, with a view to his evidence being used upon any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, not being the hearing of a cause, shall give to the opposite party or parties forty-eight hours' notice at least of his intention to examine such witness, and of the time and place of such examination, unless the Court shall in any case think fit to dispense with such notice.

37. And where it is desired to cross-examine any party, whether a party to the cause or matter or not, who has made an affidavit to be used, or which shall be used on any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, not being the hearing of a cause, the party desiring so to cross-examine such deponent shall give such notice to the opposite party as is required by Order 34, with reference to the cross-examination of a witness who has made an affidavit to be used on the hearing of a cause.

38. All the above Orders with reference to the examination, cross-examination, and re-examination of witnesses, shall extend and be applicable to evidence taken in any cause subsequently to the hearing thereof.

39. In suits in which issue shall have been joined when these Orders come into operation, the evidence to be used at the hearing of the cause shall be taken according to the existing practice of the Court, unless the parties shall consent, or the Court shall order, that the same shall be taken in the mode prescribed by the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and these Orders.

ADDING TO DECREE.

40. The time within which a party served with notice of a decree under sec. 42 of the above Act may apply to the Court to add to the decree, is to be one month after such service.

41. A memorandum of the service upon any person or persons of notice of the decree in any suit under the said section, rule 8, is to be entered in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs upon due proof by affidavit of such service.

SUMMONS.

42. The summons to be obtained under sec. 45 of the above Act may be in a form similar to the form set forth in schedule (E) to these Orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

REVIVOR AND SUPPLEMENT.

43. Any party under no disability, or under the disability of coverture, who may be served with an order to revive any suit, or to carry on the proceedings therein, may apply to the Court to discharge such order within twelve days after such service; and any party being under any disability, other than coverture, who may be so served, may apply to the Court to discharge such order within twelve days after the appointment of a guardian or guardians ad litem for such party; and until such period of twelve days shall have expired such order shall have no force or effect as against such last-mentioned party.

NEW FACTS OR CIRCUMSTANCES.

44. If the plaintiff, in any cause which is not in such a state as to allow of an amendment being made in the bill, shall desire to state or put in issue any facts or circumstances which may have occurred after the institution of the suit, he may state the same, and put the same in issue by filing in the Record and Writ Clerk's Office a statement, either written or printed, to be annexed to the bill; and such proceedings by way of answer, evidence, and otherwise, are to be had and taken upon the statement so filed, as if the same were embodied in a supplemental bill; provided always, that the Court may make any order which it shall think fit for accelerating the proceedings thereunder, or proceedings therein, in any manner which may appear just and practicable.

INJUNCTION.

45. No injunction for stay of proceedings at law is to be granted as of course for default of appearance or answer to the bill.

POWER OF COURT.

46. The power of the Court to enlarge or abridge the time for doing any act, or taking any proceedings in any cause or matter, upon such, if any, terms as the justice of the case requires, is unaffected by these Orders.

COMMENCEMENT OF ORDERS.

47. These Orders shall take effect and come into operation on the 2nd day of November, 1852.

INTERPRETATION.

48. In these Orders the following words have the several meanings hereby assigned to them, over and above their several ordinary meanings, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, viz.:—

1. Words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number.

2. Words importing the masculine gender include females.

3. The word "bill" includes "information."

4. The word "party" includes a body politic or corporate.

5. The word "affidavit" includes "affirmation."

BILL OF COMPLAINT.

To the Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw, Baron St. Leonards, of Slaugham, in the County of Sussex, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain,

Humbly complaining, sheweth unto his lordship, John Lee, of Bedford-square, in the county of Middlesex, esq. the above-named plaintiff, as follows:—

1. The defendant, James Styles, being seised in fee simple of a farm called Blackacre, in the parish of A. in the county of B. with the appurtenances, did, by an indenture dated the 1st of May, 1850, and made between the defendant James Styles of the one part, and the plaintiff of the other part, grant and convey the said farm, with the appurtenances, unto and to the use of the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, subject to a proviso for redemption thereof, in case the defendant James Styles, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, should, on the 1st of May, 1851, pay to the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of 5,000*l.* with interest thereon at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, as by the said indenture will appear.

2. The whole of the said sum of 5,000*l.* together with interest thereon at the rate aforesaid, is now due to the plaintiff.

3. The defendant, Henry Jones, claims to have some charge upon the farm and premises comprised in the said indenture of mortgage of the 1st May, 1850, which charge is subsequent to the plaintiff's said mortgage.

4. The plaintiff has frequently applied to the defendants, James Styles and Henry Jones, and required them either to pay the said debt, or else to release the equity of redemption of the premises, but they have refused so to do.

5. The defendants, James Styles and Henry Jones, pretend that there are some other mortgages, charges, or incumbrances affecting the premises, but they refuse to discover the particulars thereof.

6. There are divers valuable oak, elm, and other timber and timber-like trees growing and standing on the farm and lands comprised in the said indenture of mortgage of the 1st of May, 1850, which trees and timber are a material part of the plaintiff's said security; and if the same or any of them were felled or taken away, the said mortgaged premises would be an insufficient security to the plaintiff for the money due thereon.

7. The defendant, James Styles, who is in possession of the said farm, has marked for felling a large quantity of the said oak and elm trees and other timber, and he has, by handbills, published on the 2nd of December inst. announced the same for sale, and he threatens and intends forthwith to cut down and dispose of a considerable quantity of the said trees and timber on the said farm.

PRAYER.

The plaintiff prays as follows:—

1. That an account may be taken of what is due for principal and interest on the said mortgage.

2. That the defendants, James Styles and Henry Jones, may be decreed to pay to the plaintiff the amount which shall be so found due, together with his costs of this suit, by a short day to be appointed for that purpose, or, in default thereof, that the defendants, James Styles and Henry Jones, and all persons claiming under them, may be absolutely foreclosed of all right and equity of redemption in or to the said mortgaged premises.

3. That the defendant James Styles may be restrained by the injunction of this Hon. Court from felling, cutting, or disposing of any of the timber or timber-like trees now standing or growing in or upon the said farm and premises comprised in the said indenture of mortgage, or any part thereof.

4. That the plaintiff may have such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

Names of defendants.

Henry Jones.

Y. Y.

Note.—This bill is filed by Messrs. A. B. and C. D. of Lincoln's-inn, in the county of Middlesex, solicitors for the above-named plaintiff.

SCHEDULE (C).

FORM OF INTERROGATORIES.

In Chancery.

John Lee .... Plaintiff.

James Styles and Henry Jones } .... Defendants.

Interrogatories for the examination of the above-named defendants in answer to the plaintiff's bill of complaint.

1. Does not the defendant Henry Jones claim to have some charge upon the farm and premises comprised in the indenture of mortgage of the 1st of May, 1850, in the plaintiff's bill mentioned?

2. What are the particulars of such charge, if any, the date, nature, and short effect of the security, and what is due thereon?

3. Are there or is there any other mortgages or mortgage, charges or charge, incumbrances or incumbrance, in any and what manner affecting the aforesaid [illegible] part thereof?

4. Set forth the particulars of such mortgages or mortgage, charges or charge, incumbrances or incumbrance; the date, nature, and short effect of the security; what is now due thereon; and who is or are entitled thereto respectively; and when and by whom, and in what manner, every such mortgage, charge, or incumbrance was created.

The defendant, James Styles, is required to answer all these interrogatories.

The defendant, Henry Jones, is required to answer the interrogatories numbered 1 and 2.

SCHEDULE (D).

FORM OF ANSWER.

John Lee .... Plaintiff.

James Styles and Henry Jones } .... Defendants.

The answer of James Styles, one of the above-named defendants, to the bill of complaint of the above-named plaintiff.

In answer to the said bill, I, James Styles, say as follows:—

1. I believe that the defendant, Henry Jones, does claim to have a charge upon the farm and premises comprised in the indenture of mortgage of the 1st of May, 1850, in the plaintiff's bill mentioned.

2. Such charge was created by an indenture dated the 1st of November, 1850, made between myself of the one part, and the said defendant, Henry Jones, of the other part, whereby I granted and conveyed the said farm and premises, subject to the mortgage made by the said indenture of the 1st of May, 1850, unto the defendant Henry Jones for securing the sum of 2,000*l.* and interest at the rate of 5*l.* per centum per annum, and the amount due thereon is the said sum of 2,000*l.* with interest thereon from the date of such mortgage.

3. To the best of my knowledge, remembrance, and belief there is not any other mortgage, charge, or incumbrance affecting the aforesaid premises.

G. J. Turner, Vice-Chancellor, or
Richard T. Kindersley, Vice-Chancellor, or James Parker, Vice-Chancellor.

Note.—If the above-named William Jackson does not attend either in person or by his solicitor, at the time and place above mentioned, such order will be made in his absence as the judge may think just and expedient.

This summons was taken out by A. and B. of Lincoln's-inn, in the county of Middlesex, solicitors for the above named Joseph Wilson.

That all and every the orders, rules, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, general orders and rules of the High Court of Chancery, viz.:—

1. That no appeal from any decree, order, or dismission, or any rehearing of the case on which such decree, order, or dismission is founded, shall be allowed, unless the same is set down for hearing, and the requisite notice thereof duly served, within five years from the date of any such decree, order, or dismission respectively.

2. That all decrees and orders, and all dismissions pronounced or made in any cause, claim, or matter, in this court which shall be enrolled, shall be so enrolled within six calendar months after the same shall be so pronounced or made respectively, and not at any time after without special leave of the Court, such leave to be obtained in manner next hereinafter mentioned.

3. In case any party is desirous to enrol a decree, or order, or dismission after the expiration of six calendar months from the time the same shall have been made, he shall obtain an order for that purpose, and which order, unless made by consent of the adverse party, or on motion and notice to all the parties, shall be a conditional order in the first instance, but shall become absolute without further order unless cause is shewn against it within twenty-eight days after service of the order.

4. That where a caveat is entered with the proper officer to stay the signing of the docket of the enrolment of any decree, order, or dismission, such caveat shall be prosecuted with effect within twenty-eight days after the docket of such decree, order, or dismission shall be left to be signed with the proper officer by the party who entered the same, otherwise such caveat shall be of no force; and the docket of such decree, order, or dismission may, immediately after the expiration of the said twenty-eight days, be presented to be signed, as if no such caveat had been entered.

5. That no enrolment of any decree, order, or dismission shall be allowed after the expiration of five years from the date thereof.

6. That the Lord Chancellor, either sitting alone, or with the Lords Justices, or either of them, shall be at liberty, where it shall appear to him under the peculiar circumstances of the case to be just and expedient, to enlarge the periods hereinbefore appointed for a rehearing, or an appeal, or for an enrolment.

7. That these orders shall take effect on and from the 28th day of October next.

Summary.

A nice question in the law of principal and agent was considered by the Lord Chancellor, in the case of Zulucta v. Vinent, 19 Law T. Rep. 330. There A. and Co. induced B. to make advances, for the purpose of working some mines abroad, belonging to C. the produce of which was to be remitted to A. and Co. as consignees, who undertook to account to B. for such proceeds. The Court held that A. and Co. could not set up an antecedent title to the proceeds of such consignments. The principle as to constructive fraud was, in effect, thus propounded by the Court: Where a man induces another to place himself in a particular position, upon condition that when he has so placed himself in that position he will conduct himself in a given manner towards him, he cannot reject the condition without the concurrence of the other party, or set up any right which is inconsistent with it. A case in which the Lords Justices confirmed a decision of a Commissioner of Bankrupts, refusing a bankrupt his certificate, because, amongst other reasons, he had been guilty of conduct as a trader generally, though not in his particular trade, came before the Court of Appeal in Chancery. (Ex parte Staner, 19 Law T. Rep. 333.) The bankrupt carrying on the trade of a baker, previous to the coming into operation of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, obtained money under the fraudulent pretence that he would invest it on security, which, in fact, he never did; the Court held, that this was conduct on the part of the bankrupt as a trader, though not in the course of his particular trade, which disentitled him to a certificate. It was furthermore held, that if the case came otherwise within the Bankrupt Act of 1849, it was not the less so, because the conduct complained of took place previous to the passing of the Act.

THE NEW LAWS OF THE SESSION, 1852.
THE LAW REFORMS.

NOTICE.—A portion of the following important New Laws of the Session is already published, and the remainder, including the New Procedure Acts, will be published as soon as possible.

Each will be transmitted by the next post after publication (and, if published, by return of post) to those Members of the Profession who will immediately forward their orders to the Publisher.

We cannot undertake to return rejected communications. Whatever is intended for insertion must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer; not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of his good faith.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"C." (Manchester) will doubtless observe, that his reply to A.'s query has been anticipated in our last number, the reference being to the same case.

"AN ATTENTIVE READER" complains of the inconvenience sustained by attorneys in entering and leaving the Assize Courts, and suggests that they should "return to their proper costume of gowns and bands," as a remedy, "in which case he thinks they would experience no more difficulty of obtaining entrance and seats than Barristers do."

"D. H." (Driffield) will see that we have availed ourselves of a letter shorter than his, but having the same object. Had space permitted, we should have adopted his communication.

"J. P." (Birmingham).—We are obliged by the inclosure, which shall have due attention.

"W. J. L." (Winchester); "T. J."; "W. E." (Newport); "W. C." (Clare); "B. G."; "T. F."; and "A. A." who respectively answered the Query as to Abstract of Title, are thanked for their communications, and referred to Law Property Journal in this number.

THE LAW TIMES.

THE NEW VICE-CHANCELLOR.

THE Profession are no longer in doubt on the question who is the successor of the late able and lamented Vice-Chancellor PARKER. Rumour for some time had given the office to Mr. STUART, Q.C. The first intimation of the appointment, however, appeared in a ministerial journal (the Morning Herald) in the form of a paragraph, announcing the acceptance of the office by Mr. STUART, and that active measures were in progress at Bury St. Edmunds to secure the seat in that borough, vacated by this appointment, in favour of a supporter of Lord DERBY's administration.

The new Vice-Chancellor was called to the Bar on the 23rd of November, 1819; twenty years later he obtained silk, taking rank after Mr. PURTON COOPER, Q.C. and before Mr. BETHELL, Q.C. He has long enjoyed, as our readers know, a lucrative and extensive practice at the Equity Bar. In politics he has consistently supported the Conservative party. He sat for some years in Parliament for Newark, a borough understood to be in the interest of the Duke of NEWCASTLE. Latterly he has represented Bury St. Edmunds. During the premiership of the late Sir ROBERT PEEL, it was said that Mr. STUART was offered, and declined, the Solicitor-Generalship; and, since the death of Vice-Chancellor PARKER there have not been wanting persons who, estimating Mr. STUART's ambition as soaring only at the highest judicial seat, predicted that if offered he would decline the office we are now authoritatively informed he has accepted.

Immediately on the announcement of this appointment a leading article of a very rancorous spirit appeared in a leading journal, attacking Lord DERBY for so conferring this office, and describing Mr. STUART as an uncompromising, zealous, and bitter opponent of law reform. Nor was this all; for the writer went on to charge him with "indifferent advocacy of the worst side of almost every question with which the Legislature for the last six years has had to deal." We read this with sincere regret. It prejudges and condemns by anticipation an honourable man. Vituperation of such a nature, and coming from such a quarter, though it may subserve the interests of party, and perhaps produce the desired effect upon the general mass of the public, is understood and valued at its true worth by the Profession, who will not censure before they have seen good cause for it, but rather generously and hopefully look for the co-operation of the new Vice-Chancellor in those changes and reforms which are sanctioned and furthered by a ST. LEONARD's and a CRANWORTH.

LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

WE put a case of continual recurrence, in illustration of our remarks of last week on this subject.

Two persons go into partnership. One has money, the other brains; one simplicity, the other cunning.

By virtue of our law of partnership, the weak man and his money are instantly placed at the absolute mercy of the poor rogue.

Although one has in fact supplied the entire of the funds, and in truth the whole of the stock is his, the Law of Partnership does not merely give to the partner a full share of it, but practically it enables him to possess himself of all. He may sell the goods and pocket the money; he may collect and keep all the debts of the concern; he may refuse to render any account; his legal rights are equal, though his moral right is none; law will give him no redress; his partner may rob him with impunity of the uttermost farthing, and turn him into the streets a beggar, and yet there is no punishment for the rogue, and no remedy for the victim.

Such cases occur every day, as our readers well know. They are continually consulted upon them by the parties thus wronged. They are compelled to send them away with only the poor consolation that, if they choose to go into a Court of Equity, after a few years of litigation, and at the cost of several hundreds of pounds, they might possibly obtain an account from their villainous colleague, perhaps a restoration of their own money, and a release from the fetters of the partnership. This is all that British justice can do for them. Of course this is, in fact, a denial of justice altogether.

Nor will the matter be much mended by the recent reform in the procedure of the Equity Courts. It is impossible that the machinery of a Court that sits in London can deal speedily and inexpensively with the settlement of accounts between persons living in the provinces; and speed and cheapness of process are essential to the redress of the grievances we have described. The parties will require to be examined personally, and probably many times; their books and papers will be often referred to. Both may have need to produce witnesses. It is, indeed, peculiarly a case for arbitration. The remedy is so simple, so obvious, and so easy, that it has but to be named to be approved. The County Courts supply the machinery requisite for the accomplishment of the desired object. They can administer justice in such cases at least as effectually as a Superior Court. These small partnership disputes are seldom, if ever, questions of law, but only of fact: an accountant can settle the figures between the parties better than any number of lawyers, and the judge will determine the questions that are properly for judgment,—that is, such as arise out of the facts and figures; the terms upon which the settlement should be made, or the dissolution had. The amount of misery that would thus be spared to the community is incalculable. May we hope that Lord BROUGHAM or Lord CAMPBELL will accept the hints we have given.

as to the existence of a great wrong, and the remedy for it which we have suggested, and that early in the next session the subject may be submitted to Parliament in the practical form of a Bill.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE (a)

Shortly after our last summary of the New Chancery Practice was in type, the New General Orders and Rules of the High Court of Chancery applicable to the Act to "Amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery," were issued from the printers, although they are dated so far back as the 7th of August last, and signed by all the Equity Judges.

A reference to the Law Times, p. 189, will shew how they bear upon that part of the Act which has already been noticed. In future they will be incorporated in our analysis or summary of the Act.

On perusing the General Orders and Rules it seems difficult to find any substantial reason why their contents should not have been included in the Act. For those points which were left in suspense by the Act, and were intended to form the subject-matter of the general orders and rules to be made by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the other Equity Judges, might readily, with the same advice and assistance, have been incorporated in the Act.

That much tautology and confusion would have been thereby avoided is clear—that the whole of the practice would have been thereby much more easily comprehended admits of no doubt necessity alone (the existence of which it difficult to imagine) can alone justify the resort to such an expedient, for which, however, it must be admitted, there are many precedents,—it is, in fact, a proceeding something analogous to what is too common in our statute law—an Act to amend an Act. It may indeed be said that it is advisable that such part of the new practice as consisted of details relating principally to time to be taken in different proceedings in a suit, should be left to be disposed of by general orders and rules as they might from time to time be altered by other general orders and rules, and that it would be objectionable to give the Judges power to repeal parts of an Act of Parliament. That may to a certain extent be so, although we have before seen that that has been done in this Act in not the least objectionable mode (see ante,); but all these details might easily have been introduced into the Act after full consideration by the judges; and should it have been deemed advisable, power to alter such details by general Orders, might have been reserved to the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of a certain number of the other Equity Judges, subject, however, to be rescinded by a resolution of either of the Houses of Parliament.

In the last number we noticed some of the sections of the Act relating to the mode of taking evidence. By the 31st of the new Orders the time within which the plaintiff in any suit commenced by bill is to give the defendant notice of the mode which he desires that the evidence to be adduced in the cause is to be taken, is to be seven days after issue joined therein; and if the plaintiff does not within such time give any such notice, and desires the evidence to be adduced upon affidavit, the plaintiff and defendant respectively are to be at liberty to verify their respective cases by affidavit, unless the defendant, or some, or one of the defendants, if more than one, within fourteen days after the expiration of the said period of seven days, gives notice to the plaintiff, or his solicitor, that he or they desire the evidence to be oral.

By the 33rd section of the Act, if any person produced before the examiner as a witness refuses to be sworn, or to answer any lawful question put to him by the examiner, or by either of the parties, or by his or their counsel, solicitor, or agent, the same course is to be adopted with respect to him, as is now pursued in the case of a witness produced for examination before an examiner of the Court, upon written interrogatories, and refusing to be sworn, or to answer some lawful question. If, however, any witness demurs, or objects to any question or questions put to him, the question or questions so put, and the demurrer or objection of the witness thereto, is to be taken down by the examiner, and transmitted by him to the Record-office of the Court, to be there filed and its validity is to be decided by the Court; and the costs of, an ... thereby, are to be in the discretion of the Court. (Sec. 33.) Now, it will be observed, that by the 32nd section of the Act (ante, page 187), upon any objection being taken before the examiner to any question, he is not to have power to decide upon its materiality or relevancy,—he is merely to state his opinion thereon, and to refer to it on the face of the depositions; and by the 33rd section, upon a demurrer or objection being taken by a witness thereto, it must be taken down and filed by the examiner, and must be decided, not by him, but by the Court. Now, if examinations were conducted by or before the Judge, all objections as to materiality or relevancy, and any demurrer or objection by a witness as to a question, might at once be decided. It is true that the Court in both cases under the present Act can deal with the costs of an unnecessary objection or demurrer. It is, however, very questionable whether that power alone will be sufficient to check the anticipated evil. The examiner, it is to be feared, will be but a poor substitute for the Judge: his powers are, perhaps, necessarily scant; his control over the counsel, solicitors, and parties, will not be like that of a Judge; nor can he possibly convey, by writing those impressions which are made upon his mind by the conduct and demeanour of the witnesses, the observation of which in doubtful cases, where the evidence is conflicting, and all turns upon the credibility of the witnesses, constitutes one of the chief advantages of evidence obtained by the public oral examination of witnesses, over that obtained by merely written interrogatories administered, as at present, by an examiner in secret. These are additional reasons for having the evidence, as we have before suggested, taken by or before the judge himself. It has, indeed, been suggested by very high authority, "that the business of the Court would be broken in upon by examinations being taken before the Judge; that witnesses would disturb the Court, which is always quietly deciding questions of great amount, and very often of great importance, and that that is the daily habit of the Court." (Chancery Com. Rep. App. A. p. 30.) It is, however, with the greatest deference submitted, that even the quietude of the Court should give place to the convenience of the public, for whose benefit the Court is constituted.

To return to the Act. When the examination of witnesses before any examiner is concluded, the original depositions, authenticated by his signature, are to be transmitted by him to be filed in the Record Office; and any party to the suit may have a copy thereof, or of any part thereof, upon payment for the same, in manner to be provided by any General Order of the Lord Chancellor. (Sec. 34.) This does not appear to be provided for in the Orders at present issued.

It is not to be necessary to sue out any commission for the examination of any witnesses within the jurisdiction of the Court. and any examiner appointed by any order of the Court is to have the like power of administering oaths as commissioners now have under commissions issued by the Court for the examination of witnesses. (Sec. 35.)

Notwithstanding that the plaintiff or the defendant in any suit in the said Court may have elected that the evidence in the cause should be taken orally, affidavits by particular witnesses, or affidavits to particular facts or circumstances, may, by consent, or by leave of the Court obtained upon notice, be used on the hearing of any cause, and such consent, with the approbation of the Court, may be given by or on the part of married women or infants, or other persons under disability. (Sec. 36.) This is a section which will practically be of great use, as the affidavits of certain witnesses may be quite as satisfactory to the parties, or to the Court, as their oral examination.

Every affidavit to be used in the Court is to be divided into paragraphs, to be numbered consecutively, and to be confined, as nearly as may be, to a distinct portion of the subject. (Sec. 37.)

The evidence on both sides in any suit in the said Court, whether taken orally (and including the cross-examination and re-examination of any witness or witnesses), or taken upon affidavit, is to be closed within nine weeks after issue joined; the Court, however, is to have power to enlarge the times for receiving evidence, as it may seem fit; and after the time fixed for closing the evidence, no further evidence, whether oral or by affidavit, is to be receivable without special leave of the Court previously obtained for that purpose; and it is provided that any witness who has made an affidavit filed by any party to a cause is to be subject to oral cross-examination within one month after the expiration of such period of nine weeks, by or before an examiner, in the same manner as if the evidence given by him in his affidavit had been given by him orally before the examiner, and after such cross-examination may be re-examined orally by or on the part of the party by whom such affidavit was filed; and such witness is to be bound to attend before such examiner to be so cross-examined and re-examined, upon receiving due and proper notice, and payment of his reasonable expenses, in like manner as if he had been duly served with a writ of subpœna ad testificandum before such examiner; and the expenses attending such cross-examination and re-examination are to be paid by the parties respectively, in like manner as if the witness so to be cross-examined were the witness of the party cross-examining, and are to be deemed costs in the cause of such parties respectively, unless the Court think fit otherwise to direct. (Sec. 38—Order 32.)

The provision in the 38th section, which renders a person who has made an affidavit liable to oral cross-examination and re-examination, in the same way as if he had been orally examined, is a most useful enactment, and will, as observed by the Chancery Commissioners, tend much to improve the character of affidavits.

Upon the hearing of any cause, whether commenced by bill or by claim, power is given to the Court to require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause, and to direct the costs thereof to be paid by such of the parties to the suit or in such manner as it may think fit. (Sec. 39.)

Any party in any cause or matter may, by a writ of subpœna ad testificandum or duces tecum, require the attendance of any witness before an examiner of the said court, or before an examiner specially appointed for the purpose, for the purpose of examining such witness orally, and of using his evidence upon any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, in like manner as such witness would be bound to attend and be examined with a view to the hearing of a cause.

And any party having made an affidavit to be used, or which shall be used, on any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, shall be bound, on being served with such writ, to attend before an examiner, for the purpose of being cross-examined: but the Court is always to have a discretionary power of acting upon such evidence as may be before it at the time, and of making such interim orders, or otherwise, as may appear necessary to meet the justice of the case. (Sec. 40.)

The following of the new orders, applicable to the preceding sections, may be here conveniently mentioned:—

No affidavit filed, before issued joined, in any cause is to be received or receivable at the hearing thereof, unless within one month after issue joined notice in writing has been given by the party intending to use the same to the opposite party of his intention in that behalf. (Order 33.)

Any party desiring to cross-examine a witness who has made an affidavit in any cause intended to be used at the hearing thereof, is to give forty-eight hours' notice to the party on whose behalf such affidavit was filed, or to the party intending to use the same, of the time and place of such intended cross-examination, in order that such party may, if he shall think fit, be present at such cross-examination. (Order 34.)

The re-examination of any such witness is immediately to follow his cross-examination, and is not to be delayed to a future period. (Order 35.)

Any party in any cause or matter requiring the attendance of any witness before an examiner, for the purpose of his being examined or cross-examined, with a view to his evidence being used upon any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, not being the hearing of the cause, is to give to the opposite party or parties forty-eight hours' notice at least of his intention to examine such witness, and of the time and place of such examination, unless the Court in any case think fit to dispense with such notice. (Order 36.) And where it is desired to cross-examine any party, whether a party to the cause or matter or not, who has made an affidavit to be used, or which is used on any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, not being the hearing of the cause, the party desiring so to cross-examine such deponent, is to give such notice to the opposite party as is required by order 34, with reference to the cross-examination of a witness who has made an affidavit to be used on the hearing of a cause. (Order 37.)

In cases where it shall be necessary for any party

to any cause depending in the court to go into evidence subsequently to the hearing of such cause, such evidence is to be taken as nearly as may be in the manner provided in the Act, with reference to the taking of evidence with a view to such hearing. (Sec. 41.) And all the before-mentioned orders with reference to the examination, cross-examination, and re-examination of witnesses, is to extend and be applicable to evidence taken in any cause subsequently to the hearing thereof. (Order 38.)

In suits in which issue shall have been joined when the orders come into operation (2nd November, 1852), the evidence to be used at the hearing of the cause is to be taken according to the existing practice of the Court, unless the parties consent, or the Court orders, the same to be taken in the mode prescribed by the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the new Orders. (Order 39.)

NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

XXI. PROCEEDINGS IN EJECTMENT.

The changes which the new Act introduces, with respect to Ejectment, are contained in fifty-four sections. John Doe and Richard Roe, those heroes of legal fiction, whose reign has lasted for nearly four hundred years, are at last consigned to repose henceforth in the same tomb with fines and recoveries, wager of law, and trial by battle. The "casual ejector," with the motions against him, in which newly-called Barristers were wont to glory; the verbose jargon about Richard Roe ejecting John Doe from two hundred messuages, two hundred tenements, &c. which has so often been used for party purposes to puzzle and alarm the rustic tenant; and the artificial forms that have, it is to be feared, too often been made the working tools of sharp practitioners, will next Term be matters only of history. New forms of proceeding are framed, with a view to substitute real for nominal parties, certain for indefinite claims; and the public expect that questions of title to land will no longer be involved in protracted litigation. Whether all these objects will be attained under the present Act experience only will be able to prove.

The present proceeding in Ejectment, by delivering to the tenant of a declaration and notice, being discontinued, a writ is to be issued directed to the persons in possession by name, and generally to all persons entitled to defend the possession of the property claimed, the property claimed being described in the writ with reasonable certainty.

The writ, of which a form is given in the schedule, is required to state the names of all the persons in whom the title is alleged to be, and under a penalty of being turned out of possession on non-compliance: the persons to whom it is directed must in sixteen days appear and make their defence of the whole or a part of the property claimed.

The service of the writ is to be in the manner hitherto practised in the service of an ejectment, personally or by a Judge's order, or in case of a vacant possession, by posting it up.

Any of the persons named as defendants in the writ may appear as of course, but any other person seeking to appear and defend, must do so by leave of the Court or a Judge, on an affidavit shewing that he is in actual possession as landlord or tenant, and if appearing as landlord, the appearance must so stated, and the same defence may then be set up as a landlord appearing under the present system may set up, and no other.

An appearance generally is to be deemed an appearance to defend the whole, but may be limited to a part by a motion describing that part with reasonable certainty; the want of such "reasonable certainty" in the notice in the writ affording ground only for an application to a Judge for better particulars.

The Court or a Judge may, in the case of persons not in possession by themselves or their tenants, strike out their appearances or confine their defences.

In lieu of the present proceeding to obtain judgment against the casual ejector, the plaintiff may, in default of appearance, at once sign judgment and obtain possession of the whole or that portion of the property to which no defence is made.

The issue in defended cases is to be made up in a very simple manner, without any pleadings. It is merely to set forth (after a short heading furnished by the Act) the writ, the fact of appearance, the date, and the notice limiting the defence,—a direction to the sheriff to summon a jury being added; and the trial is to take place as in other cases, the particulars of claim and defence being annexed to the record at the trial. The ordinary question arising on this issue is to be, whether the statement in the writ of the title of the claimants is true or false? and if true, then which of the claimants is entitled? and whether to the whole or part? and if to part, which part?—the verdict being given in every case according to the title of the claimant at the date of the writ. By consent of the parties and by leave of a judge, a special case may be stated according to the existing practice.

The trial in ejectment may be ordered to take place in any county. On nonappearance at the trial, plaintiffs may be nonsuited, or defendants have a verdict and judgment against them without proof of title. The jury may find a special verdict, or either party may tender a bill of Exceptions.

In lieu of the present loose verdict in Ejectment, and the subsequent proceedings for costs, the jury are now required, on a verdict for the plaintiff, to find which part of the property he is entitled to; and judgment may be signed and execution issue for the recovery of the whole or such parts, and costs, either on the fifth day of the ensuing Term, or fourteen days after verdict, or at any earlier period named by the Judge, the claimant, having the option of one writ for securing of possession and costs, or separate writs in his favour, may obtain judgment and execution for his costs within the same time.

In Ejectment by one of several joint tenants, &c. the statute enables the defendant, within four days of appearance, to give notice to the claimant admitting his title as joint tenant, but denying the actual ouster; and on the trial of this issue, the additional fact of an actual ouster is to be tried. The Act provides that, under these circumstances, the fact of a joint tenancy, &c. being proved, the defendant is to be entitled to a verdict, judgment and costs, unless an actual ouster is also proved; but if the defendant is not proved to be a joint tenant, &c. or an actual ouster is made out, the verdict is to be for the claimant.

Actions of Ejectment are not to abate by the death of a claimant or defendant. When the claimant's right survives to other claimants, a suggestion is to be made of the death in the mode provided with respect to other actions, and the survivor may recover the whole. Where it does not survive to the other claimant, and the representatives do not come in, the survivor is only to have a verdict for his particular share. Where the death occurs after verdict, the surviving claimant may have a judgment and execution for the whole, subject to the rights of the representatives of the deceased.

On the death of a sole claimant, or one of several claimants, whose claim does not survive, the representatives may, by leave of the Court or a Judge, enter a suggestion of the death, and their own title by representation, and themselves proceed to verdict, judgment, and execution; but the truth of the suggestion in this case may be disputed and tried.

The action may proceed to verdict, judgment, and execution, notwithstanding the death of one of several defendants defending jointly; and where a sole defendant, or all the defendants die before trial, a time may be appointed by the Court or a Judge for the legal representatives to come in and defend within a specified time, and in default thereof the claimants will have judgment. The defendant's death after verdict is not to render any suggestion or revivor necessary, but judgment and execution may be sued out to recover possession, and proceedings may be taken against the representatives for the costs, as on a judgment debt. Upon the death before trial of a defendant, who defends separately for part, the claimant may either proceed as on the death of a sole defendant, or proceed against the survivor for his particular part; and where the defence is a separate one, but other surviving defendants also defend it, the Court or a Judge may order the person in possession, or the personal representatives, to defend in lieu of the deceased, or the claimant may proceed and recover against the survivors.

The remaining clauses of the Act with respect to proceedings in Ejectment, regulate the practice on discontinuance, default in proceeding to trial, confession by the defendant, error and bail, ejectments for non-payment of rent, for holding over after notice to quit, and by mortgagees. These clauses, twenty-two in number, are reserved for comment in our next number.

CAP. LI.

An Act to extend the Provisions of the Acts for the Commutation of Manorial Rights, and for the gradual Enfranchisement of Lands of Copyhold and Customary Tenure.

4 & 5 Vict. c. 35—6 & 7 Vict. c. 23—7 & 8 Vict. c. 55.—Whereas an Act was passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the Commutation of certain Manorial Rights in respect of Lands of Copyhold and Customary Tenure, and in respect of other Lands subject to such rights, and for facilitating the Enfranchisement of such Lands, and for the Improvement of such Tenure:" and whereas the said Act was amended and explained by an Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, and by an Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of her present Majesty: and whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said Acts in manner hereinafter provided: may it therefore please your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. For effecting enfranchisement after next admittance. At any time after the next admittance to any lands which shall take place on or after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, in consequence of any surrender, bargain and sale, or assurance thereof (except upon or under a mortgage in cases where the mortgagee is not in possession, or in consequence of any descent, gift, or devise, and whether such surrender, bargain and sale, or assurance shall have been made, passed, or executed, or such descent shall happen, or such gift or devise shall take effect before or after that day, it shall be lawful for the tenant so admitted, or for the lord, to require and compel enfranchisement in manner hereinafter mentioned of the lands to which there shall have been such admittance as aforesaid; provided that no such tenant shall be entitled to require such enfranchisement until after payment or tender of the fine or fines and of the fees consequent on such admittance, provided also, that if from any cause such enfranchisement shall not take place until some event shall have happened which may require a second or any subsequent admittance, such second or subsequent admittance shall be made, with all the rights incident thereto, as if this Act had not passed, and it shall be competent for the lord or tenant to require and compel enfranchisement upon or after such second or subsequent admittance in the manner hereby provided for enfranchisement upon the next admittance.

2. Mode of effecting enfranchisements.—In every case where, under the powers of this Act, any lord or tenant shall become entitled to require and shall require the enfranchisement of any copyhold lands, he shall give notice in writing, the lord to the tenant, or the tenant to the lord, as the case may be, of his desire that such lands should be enfranchised, and the consideration to be paid to the lord for such enfranchisement shall, unless the parties agree about the same, be ascertained under the direction of the copyhold commissioners, upon application to them in writing in the manner following, viz. by two valuers, one to be appointed by the lord, and the other by the tenant; and such two valuers, before they proceed, shall appoint an umpire, to whom any points in dispute between them shall be referred; and in case the valuers or umpire, as the case may be, shall not make their or his decision, and deliver the particulars thereof in writing to the lord and tenant, or the solicitor or agent of such lord and tenant, within forty-two days after the appointment of such valuers, or after the matter shall have been referred to such umpire, as the case may be, then the commissioners shall act as umpire in fixing the consideration to be paid or rendered to the lord; and in any case where either party shall neglect or refuse for twenty-eight days after being called on so to do to appoint his valuer, the commissioners shall appoint a valuer for him as soon as may be after the expiration of such twenty-eight days; and in any case where any valuers appointed under this Act, either originally or in the place of any other valuer, shall for the space of one week after their appointment be unable to agree in the appointment of such umpire, the commissioners shall appoint such umpire; and such umpire shall give in his award in manner and within the time aforesaid, and if he shall neglect or refuse, or on any account fail so to do, the commissioners shall act as such umpire as aforesaid: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the lord and tenant to appoint one and the same person as valuer, and in such case the valuations, acts, and award of such single valuer shall have the same effect as the valuations, acts, and award of the valuers or umpire under the provision herein contained: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, on application to them in writing by such lord or tenant, or such umpire as aforesaid, if the said commissioners shall see fit, to extend the time within which a valuer may be appointed, or any decision or award under this Act may be given.

3. Appointment of valuer not to be revoked without mutual consent, except that commissioners may remove for misconduct, &c.—The appointment of a valuer by the lord or by the tenant shall not be afterwards revoked, except by the mutual consent of the lord and tenant; provided always, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners at any time, on complaint of either party, to remove any valuer or umpire for misconduct, or for refusal or omission to act.

4. In case of death, &c. of valuers, others to be appointed.—Upon the death, incapacity, or refusal to act, or removal, from time to time, of any valuer, another valuer shall, by a time to be fixed for such purpose by the commissioners, in the manner and by the means aforesaid, be appointed in his stead; and in case such death, incapacity, or refusal to act, or removal, shall be of a valuer who may have been chosen by the lord and tenant, then the lord and the tenant may in manner hereinbefore directed or authorised, as regards them respectively, substitute one other person as valuer, or the lord may nominate one valuer on his behalf, and the tenant another on his behalf; and in any such case where either party shall neglect or refuse for twenty-eight days after being called on so to do to appoint his valuer, the commissioner shall appoint a valuer for him as soon as may be after the expiration of such twenty-eight days; and after every or any substitution the new valuer or valuers for the time being may adopt and act upon any valuations and other matters or proceedings which shall have been completed or agreed upon by the valuer or valuers previously actin[g].

5. Commissioners, &c. may call for and enforce production of books and documents.—The commissioners, assistant commissioners, and valuers may, by summons under the seal of the commissioners, call for the production, for any of the purposes of this Act, at such time and place as the commissioners shall appoint, of any court rolls or copies of court roll in the possession or power of any lord or tenant, or of the steward of any manor, and may by summons under such seal summon and examine any lord or tenant, or other person, on oath, and administer the oath necessary for that purpose; and every person who shall have been summoned, and to whom a reasonable sum shall have been paid or tendered for his expenses, and who shall without lawful excuse neglect or refuse to attend or to produce any such documents so called for as aforesaid, shall, being convicted thereof before any two justices of the peace for the county wherein such proceedings were held, forfeit the sum of five pounds; and any person who shall wilfully give false evidence in any proceeding under this Act shall be guilty of perjury; provided always, that no lord or tenant so summoned shall be bound to answer any questions as to his title.

6. Power of entry for purposes of Act.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners, assistant commissioners, and valuers, and their agents or servants respectively, upon giving reasonable notice to t[he] occupier, to enter upon any of the lands and heredi[ta]taments proposed to be dealt with under the provisions of this Act, and to make all necessary admeasurements, plans, and valuations of the same, without being subject to any action, obstruction, or hinderance, making compensation f[or] all injury, if any, occasioned thereby.

7. Valuers how to proceed.—The valuers shall determine the value of the manorial rights and incidents of tenure from which the lands proposed to be dealt with are to be enfranchised, and shall determine the compensation to be received by the lord for such enfranchisement in manner hereinaft[e]r mentioned; that is to say, where such enfranchisement shall have been effected at the instance of the tenant, the compensation shall be a gross sum of money to be paid at the time of the completion of the enfranchisement, or in cases where the compensation exceeds twenty pounds, the same, if the said commissioners shall so direct, and if all persons (if any) who shall have any mortgage, charge, or incumbrance affecting the lands enfranchised, and which shall have been in existence at the time of the passing of this Act, shall consent thereto, may remain as a first charge, under the provisions of this Act, on the lands enfranchised, until the expiration of such time from the day of such completion as the said commissioners shall appoint, but not exceeding in any case ten years; and interest at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum shall be payable thereon, or on such part thereof as shall from time to time remain unpaid, from the time of such completion as aforesaid half-yearly until full payment thereof; and where such enfranchisement shall have been effected at the instance of the lord, the compensation shall be an annual rent-charge to be issuing out of the lands enfranchised: Provided always, that the parties to any enfranchisement under this Act may in any case, with the sanction of the commissioners, agree that the compensation shall be either a gross sum of money to be paid or charged as aforesaid, or a yearly rent-charge, or a conveyance of land to be settled to the same uses as the manor of which the enfranchised lands are holden is settled, as provided in the said recited Acts with respect to enfranchisements effected by virtue thereof; and in every case the valuers shall frame an award, shewing the amount, nature, and particulars of the compensation which shall be in full satisfaction of all manorial rights whatsoever, save as hereinafter mentioned.

8. Questions of law or fact may be referred to the commissioners—Appeal to be had on matter of law on a case stated—4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 10.—In case any objection shall be made or question shall arise upon or prior to any admittance or in the course of such valuations, in relation to any alleged custom, or the evidence thereof, or any matter of law or fact material to such valuation or arising on any enfranchisement, the same shall, on the request in writing and at the option of any one of the parties on either side of the matter in difference, be referred to th[e] commissioners or assistant commissioner, who shall inquire into and ascertain the same; and the decision of such commissioners or assistant commissioners shall be final: provided nevertheless, that where any one of the said party or parties dissatisfied with any decision of such commissioners or assistant commissioner on any matter of law shall be desirous to appeal, then the like proceedings may and shall be had for obtaining the decision of one of the Superior Courts of law at Westminster thereon, and such decision shall be binding in like manner as is provided by the said Act of the Session of the fourth and fifth years of her Majesty, chapter thirty-five, where a person is [di]ssatisfied with a decision of such commissioners or an assistant commissioner which involves a point of law only, and the parties in difference are agreed upon the facts relating thereto: provided always, that no such proceedings as aforesaid shall be had unless a request to the commissioners to direct a case to be stated as in the said Act mentioned be made within twenty-eight days after the decision in respect of which the appeal is desired.

9. Award to be confirmed by the commissioners.—After all such objections (if made) shall have been heard and determined, then the commissioners shall, if they shall see fit, and after such investigation by themselves or by an assistant commissioner as may seem to them necessary, confirm such award under their hands and seal as aforesaid, and such award so confirmed shall be forthwith registered at the office of the commissioners, and a copy thereof shall be entered on the court rolls of the manor to which the same shall relate, but the same, whether so entered or not, shall, after registration at the office of the said commissioners, be valid.

10. Charge under Act to be a first charge.—Any charge under this Act shall be a first charge on such lands, and shall have priority over all mortgages, ch[ar]ges, and incumbrances whatsoever affecting such lands (except tithe commutation rentcharges, and any charges or rentcharges which may have been or [s]hall be charged upon the same lands for the drain[age] thereof by virtue of any of the statutes in that behalf) notwithstanding the actual priority in point of date or anterior title of such mortgages, charges, and incumbrances. Provided always, that, notwithstanding any such charge, any moneys already invested or any moneys previously secured or charged thereon may be continued on the security of the same, notwithstanding the imposition of the said charge under this Act: Provided also, that no such charge shall have priority over any mortgage, charge, or incumbrance which at the time of the passing of this Act may affect the lands enfranchised, without the consent of the persons entitled to such mortgage, charge, or incumbran[ce].

11. Enfranchisements to be according to form in [sc]hedule.—Any enfranchisement of lands under this Act or the said recited Act shall be by deed according to the form in the first [s]chedule to this Act annexed, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit, or by deed in any other form which the parties, with the consent of the commissioners, may think fit, and which deed the lord shall be bound to execute within twenty-eight days after the same shall be approved by the commissioners on the same being tendered to him for that purpose; and all enfranchisements so made shall take effect from the time of the execution of such deed by the lord, but not before, and shall be effectual to vest the land thereby conveyed in the tenant or other person to whom the lands shall be conveyed, free from any estates, rights, titles to dower and free bench, interests, incumbrances, claims, or demands affecting the manor of which the same lands are holden: Provided always, that in the meantime and until such enfranchisement shall so take effect, all the rights, remedies, powers, privileges, and conditions of and affecting the lord and tenant respectively in regard to such lands, with all the incidents of tenuure, shall remain and continue unaffected.

12. Form of charge.—Every charge under this Act shall be made by a certificate under the hands and seal of the commissioners, to be called a certificate of charge; and such certificate shall specify the whole amount of principal money to be charged on the lands, enfranchised under the powers of this Act, subject to which the land is enfranchised, and may specify any place, to be agreed upon between the parties, as the place of payment of the principal money and interest charged by such certificate; and, if the parties so agree, or the said commissioners shall so direct as aforesaid, such certificate may provide that such principal money, or any part or parts thereof, shall continue upon the security of such certificate for any term or terms of years, period or periods, in such certificate mentioned, not exceeding ten years, and the lands charged thereby may be described by reference to the enfranchisement thereof under the said Acts, or otherwise, as the commissioners may think fit; and such certificate may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this Act, or in such other form as the parties, with the consent of the commissioners, may think proper, and shall be entered on the court rolls of the manor.

13. Certificates to be transferable by endorsement.—Such certificate, and the charge thereby made, shall be transferable by endorsement of such certificate, and such endorsement may be in the form set forth in the schedule to this Act, or to the like effect.

14. Stamp on certificates.—Every certificate of charge and transfer thereof issued or made under this Act shall be chargeable with the like stamp duties as are chargeable in respect of other mortgages and transfers thereof.

15. Commissioners may correct any error in award, &c. after notice to parties interested.—It shall be lawful for the said commissioners to correct and supply any manifest error or omission in any award, or in any deed of enfranchisement or charge under this Act, or any other instrument authorised by this Act to be made or issued by the said commissioners, after such notice to the parties interested as the said commissioners shall deem sufficient; provided that no such error or omission shall be corrected or supplied more than five years after the execution of any such award, deed, or instrument.

16. Valuer to take particular circumstances of the cases into consideration.—In making any valuation under this Act, the valuers shall take into account the facilities for improvement, customs of the manor, fines, heriots, reliefs, quit-rents, chief-rents, escheats, forfeitures, and all other incidents whatever of copyhold or customary tenure, and all other circumstances affecting or relating to the land which shall be included in such enfranchisement, and all advantages to arise therefrom, and shall make due allowance for the same.

17. If consideration not paid, the lord may take possession.—In case such enfranchisement consideration, or the interest thereon, shall not be paid at the time stipulated or provided for payment thereof respectively, the lord or other person for the time being entitled to the benefit thereof shall become entitled to the rents and profits of the land in respect of which the same enfranchisement consideration or interest shall be due; and it shall be lawful for such lord or other person to proceed to obtain possession of the said land, or the rents and profits thereof, in like manner as if the land had remained unenfranchised, and been lawfully seised into the hands of the lord for some default of a tenant, and all the rights and remedies by the said recited Acts, or any of them, given for the recovery of rent charges, sums of money, and other payments, shall be applicable to the sums of money, interest, and payments payable under this Act, in the same manner as if such consideration had been a consideration for an enfranchisement under the said Acts.

18. Land so obtained by lord may be let for not exceeding seven years.—Where any lord or other person for the time being entitled to the benefit of any enfranchisement consideration, or the interest thereon, shall have obtained possession of the land under the powers and provisions of the said recited Acts or this Act, it shall be lawful for the said lord or other person as aforesaid to let such land, or any portion thereof, for any period not exceeding seven years, in possession, at such rent as can be reasonably obtained for the same; and the restitution of such land, on payment or satisfaction of the money due, and of all costs and expenses, shall be subject and without prejudice to any such lease.

19. Steward's compensation to include preparation of deed of enfranchisement.—The steward for the time being of any manor of which any lands enfranchised under this Act shall be parcel shall, on every such enfranchisement, be entitled to receive from the tenant, as a compensation for the trouble of such steward about such enfranchisement, and for the extinguishment of his office with respect to such lands, such a sum as the said commissioners may direct, and, in the absence of such direction on this subject, such a sum as will amount to one set of fees on surrender and admittance for each of the tenements included in such enfranchisement, such fees to be calculated according to the reasonable custom or usage prevalent in the manor whereof such lands shall be parcel, and in case the parties shall differ about the same the amount shall be ascertained by the commissioners; and the steward, in consideration of such compensation, shall prepare and deliver to the tenant a proper deed of enfranchisement, duly executed by the lord, without making any charge for the same, or for completing the enfranchisement, save stamp-duty and parchment: provided always, that if more than one set of fees is demanded by the steward, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to moderate and tax the amount of such fees to such sum as shall appear to them just and reasonable.

20. Inspection, &c. of court rolls of the manor.—At any time after any enfranchisement effected under the said recited Acts or this Act, it shall be lawful for any persons seised of or interested in the lands which have been so enfranchised to have access to and to inspect the court rolls of the manor of which the said lands were holden, and to demand and have copies thereof, on payment of a reasonable sum for the same; and the said commissioners, if they shall think it necessary or expedient, may fix a scale of fees to be payable to the steward or other person having custody of the court rolls for such inspection of the court rolls, and for making all necessary extracts or copies thereof.

THE MAGISTRATE, AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

NEW ORDERS OF THE POOR LAW BOARD FOR THE REGULATION OF OUT-DOOR RELIEF TO THE POOR.

The Poor-law Board have just issued to certain unions and parishes the following new orders for regulating the administration of relief, and prescribing, among other things, an out-door labour test for able-bodied males. The principle kept in view in these orders, the board state to be that which was established by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, that the disabled poor should be relieved, and the able-bodied be employed:—

Art. 1. Whenever the guardians shall allow relief to any indigent poor person, out of the workhouse, one-third at least of such relief allowed to any person who shall be indigent and helpless from age, sickness, accident, or bodily or mental infirmity, or who shall be a widow having a child or children dependent upon her, incapable of working, and one-half at least of the relief allowed to any able-bodied person, other than such widow as aforesaid, shall be given in articles of food or fuel, or in other articles of absolute necessity.

Art. 2. In any case in which the guardians allow relief for a longer period than one week to an indigent poor person, without requiring that such person shall be received into the workhouse, such relief shall be given or administered weekly.

Art. 3. It shall not be lawful for the guardians or their officers to establish any applicant for relief in trade or business; nor to redeem from pawn for any such applicant any tools, implements, or other articles; nor to purchase and give to such applicant any tools, implements, or other articles, except articles of clothing or bedding, where urgently needed, and such articles as are hereinbefore referred to in Art. 1; nor to pay directly or indirectly the expense of the conveyance of any poor person, unless conveyed under the provisions of some statute, or under an order of justices or other lawful authority, or in conformity with some order or regulation of the Poor-law Commissioners or the Poor-law Board, except in the following cases, viz.—first, the case of a person conveyed to or from a district school, or an hospital, or infirmary, or a lunatic asylum, or a house licensed, or hospital registered for the reception of lunatics. 2. The case of a person conveyed to the workhouse of the union or parish in which such pauper is at the time chargeable. 3. The case of a person conveyed to or from any other workhouse, or other house or establishment for the reception of poor persons, in which for the time being it shall be lawful for the guardians to place such pauper. Nor to pay, wholly or in part, the rent of the house or lodging of any pauper, nor to apply any portion of the relief ordered to be given to any pauper in payment of any such rent; nor to retain any portion of such relief for the purpose of directly or indirectly discharging such rent in full or in part for any such pauper. Nor to give money to or on account of any such applicant for the purpose of effecting any of the objects in this article mentioned. Provided always that nothing in this article contained shall apply to any shelter or temporary lodging procured for a poor person in any case of sudden or urgent necessity or mental imbecility.

Art. 4. No relief shall be given from the poor rates of any of the said parishes, or of any parish comprised in any of the said unions, to any person who does not reside in some place within such parish or union, save and except in the following cases:—1. The case of a person casually within such parish, and destitute. 2. The case of a person requiring relief on account of any sickness, accident, or bodily or mental infirmity, affecting him or any of his family. 3. The case of a widow having a legitimate child dependent on her for support, and no illegitimate child born after the commencement of her widowhood, and who, at the time of her husband's death, was resident with him in some place or other than the parish of her legal settlement, and not situated in the union in which such parish is comprised. 4. The case of a child under the age of sixteen maintained in a workhouse or establishment for the education of poor children not situate within the union or parish. 5. The case of the wife or child residing within such parish or union of some person not residing therein. 6. The case of a person who has been in the receipt of relief from such parish, or from some parish in the union from which he seeks relief, at some time within twelve calendar months next preceding the date of this order.

Art. 5. No relief shall be given to any able-bodied male person while he is employed for wages or other hire or remuneration by any person.

Art. 6. Every able-bodied male person, if relieved out of the workhouse, shall be set to work by the guardians, and be kept employed under their direction and superintendence so long as he continues to receive relief.

Art. 7. Provided that the regulations in Arts. 5 and 6 shall not be imperative in the following cases.—1. The case of a person receiving relief on account of sudden and urgent necessity. 2. The case of a person receiving relief on account of any sickness, accident, or bodily or mental infirmity, affecting such person, or any of his family. 3. The case of a person receiving relief for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the burial of any of his family. 4. The case of a person confined in any gaol or place of safe custody. 5. The case of the wife, child, or children, resident within the parish or union, of a person not residing therein.

Art. 8. The guardians shall, within thirty days after they shall have proceeded to act in execution of Art. 6, report to the Poor-law Board the place or places at which able-bodied male paupers shall be set to work; the sort or sorts of work in which they or any of them shall be employed; the times and mode of work, and the provision made for superintending them while working; and shall forthwith discontinue or alter the same if the Poor-law Board shall so require.

Art. 9. No relief which shall be contrary to any regulation in this order shall be given by way of loan; but any relief which may be given in conformity with the provisions of this order, to or on account of any person to whom relief may be lawfully given above the age of twenty one, or to his wife, or any part of his family, under the ages of sixteen, may, if the guardians shall think fit, be given by way of loan.

Art. 10. Provided always that, in case the guardians of any of the said parishes or unions depart in any particular instance from any of the regulations hereinbefore contained (except those contained in Art. 3), and within fifteen days after such departure report the same, and the grounds thereof, to the Poor-law Board, and the Poor-law Board approve of such departure, then the relief granted in such particular instance shall, if otherwise lawful, not be deemed to be unlawful, or be subject to be disallowed.

Arts. 11, 12, 13, and 14, define the meaning of the words "guardians," "parish," the persons named, and the articles of this order.

The above order applies to 109 unions and parishes, among which may be mentioned:—The City of London, East London, West London, Holborn, Strand, Hackney, Poplar, Paddington, St. George in the East, St. George the Martyr, Southwark, St. Giles's (Camberwell), St. Luke (Chelsea), St. Martin-in-the-Fields, St. Mary Abbott's (Kensington), St. Mary (Lambeth), St. Mary Magdalene (Bermondsey), St. Mary (Rotherhithe), St. Matthew (Bethnal-green), St. Olave, St. Saviour, Whitechapel, Hampstead, Brentford, Fulham, Greenwich, Lewisham, Stepney, Wandsworth, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Salford, West Derby (Liverpool), and other important unions and parishes.

The order is signed John Trollope (president), S. H. Walpole, B. Disraeli, and countersigned Courtney (secretary).

THE MILITIA.

Salop.—A meeting of the deputy-lieutenants and magistrates for the subdivision of Shrewsbury was held on Tuesday. The communications from the Secretary of State, and the regulations of the War-office as to the qualifications of the volunteers, were read and explained. The population of each parish was stated, and a calculation made of the number required in each parish, being about one man out of every 178 of the male population. Mr. Peele, the subdivision clerk, stated that in several places the noblemen and gentlemen employing eligible persons had expressed their willingness to take back their servants or labourers volunteering, after the period of training and exercise, and which had a beneficial effect; and it was hoped that, as far as it conveniently could, the practice should be here adopted; also that it was understood a sum not exceeding 5s. would be allowed by the Government for every fit man brought for enrolment.

Devon.—It does not appear likely that the efforts of the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Devon, the Earl of Fortescue, and his deputy-lieutenants, in respect to promoting enlistments in the militia, are likely to be productive of any practical results. In several parishes in the neighbourhood of Plymouth not a single man can be got to entertain the notion of enlistment. The guardians of the poor of the parishes in the Plympton St. Mary Union have engaged to have displayed the placards relating to the enlistment in their several parishes, but so full are all the young men's hands of employment of one sort and another, that it is hardly to be expected any of them will put down their tools to take up the sword and musket.

Suffolk.—It appears highly probable, notwithstanding the temptation of the 6*l.* bounty, that the number of men required for the East Suffolk regiment of militia will not be raised without recourse to the ballot. At first it was determined to restrict the machinery for enlistment to the various boards of guardians, but under this system there was scarcely a volunteer forthcoming, and it has been found necessary to call in the aid of the staff sergeants and the drum. The sergeants, accompanied by the drummer, beat up for recruits in Ipswich, and by Monday night last they had succeeded in persuading between forty and fifty young fellows, mostly persons without regular work, to offer themselves for enlistment. On Tuesday these parties were submitted to medical inspection, and out of the whole number only thirteen were passed as fit for service. The number to be raised by the month of October is 570, and up to the present time scarcely a single man has been enlisted in the rural districts.

City of London.—During the transaction of the ordinary business on Wednesday at Guildhall, about thirty young and able-bodied men were sworn in for the City of London Militia. The total number required for this district is 600, and from the facility with which volunteers are being obtained, it is anticipated it will not be necessary to put in operation the ballot. Of the number offering themselves for enlistment only one was rejected, and that because he was too drunk to be sworn.

Middlesex.— Since Monday last upwards of seventy young men have been sworn in at Marlborough-street police-court to serve in the East and West Middlesex militia. The term of service is five years, and the whole of them received 10s. each, being the first instalment of the bounty of 6*l*.

Meeting of Middlesex Magistrates.—On Thursday a meeting of the magistracy of this county was held for the despatch of county business. The report of the Committee for Accounts and General Purposes was read. In it they recommended the payment of the coroners' accounts, as follows:—Mr. Baker, 139*l.* 1s. 5d.; Mr. Wakley, 647*l.* 6s. 8d.; Mr. Bedford, 105*l.* 4s. 5d.; and Mr. Higgs, 11*l.* 10s. 6d. Mr. Kemshead, in moving the adoption of this recommendation, said (referring to Mr Wakley's account), that the court most likely would be struck with the very large amount of this account, which was owing to the unusual number of witnesses who had been called to give evidence on these inquiries. This expense was one over which they had no control; they had only power over the coroners' fee, and not over the other charges. Mr. Wilkes made a proposition (which was adopted), to the effect that the subject should be referred to the Committee of Accounts and General Purposes, who should report to the court whether any measures could be adopted to prevent the augmentation of the coroners' charges, and particularly with regard to the payment of witnesses, who appeared to be unusually numerous and expensive. A report from the Committee of Visitors of the Colney Hatch Asylum was read. They recommended the acceptance of a tender for the loan of 3,000*l.* for the purposes of the asylum, and also the exchange of a piece of land. It appeared from a report by Mr. Tite, that that gentleman had surveyed a piece of ground belonging to the asylum, which was situated on the opposite side of the Great Northern Railway, and contained twenty-one acres of land suited for building purposes. He had also surveyed the piece for which they proposed to exchange it, which consisted of thirty-five acres of meadow land abutting on the asylum, and well suited for agricultural purposes, and he strongly recommended them to effect the exchange. The suggestions of the committee were then adopted. The usual prison reports were read. From them it appeared that the number of prisoners in confinement in the House of Correction, Coldbath-fields, was 1,285; namely, 720 felons, 390 misdemeanants, and 175 vagrants. In the House of Correction, Westminster, 771; namely, 243 males, and 528 females. After some further business, the court adjourned.

COUNTY AND BOROUGH LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—From a Parliamentary paper, just published, it appears that the receipts received on account of the several county and borough lunatic asylums, in the year ending the 31st of December last, in England and Wales, amounted to 236,724*l.* 4s. 2¼d. The expenditure was 207,017*l.* 18s. 6¼d. The balance in the hands of the treasurer at the end of the year was 33,584*l.* 3s. 8½d. and there was due to the treasurer 3,877*l.* 18s.

POOR-RATES.—According to a return to the House of Commons, just printed, the annual value of property assessed to the poor-rate in England and Wales and Ireland in 1842 was 75,891,575*l.*; in 1847, 80,515,413*l.*; and in 1851, 79,280,671*l.* For the poor-rate and county-rate in 1851 there was voted by Parliament, or otherwise paid out of the public funds, the sum of 391,500*l.* The county-rate is paid out of the poor-rate.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

A QUESTION not unlike that which was recently litigated in the case of The Great Central Gas Consumers' Company, was raised before Vice-Chancellor TURNER in The Attorney-General and the Sheffield United Gas-light Company v. The Sheffield Gas Consumers' Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 341. That was an application by a gaslight company for an injunction restraining a subsequently formed company "from taking up the pavement, obstructing the public use of the streets, and damaging the pipes of the old company." The new company was projected late in 1851, of which the old company had full notice, and early in 1852 was completely registered. The old company filed a bill for an injunction early in April, but the Court, on the ground that the matter was of a public nature, refused to interfere. On this the old company dismissed their bill, and, having obtained the sanction of the Attorney-General, filed an information and new bill, and then moved for an injunction in the above terms. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the breaking up of the streets amounted to nuisance, but said that, as it was only of a temporary nature, the Court would not interfere. With regard to the question whether the laches of the plaintiffs (who, knowing the intention of the new company so long back as the autumn of 1851, did not interfere until April 1852), disentitled them, the Court would construe that as such an acquiescence as deprived the plaintiffs of all title to relief in equity, and they must, therefore, be remitted to their remedy at law. The Vice-Chancellor said—"Upon the effect of lapse of time, I adopt most fully Lord ELDON's opinion in The Attorney-General v. Cleaver, 18 Ves. 211, and The Attorney-General v. Johnson, 2 Wils. 87, where I find his lordship saying that as there has been considerable delay without applying to the Court for protection, the Court would not consider the party entitled to the extraordinary assistance of a Court of Equity, but would leave him to his legal remedy." The Court furthermore here drew a distinction between cases of permanent, and others, such as this, of temporary, mischief. This is a remarkable instance of the danger of slumbering over rights for even a comparatively short space of time in such cases as these. "Whatever," said the Vice-Chancellor, "might have been done at an earlier period, I think lapse of time alone would be a sufficient ground to justify me in declining to exercise the summary interference of the Court.

WINDING UP.

Two cases, under the Winding-up Acts, require a passing notice. The first is that of Re The Great Western Extension Atmospheric Railway Company and the Winding-up Acts, Ex parte Wryghte, 19 Law T. Rep. 342, in which an important point as to whether the MASTER has jurisdiction, where a company is ordered to be wound up, to take cognisance of a claim not alleged to be due from the company, qua company, but only from individual members of it. It was held by the LORDS JUSTICES, on appeal from the decision of the MASTER, that the latter had no jurisdiction, under the order for winding up, to take cognisance of such a claim. The other case is that of The Grand Trunk, Stafford, and Peterborough Railway Company v. Brodie, 19 Law T. Rep. 335, which has been under litigation in one shape or another these seven years. The points raised and decided cannot be more tersely stated than they are given in the head-note, to which reference should be had. With regard to the effect of the order for the prosecution of the suit by the official manager, who, when substituted, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, s. 53, for the original plaintiff, is empowered and directed "to prosecute such suit or proceedings as if it had been commenced by him," the VICE-CHANCELLOR thus expressed his opinion of the meaning of those words:—"What the official manager has to make out to entitle him to maintain the suit is, that he had a better right than the original plaintiff. I am of opinion that the official manager had no better right when he became plaintiff than the original plaintiff had; but the moment he took the suit upon himself, he adopted it with all the infirmities attached to it, and by these he must abide. According to the provisions of the section, he was thenceforward to prosecute the suit in the same manner and with the same effect as if it had been commenced by him as plaintiff, under the Act. What he is to prosecute is the original suit, and by that, or by any amendment of it, he must, in my opinion, abide. To construe the words of the section, 'as if the suit had been commenced by him,' as freeing the suit from objections to which it would have been open if carried on by the original plaintiff, would lead to the most palpable injustice. If that is to be the construction put upon these words, defendants might find themselves called upon at the hearing of the cause to encounter equities which they would have had no opportunity of meeting. It would, in my opinion, require the strongest proof of such an intention on the part of the Legislature, to warrant the Court in adopting this construction, as contended for by the official manager. I find nothing in the Act which at all points to the conclusion that the Legislature had any such intention."

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

EVERY successive number of our journal, at this season especially, when space and leisure offer for reporting complex, lengthy, and delicate points, offers cases of interest in Real Property Law. The first we are now called upon to notice is that of Hughes v. Williams, 19 Law T. Rep. 341, before Lord Chancellor TRURO, on appeal against a decree of Vice-Chancellor WIGRAM. It involved questions of settlement and covenants against incumbrances. A. who was seised in fee of four estates, mortgaged two of them, and afterwards executed a settlement, on his marriage, of the mortgaged estates, and of one of the others, under which he took a life interest, with remainder to his son B. in tail. There was a covenant in the settlement by A. against incumbrances, but there was no recital shewing that there were any incumbrances. A. afterwards mortgaged the fourth estate, and took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act. Soon afterwards a judgment-creditor, being also equitable mortgagee of a mining lease on one of the estates, filed a bill against A.'s assignee and B. the tenant in tail, and against the other incumbrancers, praying a sale in satisfaction of the judgment-debt, and of what the plaintiff might pay in discharge of prior incumbrances, subject to the estate and interest of B. under the settlement. It was held, reversing the decision of the Court below, decreeing foreclosure against B., that the settled estate must be regarded as exonerated from incumbrances as between A. the tenant for life, and B. the tenant in tail, and that the plaintiff was subject to the same equities as A. the settlor, and that the judgment being of a later date than the settlement, B. the tenant in tail, was not affected by such judgment. The Court furthermore held, reversing in like manner the decision in the court below, that more than six years' arrears of interest previous to the filing of the bill, of a legacy made an incumbrance on the estates devised by the testator (who died in 1810) to A. could not be recovered. The next case for review raised a question whether legacy duty was payable under the following circumstances. Lawrie v. Clutton, 19 Law T. Rep. 343. In that case, a testator gave several specific legacies, and devised real estates to his wife, and real and personal estate to trustees, in trust for his wife, for life, with remainder over. He also gave a legacy of 10,000*l.* for the benefit of his daughter and her children. At his death, large sums of stock stood invested in the joint names of the testator and his wife; but his estate being insufficient to pay certain specialty debts and the legacies, the wife, who survived, and was his executrix, transferred to the trustees of the wife a large portion of the stock standing in the joint names, for the payment of the debts and legacies, including the 10,000*l.* bequeathed to the daughter. The Stamp Office having made a claim for legacy duty on the 10,000*l.* it was held by the MASTER of the ROLLS, that under the statutes 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, and 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, "upon which alone," observed the Court, "any question could arise in this case," no legacy duty was payable. It may be well to note this case in Hughes's, Tilsley's, or any other edition of the Stamp Acts.

The effect of a will upon an equity of redemption in mortgaged hereditaments, was considered by Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY in Plowden v. Hyde, 19 Law T. Rep. 348. In that case a testator, who had the equity of redemption in certain mortgaged hereditaments, made his will devising that estate, and any other which he had contracted to purchase, to trustees upon certain trusts for certain persons, one of whom was his heir-at-law. He subsequently took a reconveyance of the hereditaments in the usual form to exclude the dower of his wife, and with remainders over: the Court held, that those hereditaments of which he had obtained the reconveyance did not pass by the devise in his will. It was furthermore held (to follow the judgment), that to put the heir to his election, the testator's intention to devise or dispose of such estate or interest must clearly appear by his will; and this will not disclosing such intention, the heir-at-law was not to be put to his election between the estates thus descended to him, and a share of the produce of the estates directed to be sold, and to which he had become entitled.

CONVEYANCING COSTS.

YOUR correspondent "W." from Stockton is very shortsighted. He says, "It is customary in the North, in all conveyances, mortgages, &c. to charge 1*l.* per skin for drawing, and 10s. per skin for engrossing, and nothing for fair copy." Together 1*l.* 10s. per skin. Now "a skin" consists of fifteen folios, which, charged at the rate of 1s. per folio for drawing, 4d. per folio for fair copy draft, and 8d. per folio for engrossing—together 2s. per folio,—the accustomed charge here, and I believe the correct one, amounts to the same sum,—1l. 10s. per skin. The best authority I know is Dax's Book of Costs, edit. 1847, pp. 461, 462. S.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Sir,—I beg to refer your correspondent "M." in last week's Law Times, to the case of Roberts v. Wyatt, 2 Taunt. 278, where it is laid down that "the property in the abstract, after delivery to the purchaser, is vested in him whilst the contract is in fieri, that is, while it is going on towards completion, or until it is abandoned or rescinded; from which time either the purchaser is absolutely entitled to the abstract, or it reverts to the vendor if the contract cannot be completed."

I beg also to refer him to Wood v. Court, Hil. Term 1827, V. C. where it is decided "that the purchaser may, if he please, retain any opinion which he has taken upon the title, or he may erase any observations or opinions which have been written upon the abstract, so as to debar the vendor from reaping any advantage from them, unless, as he is entitled to do, he claims from the vendor the expenses of such observations or opinions; in which case it seems but reasonable that the vendor should have that for which he is bound to pay." COUNTY COURTS.

ASSISTANT CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—At this time, when the system and effects of the County Courts, as they are at present constituted, or may be affected by future legislation, are so much under consideration, any communication respecting the details of the work to be done in the office of the assistant clerk (which, it appears to me, has not been by any means fairly estimated by those who have fixed the mode and rates of remuneration) may be serviceable.

I therefore venture to take upon myself to write to you upon this subject, trusting you will think it sufficiently important to warrant the insertion of my communication in your paper, or that you will in some way take notice of our position, and advise us how to act with a view of obtaining its amelioration; as I feel convinced that there are many assistant clerks throughout the country who will concur generally in the remarks I have to make, and who, I hope, will signify their concurrence to you, and thus confirm me in my observations.

I believe that there is now scarcely a district in which the clerk has not found it highly desirable, if not absolutely necessary, from the peculiar nature of the office, to appoint a solicitor rather than a non-professional person to fill the office of assistant clerk. My district is one of the smaller ones, and the principal solicitor in this town having resigned the appointment with some feelings of disgust, I, being a young solicitor wanting employment, was induced to accept the same (thinking it a possible means of introducing other business), the clerk having liberally agreed to allow me the whole of the fees up to a certain amount, which, I fear, there is little chance of their exceeding.

In the first place, I consider that the general system of paying the clerk by a progressive poundage on the amounts for which process is issued, is not founded upon just and fair principles, and however applicable to larger and more important districts (where, perhaps, upon an average taken of the whole clerks' fees, a fair remuneration is found to accrue for each particular proceeding), does not at all afford an adequate return for the work done in smaller districts, particularly agricultural ones, where the County Courts are perhaps equally useful, but are not made available for such large debts as the larger ones; for when it is considered that there is precisely the same amount of labour required, and not much less responsibility incurred, in issuing any process for 10s. as there is for 10l. it seems to me that, according to the present system, the mode of paying the assistant clerk (whose labour and responsibility are so little affected by the difference in the amount for which the process is issued) by fees depending on such amount, is manifestly inapplicable and unjust in its operation in small districts, at any rate. For example, the fee on issuing an execution for 10s. is 2d. and for 10l., 1s. 8d.; the moiety only of which, after deducting at the rate of 5 per cent. for the high bailiff, goes to the clerk; so that the latter gets for entering and issuing an execution in duplicate in the one case, a fraction of 1d. and in the other about 9d. which I fancy the most resolute free-trader would consider as scarcely sufficient in either case. There is, it appears to me, far more responsibility attached to issuing an execution than a summons; while in the latter case there is no poundage below 7d. but in the former it descends to 2d.

The accounts are kept by double entry, and require so much and such strict attention and accuracy, even in a small district, as to demand almost the exclusive application of a person of some intelligence.

Now, Sir, when you consider, in addition to the above, that for the emoluments here stated an assistant clerk, if an attorney, is debarred from practising in the court; is bound to attend personally at the office day after day, all the year round (unless he keep a clerk at a considerable personal expense, when otherwise it would be unnecessary, whose salary the whole clerk's fees would in some districts, as in mine, be scarcely sufficient to pay); and is thus prevented from moving about on his other business: when you consider that for some matters, including intricate monthly, half-yearly, annual, and occasionally other returns, to be made in duplicate, the clerk gets no fees at all, I think you and your readers must conclude that at present the duties of the office of assistant clerk have not been at all fairly and adequately provided for. Every labourer is worthy of his hire; but I am convinced that under the present system the emoluments of many of the County Courts are not enough to repay a sufficiently intelligent and respectable professional or non-professional man for necessarily giving the greater part, if not the whole, of his time and attention to the business of the County Court office. Apologising for the length of this letter,

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Summary.

Equity Practice.—A point of practice under the Trustee Act, worthy of note, was settled in Torbuck v. Hewitson (a lunacy cause), 19 Law T. Rep. 312. In that case the legal estate of a married woman in customary freeholds was vested in a lunatic trustee, in trust for her during the joint lives of herself and husband, for her separate use, without restriction as to alienation or anticipation; remainder, in case she survived her husband, to her absolutely; but in case she died in his lifetime, then to such uses as she should appoint; and no trusts were ordered in default of appointment. She mortgaged the estate by deed duly enrolled under the Fines and Recoveries Act. The Lord Chancellor, on a petition under the Trustee Act, ordered the legal estate to be vested in the mortgagee.

Common Law.—A question whether an apothecary having only an extra-urban license, qualifying him to practise anywhere except in London and ten miles around, could maintain an action for services rendered within that limit, came before Talfourd, J. at Nisi Prius, in Wadsworth v. Collins, 19 Law T. Rep. 351. The learned Judge reserved the point, but expressed for himself a strong opinion that the apothecary could maintain the action under such circumstances. He also held that proof of the license must be given, it being put in issue by a plea therein pleaded of payment into court as to part, and non-assumpsit as to the residue. In Coggan v. Warwicker, 19 Law T. Rep. 350, which was an action for use and occupation, the following question of liability was settled, so far as it goes by a Judge at Nisi Prius. In that case A. and B. agreed that A. should occupy B.'s warehouse for five years, at 75l. a year, and as much more as half the profits made by A.; and that an agreement in writing should be drawn up. A. was let into possession without any agreement, and with a view to the intended agreement; but when the written agreement was drawn up, he refused to sign it. Held, by Erle, J. that A. was liable for the time during which he had occupied the warehouse. In Nicholls and Wife v. Brookes, 19 Law T. Rep. 351, an opinion was expressed by Williams, J. at Nisi Prius, that in an action by husband and wife, the wife is a competent witness where she is the meritorious cause of action. This was, however, objected to, and his lordship noted the objection.

PARTNERSHIPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—Will you permit me to ask for information upon the following point, which some of your readers may be disposed to give? In cases of partnership between solicitors, the senior partner ofen stipulates for an annuity to be paid to his widow for a certain number of years. I wish to know how the amount and the number of years are usually determined. For instance, supposing the senior partner, at his death, were drawing out as his share of the business 1,000l. per annum. Then if the whole of the business producing this sum continued to the survivor, what would it be equitable for him to pay in the shape of annuity to the widow, and for what length of time? And if the partnership were to be for, say ten years, should not the amount of the annuity vary according to the time of the death of the senior partner, at the beginning or towards the end of such ten years? A third point affecting the question is, as business often dies with the partner who brought it, should not the amount and duration of the annuity be made contingent upon the amount of the senior partner's business surviving and continuing with the survivor? Information from any of your readers on these three points will much oblige

"ARTICLED CLERKS' CORRESPONDING SOCIETY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The proposition of "A Law Student," in No. 491 of your valuable journal, is one that in my opinion ought to be universally responded to by all the articled clerks in this country; and I must say that if such a society were established, and all would co-operate with good will, it would be greatly beneficial to its members. We have a society of law students here, of which I act as secretary; and I am confident that it effects much good, giving a stimulus to all its members to study more earnestly than they otherwise would. I hope many articled clerks will respond to this call, and that ere long I shall see a further announcement in your columns that such a society is in the act of formation.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ASSURANCE CHRONICLE.

Equitable Assurance Company.—A general quarterly court of the insurers was held on Thursday, at the offices, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars. The actuary, A. Morgan, esq. read the general cash account for the midsummer quarter, 1852, which exhibited the following receipts:—On new policies, 1,063l. 15s.; for entrance money, policy money, extra premiums, commuted premiums, 1,078l. 6s.; annual premiums on old assurances, 57,870l. 8s.; forfeits, 36l.; dividends on stock, 33,000l.; interest on mortgages, 27,508l. 19s. 7d.; making a total of 120,557l 8s. 7d. Produce of stock sold, 137,987l. 10s. and 79,150l. with the balance of last quarter of 27,551l. 7s. 1d. made a total of receipts of 365,549l. 5s. 8d. The "expenditure" was—Claims paid on 51 policies on 13 lives, 77,725l. 17s.; additions to those claims, 85,803l. 19s; annuities to claimants, &c. 139l. 4s.; income-tax on stock and mortgages, 1,761l. 16s. 9d.; returns of premiums and forfeits, 176l. 1s. The disbursements of management, including income-tax on salaries, directors' allowances, auditors, &c. were 3,188l. 10s. 6d. making a total payment of 169,693l. 8s. 3d. Cash paid for seven policies on five lives surrendered, 10,122l. 3s.; for additions surrendered, 6,233l. 9s.; invested on mortgages, 143,270l.; balance on the 30th of June, 36,225l. 5s. 5d.; making the total of 365,549l. 5s. 8d. The property in hand consisted of 3,955,000l. in the Three per Cents., 10,000l. in Exchequer Bills; out on mortgage, 4,022,114l. 18s. 8d.: making nearly eight millions. The chairman having explained the various items in the account, Mr. Woollaston suggested some steps for the further increase of the business, which was supported by Sir A. Grant, and the chairman promised that the suggestion should be considered. After further explanations of items, in which Mr. Beddome and other holders took part, and with which all present seemed satisfied, the meeting broke up.

MORTGAGE DEBENTURES.

THE plan we have suggested for relieving the landed interest by facilitating mortgages and making them more marketable, is attracting some notice without as well as within the Profession. An influential contemporary among the newspapers has reproduced the scheme with very slight alterations, and has recommended it as one of the best remedies for the grievances of which landowners complain. So far from finding in it any unanticipated difficulties, the more it is considered the more practicable does it appear. Objections have been urged by various correspondents, but all of them resolve themselves into this—how is the mortgage to be called in if the lender wants his money?

Now this objection proceeds entirely on the assumption that a mortgage debenture will be nothing more than a mortgage deed. You cannot take a mortgage deed into the market and raise money upon it, or at least any sum approaching its actual value, because before the purchaser can realise it, there must be a formal transfer of it to him, with all its cost, and then a foreclosure, or a sale. But a mortgage debenture will be transferable by endorsement; it will be payable to the holder; and although, in fact, if it were necessary to realise the loan by resorting to the land, there must be a sale of it in due form of law, yet in practice this will not be necessary, and for the same reason that permits bills and notes to be transferred for their full value. A bill of exchange is not money, it is of no worth in itself. Before it can be turned into money in the last resort, an action must be brought, with nothing but the personal responsibility of the parties as the ultimate security. Yet does not this deter persons from taking it as money, from advancing money upon it, or from buying it; nor does it prevent the holder for the time being from obtaining advances upon it at the very lowest market rate of interest. Does it not appear strange that the owner of a mortgage cannot so readily sell or pawn it, or obtain a loan upon it, at so low a rate of interest as the owner of a bill of exchange? It ought not to be so. A mortgage should be a better security, and therefore should have a preference in the money market. That it has not such, but on the contrary, is less available, must be owing to some defect in the law that regulates mortgages. If they could be sent into the market as easily as bills, they would have a preference there. Is it not possible to do this? We have shewn that it is. Why should a mortgage be less marketable because it has a security beyond that of a bill of exchange? But then, say the objectors, if there are several debentures, and the holder of one wants his money, how is he to sell the land without the concurrence of the others? This would be a difficulty, indeed, if the mortgage were made payable at any time. But that is not our design. All such mortgages would be made for a term of years, and the debentures would become payable as against this estate at the end of that term. In the meanwhile, by passing from hand to hand in the money market by endorsement, they would always be convertible into money by the holder at the price of money, and the value of the security for the time being. The parties through whom it passes would be liable as endorsers, and the land would be the ultimate resort should the mortgagor fail to meet the payment at the expiration of the term, a state of things that would rarely occur, as then he might renew the loan or take up a fresh mortgage. Only one real difficulty has presented itself to us, and that is, a provision for the payment of the interest. Two or three plans have been proposed to us for this purpose, but neither of them quite satisfies us. One of them is sufficient, should no better be suggested, but it is not as perfect as we should desire, and therefore we shall feel much obliged to any of our readers, who may give a little thought to the subject, if they will communicate to us any plan that may occur to them for securing the regular payment of interest, at an appointed place, without imposing upon the holders of the debentures the trouble of collecting it from the mortgagor. This difficulty overcome, and we have no doubt that we shall be enabled to meet it satisfactorily, the very important object so long desired will be accomplished, and landed securities will be as easily negotiated, command as low a rate of interest, and be as convertible into money as any that are now in the market. They would come, in fact, to form a species of stock, and thus prices would be as regularly quoted in the papers as those of the funds, or of railway debentures. The Lawyers would profit by the change as much as the landowners, for it would enormously multiply mortgages by relieving them from all the difficulties that now impede their freedom, and by which they are made the very worst and most inconvenient security a man can hold, instead of being the best, as they ought to be.

LAWYERS IN PARLIAMENT.

THERE can be too much of a good thing. It is a good thing to have Lawyers in Parliament, but there may be too many of them there, and, to be candid, we believe that so it is at present. Nearly one-sixth of the entire House of Commons is composed of Lawyers. This is to be regretted for many reasons, alike for the public welfare and for the advantage of the Profession. Lawyers are for the most part accustomed to take narrow views of things, to be ruled more by precedent than by reason, and in their keen pursuit of words and forms to disregard principles. It has been noticed as a remarkable fact, that very few Lawyers succeed in distinguishing themselves in the House of Commons. Certainly they labour under great disadvantages there. The prejudice of the house runs strongly against them. If a lawyer makes a good speech, it is said that speech-making is his business, and he obtains no applause for it: Lawyers in Parliament never have credit for honesty of opinion or action; they are supposed to be always seeking professional advancement; to be holding a brief on one side or the other, and never to utter their own genuine sentiments. The other members who cannot speak, dislike them for their more ready power of utterance; those who can talk look upon them as intruders who have come with professional objects into a place where personal aims should be excluded. But capacity for legislation and statesmanship make itself heard and respected even against all these disadvantages, and the paucity of such successful ventures confirms the truth of the observation, that good Lawyers are seldom good lawmakers or able statesmen. A mind trained to technicalities, and engaged for years together in contemplation of them, to the exclusion of almost every other occupation, cannot fail to become more or less moulded to its business, and to lose the power of grasping anything beyond the range of its daily avocations.

But even technicalities have their advantages, and some technical minds are useful, nay, necessary to the work of legislation, therefore the presence of a considerable body of practical Lawyers is of great value to a Legislature. Although statesmen and philosophers may invent laws, the technical lawyer alone can put them into working shape; they must give their help to the adaptation of the new rules to the existing system into which they are to be incorporated, and shew how they may be worded so that they may express the precise purpose of the Legislature and nothing else. Twenty or thirty good, sound, sensible, practical, and practising Lawyers are invaluable in so mixed an assembly of amateur law-makers as our House of Commons. But then a hundred of them! That is to overwhelm the Legislature with technicalities. The inconvenience will doubtless be felt severely before the close of the first session.

The Profession, also, will probably find it to be as disadvantageous to themselves as to the public. Lawyers in Parliament are very rarely found to be the supporters of the Lawyers out of Parliament. This fact, so often noted, has occasioned a good deal of perplexity to find a sufficient cause for it. But we take the true reason to be, that professional M. P.'s, conscious of their unpopularity in the House, or out of their profession, endeavour to put themselves into what they suppose to be a better position by appearing as unprofessional as possible, and therefore they shun rather than seek occasions in which they can appear, as Lawyers, vindicating their own order. Whether or not this be the right explanation, the fact is notorious that the Lawyers obtain the least help in Parliament from those to whom they have the most right to look for it, and the multiplication of Lawyer M.P.'s is consequently not even a subject for congratulation among themselves as being calculated to do them service, whether by promoting their interests or warding off the attacks of enemies.

For these reasons, we entertain no hope that the Parliament about to assemble will bear a more friendly spirit towards the Lawyers than that which has expired; nay, we fear that the very increase of our numbers will increase the hostility of the whole Legislature to men in whom the non professional members will see only a power which they suppose, most erroneously, to be banded together for the advancement of the interests of a class against those of the community. True, such a fear is perfectly groundless, as past experience has proved, but nevertheless it will have its effect in stimulating that insane and irrational hatred of Lawyers which shewed itself so powerfully on so many occasions during the last Parliament.

There is another danger, but not so palpable, perhaps, to be apprehended from the seeming triumphs of the Lawyers at the late election. It is not immediate, but it is "looming in the distance." We refer to the not improbable prospect of a reaction. It may be feared that the public, alarmed at the vision of a House of Commons, one-sixth of whose members are Lawyers, will go to the other extreme, and reject all Lawyers, or, at least, view them with such prejudice that they will find the utmost difficulty in procuring admission to the Legislature. This would be a far more formidable evil both to the public and the Profession than any to be apprehended from an excess of Lawyers.

The only way in which these present and future mischiefs may be avoided, will be for the Lawyers to make themselves as useful as possible; to prove by their conduct that they have not sought seats in Parliament with any professional objects; that although talkers by trade they do not intend to drown the House with talk; and that their aims being thoroughly practical, they are entitled to be heard when they have something to say on any subject they really understand, and which falls properly within their province; and thus to give the world assurance that they have not abandoned the practice of the law for the pursuit of the more attractive game of politics with any other purpose than a laudable ambition, public spirit, or conscious aptitude for their new calling.

COSTS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

The Committee of the Judges are now engaged in the task of carrying into practical operation the provision for securing to the Attorneys a fair remuneration for their professional services in the County Courts. It is of great importance that their deliberations should result in a scale of fees that shall carry out the objects with which we first promoted the suggestion which was afterwards adopted by the Legislature. To achieve a permanent [illegible] the scale must be such as w[illegible] not be deemed unjust either to the public or the Lawyers. If too high it will excite the active hostility of the one; if too low, it will be treated with contempt by the others. The Judges to whom the work has been entrusted are conscious of the importance and the difficulty of the duty, and they have sought the advice and assistance of the experienced of the Profession, through the Law Societies. But individuals may lend their aid, and doubtless they will be welcomed if their hints are short and practical. But something more than this is desirable. There should be some public discussion of the question what the scale of fees should be. Perhaps, as the parent of the measure itself, the Law Times might fitly be the vehicle for such a discussion, and any hints appearing here would not only be sure to reach the proper quarter, but they would have the benefit of being reviewed by the whole Profession, and any objections or improvements started before the scale of fees is finally determined. We invite our practical readers to give their thoughts to this subject, of such great importance to them, and oblige us with suggestions for costs in the County Courts which we will endeavour to submit in the best form to the consideration of their legal brethren first, and afterwards, if approved, to the Committee of the Judges.

THE PRACTICAL STATUTES.

The volume of the Practical Statutes of the last Session is at length completed. The delay has been unavoidable, occasioned by the unusual number and importance of the contents, which comprise the Common Law and Chancery Reform Acts, the Copyhold Enfranchisement Act, the Militia Act, the Passengers' Act, and many others which have made the year a remarkable one in the annals of the law. All these required to be annotated with care and copiously. Hence the longer time occupied by Mr. Paterson for its preparation. From the same cause it exceed length by nearly 200 pages the volumes for 1850 or that for 1851, and this has compelled a larger price to be put upon it, although the addition is not equivalent to the increased quantity of matter. The volumes of the two preceding years may still be had to complete sets.

The Practical Statutes for 1850 are in rapid progress. But they contain the new Bankruptcy Act, and as all the cases decided upon its construction are to be given in the notes, their number has made Mr. Hertslet's labour much heavier than had been anticipated. But the product will, we trust, be of proportionate value to the Profession.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

The expense of suits in Chancery will be very much diminished by some very useful provisions, diminishing the number of persons whom it is necessary to make parties to suits. To comprehend this fully, in the words of the Chancery Commissioners, "it is necessary to bear in mind one of the fundamental rules of Chancery procedure under the old system, viz. that a suit shall embrace all parties interested in the result." As, for example, if there were a complaint of a breach of trust, all persons interested in the trust estate must have been parties to the suit, and, subject to some modifications made by orders of the Court, all the persons parties to the breach of trust. It very commonly, therefore, happened that some of the parties liable had died, and that it was necessary to enforce the claim against their estates, in which case their legal personal representatives, and if it were necessary to affect their real estates, all persons interested in those real estates, must have been made parties.

The expense of numerous parties to a suit was greatly aggravated by the mode, under the old system, of making their representatives, on their deaths, or the parties entitled, or on transfer of their interests, parties, by bills of revivor and supplement, which have been very properly abolished in a subsequent part of the Act.

By the 12nd section of the Act, it is not to be competent to any defendant in any suit to take any objection for want of parties in any case to which the rules hereinafter set forth extend.

Rule 1. Any residuary legatee or next of kin may, without serving the remaining residuary, legatees or next of kin, have a decree for the administration of the personal estate of a deceased person.

Rule 2. Any legatees interested in a legacy charged upon real estate, and any person interested in the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold, may, without serving any other legatee or person interested in the proceeds of the estate, have a decree for the administration of the estate of a deceased person.

Rule 3. Any residuary devisee or heir may, without serving any co-residuary devisee or coheir, have the like decree.

Rule 4. Any one of several cestuis que trust under any deed or instrument may, without serving any other of such cestuis que trust, have a decree for the execution of the trusts of the deed or instrument.

Rule 5. In all cases of suits for the protection of property pending litigation, and in all cases in the nature of waste, one person may sue on behalf of himself and of all persons having the same interest.

Rule 6. Any executor, administrator, or trustee [illegible] obtain a decree against any one legatee, next of kin, or cestui que trust for the administration of the estate, or the execution of the trusts.

Rule 7. In all the above cases the Court, if it see fit, may require any other person or persons to be made party or parties to the suit, and may, if it see fit, give the conduct of the suit to such person as it may deem proper, and may make such order in any particular case as it may deem just for placing the defendant on the record on the same footing in regard to costs as other parties having a common interest with him in the matters in question.

Rule 8. In all the above cases the persons who, according to the present practice of the Court, would be necessary parties to the suit, are to be served with notice of the decree and after such notice they are to be bound by the proceedings in the same manner as if they had been originally made parties to the suit, and they may by an order of course have liberty to attend the proceedings under the decree; and any party so served may, within such time in that behalf prescribed by the General Order of the Lord Chancellor, apply to the Court to add to the decree. By the 40th of the New Orders the time within which a party served with notice of a decree under section 42 of the Act may apply to the Court to add to the decree, is to be one month after such service. And by the 41st of such Orders a memorandum of the service upon any person or persons of notice of the decree in any suit under the said section, Rule 8, is to be entered in the office of the Clerk of Records and Writs, upon due proof by affidavit of such service.

Rule 9. In all suits concerning real or personal estate which is vested in trustees under a will, settlement, or otherwise, such trustees are to represent the persons beneficially interested under the trust, in the same manner and to the same extent as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate; and in such cases it is not to be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested under the trusts parties to the suit; but the Court may, upon consideration of the matter, on the hearing, if it so think fit, order such persons, or any of them, to be made parties.

The 43rd section of the Act abolishes a part of the practice of the court established by 39th and 41st General Orders of 25th August, 1841, which has not been found to work well, viz. the practice of setting down a cause merely on an objection for want of parties; for as it was often impossible to ascertain until the hearing of the cause whether any particular person absent from the record was really a necessary party or not, the result of setting down the cause upon the objection for want of parties was frequently merely to reserve the objection until the hearing. In other cases the objection, though apparently valid upon the bill and answer, might be removable by evidence, which was not capable of being brought before the Court until the hearing. Nor does there appear to have been any case in which the Court had exercised the liberty of dismissing the plaintiff's bill on an objection for want of parties, and there were few cases in which it had been able to make a decree saving the rights of absent parties.

Under the old system, the plaintiff was often much embarrassed in cases where a person interested in the subject matter of litigation had died, and from his not having left any property behind him, or from some other cause, no one had thought it worth while to prove his will, or take out administration to his estate, the plaintiff was himself obliged to take proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court for the purpose of compelling some person to administer, or in default, to obtain letters of administration to a nominee limited to the purposes of the suit; and such nominee administrator, who served no useful purpose whatever, was made a formal party to the suit in Chancery, was served with process, put in an answer, and appeared by counsel. (Chan. Comm. Rep. 17). The unnecessary delay and expense occasioned by this practice, is put an end to by the 44th section of the Act, which enacts, that if in any suit or other proceeding before the Court, it appears to the Court that any deceased person who was interested in the matters in question, has no legal personal representative, the Court may either proceed in the absence of any person representing the estate of such deceased person, or appoint some person to represent such estate for all the purposes of the suit, or other proceeding, on such notice to such person or persons, if any, as the Court thinks fit, either specially or generally by public advertisements; and the order so made by the Court, and any orders consequent thereon, are to bind the estate of such deceased person in the same manner in every respect as if there had been a duly constituted legal personal representative of such deceased person, who had been a party to the suit or proceeding, and had duly appeared and submitted his rights and interests to the protection of the Court.

By the next three sections of the Act, a very important change is effected by the substitution of a very summary mode of procedure in certain cases, which will, in all probability, be sooner or later extended to many other cases; for the Chancery Commissioners, whose opinion is of the greatest authority, well observe that the proper progress of Chancery reform is in the same direction; that is to say, to substitute in every case which admits of it the shortest and most summary process, with the least amount of preliminary written pleadings, and to bring the parties by themselves or their counsel, to state their cases with as little delay as possible to the tribunal which has to decide. This coincides also with the opinion of the great philosophical lawyer BENTHAM, whose writings ought no longer to remain unstudied in our Inns of Court, or so little considered by our legislators (see Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, vol. iv. p. 8). Those sections are to the following effect:—Any person claiming to be a creditor, or a specific pecuniary or residuary legatee, or the next of kin, or some or one of the next of kin of a deceased person, may apply for and obtain as of course, without bill or claim filed, or any other preliminary proceedings, a summons from the Master of the Rolls or any of the Vice-Chancellors, requiring the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of such deceased person, to attend before him at chambers, for the purpose of shewing cause why an order for the administration of the personal estate of the deceased should not be granted; and upon proof by affidavit of the due service of such summons, or on the appearance in person, or by his solicitor or counsel of such executor or administrator, and upon proof by affidavit of such other matters, if any, as such Judge requires, he may, if in his discretion he think fit so to do, make the usual order for the administration of the estate of the deceased, with such variation, if any, as the circumstances of the case may require; and the order so made is to have the force and effect of a decree to the like effect made on the hearing of a cause or claim between the same parties: it is, however, provided that such Judge is to have full discretionary power to grant or refuse such order, or to give any special directions touching the carriage or execution of such order, and in the case of applications for any such order by two or more different persons, or classes of persons, to grant the same to such one or more of the claimants, or of the classes of claimants as he may think fit; and if the Judge think proper, the carriage of the order may subsequently be given to such party interested, and upon such terms as the Judge may direct. (Sec. 45.)

A duplicate or copy of such summons previously to the service thereof, is to be filed in the Record Office of the court; and no service thereof upon any executor or administrator is to be of any validity, unless the copy so served shall be stamped with a stamp of such office indicating the filing thereof; and the filing of such summons is to have the same effect with respect to lis pendens, as the filing of a bill or claim. (Sec. 46.) The form of the summons, which is very concise, is given in Schedule (E) to the New Orders.

Any person claiming to be a creditor of any deceased person, or interested under his will, may apply for and obtain in a summary way, in the manner thereinbefore provided, with respect to the personal estate of a deceased person, an order for the administration of the real estate of a deceased person, where the whole of such real estate is by devise vested in trustees, who are by the will empowered to sell such real estate, and authorised to give receipts for the rents and profits thereof, and for the produce of the sale of such real estate; and all the provisions therein before contained, with respect to the application for such order in relation to the personal estate of a deceased person, and consequent thereon, are to extend and be applicable to an application for such order as last therein mentioned with respect to real estate. (Sec. 47.) It is to be regretted that the power of proceeding summarily for the administration of the real estate of a deceased person should be confined to those cases where the trustees have power to sell, and give receipts for the rents and profits, and for the produce of the sale. It is submitted that as real estates are now assets for payment of debts, they should, as personal estate, vest primarily in the executors or administrators of a deceased person, and that the devisees or heir-at-law should stand in the same relation to them, with regard to the administration of real estate for payment of debts, as specific legatees or next of kin stand in towards executors and administrators of personal estate, in suits where personal assets are alone concerned.

Next, with regard to mortgaged estates, the Court may in any suit for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption in any mortgaged property, upon the request of the mortgagee, or of any subsequent incumbrancer, or of the mortgagor, or any person claiming under them respectively, direct a sale of such property instead of a foreclosure of such equity of redemption, on such terms as the Court may think fit to direct, and if the Court so think fit, without previously determining the priorities of incumbrances, or giving the usual or any time to redeem; it is, however, provided that if such request shall be made by any such subsequent incumbrancer, or by the mortgagor, or by any person claiming under them respectively, the Court is not to direct any such sale without the consent of the mortgagee or the persons claiming under him, unless the party making such request shall deposit in court a reasonable sum of money, to be fixed by the Court, for the purpose of securing the performance of such terms as the Court may think fit to impose on the party making such request. (Sec. 48.)

Much inconvenience will be obviated by this section, for, under the old system, where a mortgagee or other incumbrancer instituted a suit for the purpose of realising his security, all the subsequent incumbrancers, who were all separately interested in contesting or reducing his demand, and in rendering their own securities available, were necessary parties to the suit. When the decree in such a suit was for foreclosure, the decree of foreclosure could not be pronounced until the priorities inter se of all the incumbrancers subsequent to the plaintiff had been ascertained; the effect of which was, that the plaintiff's remedy was delayed by the necessity of settling rights between the defendants. This inconvenience does not exist where the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for sale; in such a case the estate may be sold at once, and the plaintiff's demand satisfied; the surplus remaining in Court as a fund to be applied in or towards satisfaction of the claims of the defendants, when ascertained. (Chanc. Comm. Rep. 19.)

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

A CLAIMANT in ejectment may at any time discontinue as to one or more of the defendants by giving notice, and thereupon such defendant may sign judgment for costs. Or one of several claimants may discontinue, by leave of the Court, and thereupon the action may proceed at the suit of the others.

If the claimant do not go to trial within the time allowed to him, the defendant may give him twenty days' notice to proceed to trial at the sittings or assizes next after the expiration of the notice; and if then the claimant fails to proceed to trial accordingly, the defendant may sign judgment.

A sole defendant or all the defendants may confess the action as to the whole or part of the property, by signed notice to the claimant, and thereupon the claimant may forthwith sign judgment, and issue execution for the recovery of possession and the costs. Where one of several defendants defends separately for a portion of the property, for which the others do not defend, he may do likewise in respect of such portion. And if other defendants defend in respect of the same property for which he defends, he may confess the action, and judgment may be signed against him for the costs, and the action proceed against the other defendants.

Before issuing execution on any judgment, it is not to be necessary to enter proceedings on the roll, but an incipitur thereof may be made upon paper, shortly describing the nature of the judgment, and on that execution may issue. But the proceedings may be afterwards entered on the roll, whenever they may become necessary for the purpose of evidence, bringing error, or the like.

Error may be brought in ejectment, as in other actions, after a special verdict, on bill of exceptions, or special case. But execution shall not be stayed, unless the plaintiff in error shall, within four clear days after lodging the memorandum alleging error, or after signing judgment, or execution executed, be bound to the claimant in double the yearly value of the property, and double the costs recovered by the judgment, with condition that if the judgment shall be affirmed, or the proceedings be discontinued, he shall pay such costs and damages as shall be awarded; and the Court may issue a writ to inquire as to the mesne profits and damage by waste committed after the first judgment, and on the return thereof judgment is to be given, and execution issued accordingly.

Every tenant to whom any writ of ejectment is delivered, or to whose knowledge it may come, is required forthwith to give notice thereof to his landlord, his bailiff, or receiver, under penalty of three years' rack-rent of the premises held by him, to be recovered by action at law in any court having jurisdiction for the amount.

In ejectment of a tenant by a landlord, for nonpayment of rent due, a writ for the recovery of the demised premises may be served without any formal demand or re-entry. If it cannot be served, or no tenant be in actual possession of the premises, a copy of the writ may be affixed on the door of any messuage, or on some notorious place on the premises, and this is to be deemed legal service; and then if there be judgment for non appearance, or defendant appear, and it be shewn to the Court by affidavit in the one case, or proved on the trial in the other, that half a year's rent was due and no sufficient distress found, and that the lessor had power to re-enter, judgment and execution shall be had as if rent had been legally demanded and re-entry made. And if the lessee, or his assignee, or person claiming under the lease, shall suffer judgment and execution without paying the arrears of rent and full costs, and without proceeding for relief in equity within six months after execution executed, he shall be barred of all remedy in law or equity, other than bringing error, in case the judgment shall be erroneous, and the lessor shall hold the premises discharged from the lease. But this is not to extend to bar the right of any mortgagee of the lease not in possession, if such mortgagee shall, within six months after execution, pay the rent in arrear and all costs and damages sustained by the lessor, and perform all the covenants and agreements which on the part of the first lessee are to be performed.

If the lessee, or person claiming under the lease, shall, within the six months, proceed for relief in equity, he is not to have an injunction against the proceedings at law unless within forty days after answer made by the claimant in ejectment, he brings into court such sum as the lessor shall in his answer swear to be due, and the taxed costs, to abide the result. And if such proceedings in equity be taken within the time aforesaid, and, after execution, the lessor is to be accountable for so much only as he shall bonâ fide make of the premises from the time of his entering into the actual possession thereof, and if that should happen to be less than the rent reserved, the lessee or his assignee shall, before he is restored to possession, pay the lessor so much as the money so made fell short of the reserved rent for the time that the lessor held the lands. And if at any time the tenant, or his assignee, shall pay to the landlord or lessor the rent in arrear, with costs, the proceedings in ejectment shall be stayed, and if the lessee be relieved in equity, he shall hold the lands demised according to the original lease, without any new lease.

In ejectment against a tenant holding over after expiration of the term or determination of the tenancy by a notice to quit, after lawful demand of possession made, the landlord may, at the foot of the writ, address a notice to the tenant, requiring him to find bail, if ordered by the Court. If then the party appears, the landlord is to produce the lease or agreement, and prove the execution by affidavit, and that the premises were actually held under it, and that the interest of the tenant had expired, and possession been lawfully demanded; and thereupon a summons may issue to the tenant to shew cause why he should not give bail in himself and two sureties, in a reasonable sum, conditioned to pay the costs and damages that may be recovered by the claimant in the action; and if he shall neglect to do so, or shall shew no good cause to the Court to enlarge the time for doing so, judgment may be signed for recovery of possession and costs of suit. At the trial, the claimant is to be permitted to prove for mesne profits, and the jury are to give their verdict upon the whole matter, both as to the recovery of the whole or any part of the premises, and also as to the amount of damages to be paid for mesne profits, and the landlord is to have judgment for the recovery of possession, for costs, and for mesne profits.

Where bail has been given as above provided, and the verdict is for the claimant, the Judge is not to order judgment or execution to be stayed, except upon condition of security being given by the defendant, within four days, not to commit waste or damage, or to sell or carry off crops, &c. from the premises. But the recognisance is to be void if the defendant shall enter into recognisances for error, as before described.

All the recognisances required are to be taken, as are other recognisances of bail, in the Court which the action is brought; they are to be filed in the court, for which a fee of 2s. 6d. is to be paid. But no action or proceeding is to be taken upon them after six months from the time when possession of the premises, or any part thereof, shall have been actually delivered to the landlord.

Where the tenancy expires, or right of possession accrues, in or after Hilary or Trinity Terms respectively, a claimant may, within ten days, serve a writ of ejectment in a special form given in the schedule (No. 13, A), except that it shall command the tenant to appear within ten days after service, and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had as already provided, save only that it shall be sufficient to give at least six clear days' notice of trial to the defendant before the commission-day of the Assizes at which the trial is to be had. The defendant in such action may, however, apply to a Judge to stay proceedings or postpone the trial, and the Judge may make such order as shall seem to him expedient.

Nothing in this Act is to prejudice or affect any other right of action or remedy which landlords may possess, otherwise than as in this statute is expressly enacted.

In ejectment by a mortgagee, where no suit is depending relating to the mortgage, the person having the equity of redemption, and who shall appear and defend, may, at any time pending the action, pay to the mortgagee, or bring into Court, the principal, interest, and costs (to be computed by the proper officer of the courts), and the Court shall discharge such mortgagor or defendant from the same accordingly, and by rule of Court compel such mortgagee, at the costs of the mortgagor, to assign, surrender, or reconvey the mortgaged premises, and deliver up all deeds, &c. to the mortgagor or defendant, or to such other person as he shall appoint. But this is not to extend to any case where the person against whom the redemption is prayed shall, by writing under his hand, or that of his attorney, delivered to the attorney on the other side, insist that the party praying redemption has no right to redeem, or that the premises are chargeable with other or different principal sums, or where the right of redemption is controverted or questioned by different defendants in the same suit, or shall be any prejudice to any subsequent mortgage or incumbrance.

The Courts may still exercise over the proceedings in ejectment the same jurisdiction as hitherto, so as to ensure a trial of the title, and of actual ouster, when necessary, and the provisions of all statutes not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, and applicable to the altered mode of proceeding, are to remain in force, and be applied thereto.

Such are the provisions relating to ejectment. That they are great improvements no reader will doubt. The practice is vastly cheapened and facilitated.

THE LEGISLATOR.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

21. After enfranchisement, the lord may give up to the commissioners all the court rolls—Inspection, &c. thereof.—When and as soon as all the lands held of any manor shall be enfranchised, the lord or other person having custody of the court rolls of such manor may, if he thinks fit, give up and hand over to the said commissioners all such court rolls; and from thenceforth all persons seised of or interested in such lands shall have access to and may inspect such court rolls, and obtain copies thereof, on the payment of such reasonable fees as to the said commissioners may seem fit and proper.

22. Title of lord to be made for the purpose of enfranchisement.—Previous to any enfranchisement under this Act, it shall be lawful for the lord and steward, if they shall see fit, and if there shall be no steward, then for the lord alone, to make a solemn declaration, in such form as the said commissioners shall direct, and to be taken and subscribed as solemn declarations are by an Act made and passed in a session held in the fifth and sixth years of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, chapter sixty-two, directed to be taken and subscribed, stating therein the nature and extent of the estate and interest of the lord in the manor of which he is such lord, and the date and short particulars of the deed, will, or other instrument under which he claims or derives title, and the name and style or other designation or description of the person in whose name the court of any such manor was then last holden, and the date or time of the holding of such court, and the incumbrances, if any, whether by mortgage, judgment, or otherwise, which affect such manor; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, and they are hereby directed to approve of such title for the purposes of this Act, which approval shall be testified under their hands and seal, upon such evidence alone, unless they shall be of opinion that further information is necessary in the respects aforesaid; but if the said commissioners shall consider that such evidence does not fully and truly disclose all such particulars as are necessary, or if no such declaration shall be made, or if the lord shall refuse or decline or fail to give such information and evidence as they shall deem proper and necessary to shew a satisfactory primâ facie title in the lord, or in persons claiming under or in trust for him, and if the said commissioners shall consider either that the title of the lord is not satisfactory, or that the incumbrancers should be protected, then, if they think the justice of the case requires it, they may direct that the enfranchisement consideration shall be invested as hereinafter directed in case of lords under disability.

23. After an application for enfranchisement, tenant may require commissioners to inquire into the lord's title.—In all cases in which the lord shall apply to the commissioners to effect an enfranchisement as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the tenant of the lands so proposed to be enfranchised to require that the said commissioners shall satisfy themselves, in such way and by such evidence as they shall see fit, of the title of such lord to the manor of which the lands are held.

24. Identity of lands.—In cases where the identity of any lands described as to quantity in the court books or rolls of any manor cannot be ascertained to the satisfaction of the valuers, such lands shall be taken at the quantities mentioned in the court books or rolls of the manor, and as to any lands the quantities of which are not specified in the court books or rolls of any manor, the same shall be taken at such quantities as such valuers may determine; and it shall be lawful for the lord of any manor, or for any tenant of any manor, at any time hereafter, in case of any doubt or difference of opinion as to the identity of any lands, to apply to the commissioners to define the boundaries thereof for the purpose of any enfranchisement under this Act or the said recited Acts; and the expenses of identification shall be borne by the party making such application, unless the commissioners shall otherwise direct; and the commissioners shall proceed, in such manner as they shall see fit, to ascertain, identify, and define such boundaries; and such identification and definition of boundaries to be made by the commissioners shall be final and conclusive on all parties for the purposes of any such enfranchisement.

25. As to purchase by the lord in certain cases.—With respect to any land proposed by any tenant to be enfranchised under this Act, in case the lord shall show to the satisfaction of the commissioners that any change in the condition of such land, which but for this Act would or might have been prevented by the incidents or conditions of the tenure thereof, will prejudicially affect in enjoyment or value the mansion-house, park, gardens, or pleasure grounds of such lord, and in case such lord shall by writing under his hand offer to purchase the tenant's interest in such land so proposed to be enfranchised and shall give notice to the tenant of such offer, then, unless the tenant shall accept such offer within twenty-eight days after receiving notice thereof, such land shall remain unenfranchised, unless the commissioners shall think fit to impose such terms and conditions, in case of enfranchisement, as shall in their judgment be sufficient to protect the interests of the lord; and in case the tenant shall within twenty-eight days as aforesaid signify in writing to the commissioners his acceptance of the said offer, such offer by the lord and acceptance by the tenant shall be binding both upon lord and tenant; and in case the lord and tenant shall not within such time as the commissioners shall limit agree on the value of the rights and interest of the tenant, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to appoint a valuer for the purpose of ascertaining such value, or to refer the same to the valuers, if any, then acting in the enfranchisement; and all the costs, charges, and expenses of such valuation and attending such purchase shall be borne by the lord; and when such value shall have been agreed upon or ascertained as aforesaid, the commissioners shall issue a certificate under their hands and seal, which shall state the land which shall have been sold to the lord, and the consideration money for the same, and shall declare that upon payment of the consideration money therein mentioned within a time to be therein limited such land shall at the time of such payment be surrendered or released by the tenant (at the expense of the lord) to the lord, and thereupon such land shall vest in such lord accordingly: provided always, that in case such consideration money shall not be paid within the time limited by the commissioners, or within such further time as the commissioners may have granted in that behalf, and it shall appear to the commissioners that the same shall have remained unpaid by the default of the lord, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to cancel such certificate, and such enfranchisement may be proceeded with as if such offer and acceptance as aforesaid had not been made, and all costs which the commissioners shall certify to have been incurred by the tenant in consequence of such offer, acceptance, and default, shall be paid by the lord to the tenant.

26. Power to lord having a limited interest to charge purchase money on manor, &c.—Provided also, that where the lord of a manor by whom any purchase is hereby authorised to be made shall not be seised in fee simple or fee tail of and in or otherwise entitled to an absolute power of disposition over the manor, it shall be lawful for such lord, with the consent of the commissioners, to raise the consideration for such purchase, and the expenses of the same, by a charge of or upon the same manor, or any lands settled therewith to the same uses, such charge to be made in such form, and upon such terms, and at such rate of interest, as the commissioners shall direct from time to time.

27. After 1st July, 1853, when a heriot shall be due and payable, the lord or tenant may require or compel enfranchisement.—And whereas in many manors heriots are by custom due and payable to the lord by tenants of freehold or customary freehold lands holden of such manors: be it therefore enacted, that at any time after any such heriot shall be due or payable with respect to any such freehold lands on or after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, it shall be lawful for the lord or the tenant to require and compel the extinguishment of all such claim to heriots, and the enfranchisement of the lands subject thereto, in the same way as if such lands were copyhold, and the same proceedings shall thereupon be had as are herein mentioned with reference to the enfranchisement of copyhold lands, or as near thereto as the nature of the case will admit.

28. Declaration to be taken by valuers.—Before any valuer shall enter upon the valuation under this Act, he shall in the presence of a justice of the peace make and subscribe the following declaration (that is to say,)

"I, A. B. do declare, that I will faithfully, to the best of my ability, value, hear, and determine the matters referred to me under the Copyhold Acts.

"A. B.

"Made and subscribed in the presence of

And such declaration shall be annexed to the schedule of valuation, when made; and if any valuer, having made such declaration, shall wilfully act contrary thereto, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

29. As to recovery of interest in enfranchisement considerations.—In case the interest payable in respect of any gross sum of money, pursuant to any award under this Act, or any part of the same, shall be in arrear for thirty days after the same shall become due, it shall be lawful for the person for the time being entitled to receive such interest to levy the same by the same means and remedies and in the same manner in all respects as if the same had been rent in arrear upon a lease for years.

30. As to expense of proceedings under this Act.—The expenses of the proceedings for effecting any enfranchisement under this Act, and all expenses which in the judgment of the said commissioners may be incidental thereto, whether for the proof of title, the production of documents, expenses of witnesses, or otherwise, shall be borne by the party, whether lord or tenant, who shall have required the enfranchisement, but no costs or expenses shall be due or recoverable from any person until the same shall have been certified, under the hands and seal of the said commissioners, or of an assistant commissioner, to have been reasonably and properly incurred; and in case any dispute or difference shall arise as to the amount of such expenses, the certificate of the commissioners or assistant commissioner shall be final, and any person to whom such certificate shall be granted shall have the same means and remedies for the recovery of the sum mentioned therein as are provided by the said recited Acts or by this Act for the recovery of the consideration for an enfranchisement under this Act.

31. How expenses of enfranchisement to be borne where the lord has but a limited interest in a manor, or is trustee thereof.—In every case in which the lord shall require and compel an enfranchisement under this Act, where such lord shall be an ecclesiastical corporation or a corporation sole not having an absolute power of sale, or shall have only a limited interest in the manor or be a trustee thereof, the expenses of the proceedings for effecting such enfranchisement, and all expenses which in the judgment of the said commissioners may be incidental thereto, whether for the proof of title, the production of documents, expenses of witnesses, or otherwise (the amount of such expenses being subject to the approval and certificate of the said commissioners as hereinbefore is mentioned), shall be paid out of the first moneys to be received for any enfranchisement to be effected under this Act, when the consideration for such enfranchisement shall be a gross sum of money, and in cases where such consideration shall not be a gross sum of money then the said expenses shall be charged, together with interest for the same, at the rate of not exceeding four pounds per centum per annum on the said manor or other lands settled or held therewith, in such manner as to the said commissioners may seem fit and proper.

32. How tenants' expenses of enfranchisement are to be borne.—In every case in which the tenant shall require and compel an enfranchisement under this Act, where such tenant shall have only a limited interest in the lands enfranchised, or be a trustee thereof, he shall be entitled to charge the expenses of the proceedings for effecting such enfranchisement, and all expenses which in the judgment of the said commissioners may be incidental thereto, whether for the proof of title, the production of documents, expenses of witnesses, or otherwise (the amount of such expenses being subject to the approval of the said commissioners as hereinbefore mentioned), on the lands enfranchised, and such expenses, and also the consideration money for such enfranchisement, whenever such consideration shall be a gross sum of money, may, by a simple entry on the court rolls of the manor, and for which entry the steward shall only charge such a sum as the said commissioners shall direct, be charged, together with interest for the same at the rate of not exceeding four pounds per centum per annum on the lands enfranchised, in such manner as to the said commissioners shall seem fit and proper: provided always, that any gross sum or rent-charge constituting the consideration for any such enfranchisement shall have priority over any sum so charged for expenses.

33. Confirmation of award by commissioners to be proof of prior proceedings being regular.—The confirmation under the hands and seal of the commissioners of any award, or the execution by the commissioners of any deed or instrument whereby any enfranchisement shall be effected under the said Acts or this Act, shall be conclusive evidence that all the directions in relation to the enfranchisement intended to be effected by means of such award, deed, or instrument, which ought respectively to have been obeyed or performed previously to such confirmation or execution respectively, have been obeyed and performed; and no such award, deed, or instrument shall be impeached by reason of any omission, mistake, or informality therein, or in any proceeding relating thereunto, or on account of any want of any notices or consents required by the said Acts or this Act, or on account of any defects or omissions in any previous proceedings whatever in the matter of such enfranchisement.

34. After confirmation of apportionment, &c. in cases of enfranchisement, the customary modes of descent to cease, and the lands to descend and to be subject to dower and curtesy in like manner as freehold lands—Proviso—Proviso as to gavelkind.

From and after the final confirmation of any schedule of apportionment under the said recited Acts and from and after the final enfranchisement of any lands under this Act or the said recited Acts, the several lands included in any such enfranchisement shall thenceforth cease to be subject to the customs of borough English or gavelkind, or to any other customary mode of descent, or to any custom relating to dower or freebench or tenancy by the curtesy of England, or to any other custom whatever; and all the laws relating to descents or to estates of dower or estates by the curtesy of England which shall for the time being affect and be applicable to lands held in free and common soccage, shall thenceforth affect and be applicable to the lands included in every such enfranchisement: provided always, that nothing herein contained as to curtesy or dower or freebench shall extend or be applicable to the case of any person who shall have been married before such enfranchisement shall have been completed: provided always, that nothing in this Act shall affect the custom of gavelkind as the same now exists and prevails in the county of Kent.

35. Commissioners to have power to suspend proceedings.—Notwithstanding anything herein contained, it shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to suspend any proceedings under this Act for the enfranchisement of any land, where any peculiar circumstances render it impossible, in the opinion of the said commissioners, to decide on the prospective value of the lands to be affected by such proposed enfranchisement, or where any especial hardship or injustice would unavoidably result from any compulsory proceeding: provided always, that when the said commissioners shall so suspend any proposed enfranchisement they shall state the reasons of such suspension in their general report, which shall be laid before Parliament, as directed by the first-recited Act.

36. Power to lord to sell rent-charge.—In all cases in which the person for the time being entitled to the receipt of any rent-charge under the said recited Acts or this Act shall be entitled thereto for a limited estate or interest only, or shall be a corporation not authorised to make an absolute sale of such rent-charge otherwise than under the provisions of this Act, it shall be lawful for such person, with the consent of the said commissioners, testified under their hands and seal, or, in the case of coverture, infancy, idiotcy, lunacy, or other incapacity, with the consent of the husband, guardian, committee, or trustee of such person so under disability, to sell and transfer such rent-charge, the payment for which shall be made in manner hereinafter mentioned.

37. Commissioners to certify the amount of consideration money for redemption.—In every case in which a rent-charge is payable under the provisions of the recited Acts or this Act the commissioners shall, upon the request of the owners of land chargeable with such rent-charge, or any of them, certify under the hands and seal of the commissioners the sum of money in consideration of which such rent-charge may be redeemed; and when it shall appear to the commissioners that payment or tender of such consideration money has been duly made, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to certify that such rent-charge has been redeemed under the provisions of this Act, and such certificate shall be final and conclusive: provided always, that no such redemption shall be effected in the case of rent-charges created before the passing of this Act, under the provisions of the said recited Acts, except with the consent in writing of the person or persons entitled to the receipt of such rent-charge.

38. Consideration money for redemption of sale, how payable.—Where the person entitled to a rent-charge redeemable under the provisions of this Act shall be absolutely entitled thereto in fee simple in possession independently of the provisions of this Act, and shall not be a spiritual person entitled in respect of his benefice or cure, or a corporation prevented from aliening such rent-charge, otherwise than under the provisions of this Act, a payment or tender to the person so entitled of the sum of money certified by the commissioners as aforesaid after six months' notice to the person entitled to such rent-charge shall be deemed a due payment of the consideration money, and in every other case the payment of the sum of money so certified according to the provision hereinafter contained shall be deemed a due payment of the consideration money.

39. Consideration money in cases of owners under disability, how payable.—In all cases in which the person for the time being entitled to any rent-charge subject to be redeemed or sold under the provisions of this Act, or entitled to any gross sum payable by way of compensation for enfranchisement, shall be only entitled thereto for a limited estate or interest therein, or as trustee for sale or otherwise, without power to give an effectual discharge for the same, or shall be under any disability, or shall be a corporation not authorised to make an absolute sale of such rent-charge otherwise than under the provisions of this Act, the consideration money to be paid for the redemption or sale of such rent-charge, or as compensation for such enfranchisement, shall be applied in manner hereafter provided; that is to say, shall, at the option of the person for the time being entitled as aforesaid, be paid into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to his account there ex parte the copyhold commissioners, pursuant to the method prescribed by any Act for the time being in force for regulating moneys paid into the said Court; and such moneys shall remain so deposited until the same be applied to some one or more of the following purposes (that is to say), in the purchase or redemption of the land-tax, or the discharge of any rent or incumbrance affecting the rent-charge in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or the manorial incidents for which the same shall have been substituted, or affecting other hereditaments settled therewith to the same or the like uses, trusts, or purposes, or in the purchase of other lands, to be conveyed, limited, and settled upon the like uses, trusts, purposes, and in the same manner, as the rent-charge for the redemption of which such money shall have been paid stood settled, or in payment to any party becoming absolutely entitled to such money; and such money may be so applied as aforesaid upon an order of the Court of Chancery made on the petition of the party who would have been entitled to the receipt of the rent-charge in respect of which such money shall have been deposited; and until the money can be so applied it may, upon the like order, be invested by the said Accountant-General in the purchase of Three per Centum Consolidated or Three per Centum Reduced Bank Annuities, or in Government or real securities, and the dividends, interest, or annual income thereof paid to the party who would for the time being have been entitled to the rent-charge in case the same had not been redeemed; or otherwise such consideration money may be paid, at the like option of the person for the time being so entitled, to trustees acting under the will, conveyance, or settlement under which such person having such limited interest shall be entitled to or interested in such rent-charge, or to such one or more of such trustees as the said commissioners may approve of and direct, or if there are no such trustees, then into the hands of trustees to be nominated under the hands and seal of the said commissioners; and the money, when so paid to such trustees, shall be applied by the said trustees, with the consent of the said commissioners, in the manner hereinbefore directed concerning any money to be paid for redemption or sale into the Bank of England in the name and with the privity of the said Accountant-General; and upon every vacancy in the office of any trustee appointed by the said commissioners some other fit person shall be appointed by them in like manner.

40. As to consideration money under 20l.—When any consideration money so to be paid as last hereinbefore mentioned shall not exceed the sum of twenty pounds for the redemption or sale of all the rent-charge which shall be redeemable under this Act in any one manor, the same shall be paid, if the said commissioners shall so direct, to the person for the time being entitled to the rent-charge, for his own use and benefit; or in case of coverture, infancy, idiotcy, lunacy, or other incapacity of the person for the time being entitled, then such money shall be paid, for the use of the person so entitled, to the husband, guardian, committee, or trustee of such person.

41. Power to commute or enfranchise at fixed fines or rent-charges.—In any commutation or enfranchisement to be hereafter effected under or by virtue of the said recited Acts, it shall not be imperative to make the commutation fines or rent-charge, or enfranchisement rent-charge, variable with the prices of grain, but the same or any of them may, at the option of the parties effecting such commutation or enfranchisement, or at the discretion of the commissioners, as the case may require, be fixed in money or be made so variable as aforesaid.

42. Tenants may deduct rent-charges, &c. payable to landlord.—Any occupying tenant of any lands to be enfranchised under this Act who shall pay any rent-charge or interest which may become payable under this Act shall be entitled to deduct the amount thereof from the rent payable by him to his landlord, and shall be allowed the same in account with the said landlord.

43. Surrenderee by way of mortgage, &c. to be deemed a tenant for certain purposes.—A surrenderee by way of mortgage under a surrender entered on the court rolls in possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits of land, shall be deemed a tenant within the meaning of this Act, entitled to obtain or join in obtaining and effecting enfranchisement, and redeeming a rent-charge, under this and the said recited Acts, by and with the approbation of the said commissioners; and any money paid by any mortgagee for or in respect of the consideration or costs of enfranchisement or redemption of rent-charge under this and the said recited Acts shall be added to the amount due to him as mortgagee, and the land shall not be redeemable, without payment of such money, with interest thereon.

44. Enfranchisement not to affect previous leases or demises.—Where land enfranchised under this or the said recited Acts was immediately before such enfranchisement subject to any subsisting lease or demise at will or for any greater interest, the freehold into which such estate is so converted shall be the reversion immediately expectant upon such lease or demise at will, and the rents and services reserved and made payable upon such lease or demise shall be incident and annexed to such reversion; and the covenants or agreements, whether expressed or implied, on the part of both the lessor and lessee, shall run with the land and with the reversion respectively; and such enfranchisement shall not prejudice or affect any right of distress, entry, or action accruing in respect of such lease or demise.

45. Not to affect commonable rights in respect of lands enfranchised.—Nothing herein contained shall operate to deprive any tenant of any commonable right to which he may be entitled in respect of such lands, but such right shall continue attached thereto, notwithstanding the same shall have become freehold.

46. Enfranchisement not to affect rights under any will, settlement, &c.—No enfranchisement under this Act shall, except as herein is mentioned, affect the rights or interests of any person in, to, or out of the lands enfranchised under any will, settlement, mortgage, or otherwise, but the right of every such person shall continue to attach upon the lands enfranchised, in the same way, as nearly as may be, as if the freehold had been comprised in and had been devised, conveyed, charged, or otherwise disposed of by the will, settlement, mortgage, or other instrument or disposition under which any such person shall claim.

47. Defective title of lords and tenants.—Provided always, that if any enfranchisement consideration money shall be paid to any lord whose title shall thereafter prove to be bad or insufficient, the rightful owner of the manor or his representatives shall be entitled to recover against such lord or his representatives the amount or value of such consideration money as money had and received to the use of such rightful owner, and interest thereon at the rate of five pounds per centum per annum from the time of such title so proving to be bad or insufficient; and that if any tenant or person claiming to be tenant shall, after payment by him of any enfranchisement consideration money, be evicted from the lands enfranchised, by an adverse claimant, such tenant or person shall be entitled to claim the repayment of such consideration money against the lands enfranchised, and the amount thereof shall be a charge upon the lands enfranchised, and shall carry interest at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum from the time of such eviction.

48. Act not to extend to mines or minerals, &c. nor to copyholds for lives where tenants have not a right of renewal.—No enfranchisement under this Act shall extend to or affect the estate or rights of any lord or tenant in or to any mines, minerals, limestone, lime, clay, stone, gravel, pits, or quarries within or under the lands enfranchised, or within or under any other lands, or any rights of entry, rights of way and search, or other easements of any lord or tenant in, upon, through, over, or under any lands, or any powers which in respect of property in the soil might but for such enfranchisement have been exercised, for the purpose of enabling the said lord or tenant, their or his agents, workmen, or assigns, more effectually to search for, win, and work any mines, minerals, pits, or quarries, or to remove and carry away any minerals, limestone, lime, stones, clay, gravel, or other substances had or gotten therefrom, or the rights, franchises, royalties, or privileges of any lord in respect of any fairs, markets, rights of chase or warren, piscaries, or other rights of hunting, shooting, fishing, fowling, or otherwise taking game, fish, or fowl, unless with the express consent in writing of such lord or tenant; and nothing in this Act shall be held or construed to extend to any copyhold lands held for a life or lives or for years, where the tenant thereof hath not a right of renewal.

49. Copies registered at the office of commissioners to be evidence. Copies of and extracts from every award under this Act, which shall be registered under this Act, at the office of the commissioners, purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal of the commissioners, shall respectively be received in evidence without any further proof thereof; and a copy entered under this Act on the court rolls of every such award shall be as available for the purposes of evidence as any entry on the court rolls, and a copy of or extract from any such enrolled copy shall be as available for the purposes of evidence as a copy of an entry on the court rolls.

50. Agreements, &c. to be exempt from stamp-duty.—No agreement, valuation, schedule, award, or power of attorney under this Act shall be chargeable with stamp-duty.

51. Penalty on persons obstructing commissioner, assistant commissioner, valuer, or umpire.—Any person obstructing or hindering any commissioner, assistant commissioner, valuer, or umpire acting under the powers granted by the said recited Acts or by this Act, being convicted thereof before two justices of the peace, shall forfeit the sum of five pounds.

52. Construction of words.—In this Act, unless where the context shews that the words hereinafter mentioned are used in a different or more restricted sense, they shall be understood in manner hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, the word "lands" shall extend to and include messuages, tenements, and corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, subject to any manorial rights, or any undivided part or share therein; the word "valuers" shall apply to and include a single valuer, where authorised to act alone, or any umpire to be appointed as herein mentioned, and also the commissioners or the commissioner or assistant commissioner proceeding upon or with any valuation under this Act in cases where such single valuer, umpire, commissioner, or assistant commissioner respectively shall act in any such valuation; the word "manor" shall extend to such portion or portions of a manor as the said commissioners shall by any order in writing under the hands and seal direct to be considered as a manor for the purpose of effecting any enfranchisement under this Act; the word "lord" shall extend to and include the lord or lords of any manor, whether seised for life or in tail or in fee simple, and all ecclesiastical lords seised in right of the Church or otherwise, and lords farmers holding under them, and any body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and all lords seised of any manor, whether they have or have not an absolute power of selling or disposing of the same; and the word "steward" shall extend to and include a deputy steward or clerk acting as such for the time being.

53. This Act to be deemed part of first-recited Act.—This Act shall be taken and construed as part of the first-recited Act, and the Acts amending and explaining the same; and all the enactments therein contained as to enfranchisements effected under the provisions thereof shall be deemed and taken to apply to enfranchisements under this Act, and to the rights of all parties thereto, as if such enactments were here again repeated, except so far as is hereinbefore otherwise provided for; and all enfranchisements which may have taken place under such Acts or any of them, and all matters and things incident thereto, shall be of the same force, validity, and effect as if the provisions of this Act had been contained in the said first-recited Act.

54. Titles of Acts.—In citing or referring to the said recited Acts and this Act, or any of them, in other Acts or legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Copyhold Acts," or "The Copyhold Act, 1841," "The Copyhold Act, 1843," "The Copyhold Act, 1844," or "The Copyhold Act, 1852," as the case may be.

55. Not to impede enfranchisement irrespective of this Act, or powers in other Acts of Parliament.—Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall interfere with or prevent or impede the enfranchisement of any lands whatsoever which may be enfranchised irrespective of this Act, where parties competent to do so shall agree on such enfranchisement, or the exercise of any powers contained in any other Acts of Parliament.

CAP. LII.

An Act to enable Colonial and other Bishops to perform certain functions under Commission from Bishops of England and Ireland.

(June 30, 1852.)

The new Parliament, it is expected, will be opened by the Sovereign in person, on her Majesty's return from Scotland, in the second week in November.—Morning Herald.

TROOPS IN THE COLONIES.—From a Parliamentary paper just published, it appears that the number of troops employed in our colonial possessions during the year 1850, was:—Officers, 1,675, and men, 38,752, at a cost of 1,329,656*l*. This is exclusive of artillery and engineers.

THE MAGISTRATE,

EXPLANATORY REMARKS BY THE POOR-LAW BOARD ON THE NEW REGULATIONS AS TO OUT-DOOR RELIEF AND LABOUR TESTS.

THE new regulations of the Poor-law Board for the administration of out-door relief, which appeared in the LAW TIMES of last Saturday, introduce most important changes into the administration of the poor-laws; and it is evident from the following, that they are intended as the forerunner of other and more stringent rules relating to out-door relief and labour tests. The Poor-law Board have addressed a letter to the parties concerned in carrying into operation these regulations, which contain the following explanatory remarks:—

The board are of opinion that where there is a commodious and efficient workhouse, it is best that the able-bodied paupers should be received and set to work therein; but, looking to the circumstances of most of the unions and parishes in London, and in some other populous places, they have not thought it expedient in this order to prohibit out-door relief to any class of paupers; at the same time they leave the guardians at liberty to offer relief in the workhouse only in every case in which they may consider it right to apply that test of destitution, or in which they consider that form of relief the most suitable to the necessity of the applicant, and the circumstances of the case.

Art. 1 prescribes that a certain proportion of the relief given to any applicant, whether infirm or able-bodied, shall be given in kind. The object of this provision is to prevent the misapplication of the relief furnished, and the general rule is to be observed whether work is exacted in return for the relief or not.

Art. 2 prevents the practice of delivering a large amount of relief to a pauper at once in cases in which it is intended that the relief shall be for a considerable period, and the amount is consequently more than the immediate destitution of the pauper requires. The object of the board in this article is mainly to save poor persons in the receipt of relief from being exposed to the temptation of expending at once money given to them beyond their present necessities.

Art. 3 is intended to preclude the payment of rent and the allowance of relief in other specified forms which are not recognised by the law, and are at variance with the principle laid down in the statute of 43rd Elizabeth. The cases here indicated are those which cannot without great difficulty be sufficiently investigated and watched by guardians and their officers, and are therefore such as afford frequent occasions of deception.

Art. 4 imposes a restriction upon the allowance of relief to non-resident paupers, with certain exceptions, wherein a discretionary power, subject, however, to the restrictions imposed by the other articles of this order, is left to the guardians. It is obvious that relief to non-resident paupers is a form of relief peculiarly open to abuse, and the Poor-Law Commissioners have, in their minute of the 26th of Janury, 1841, printed in the seventh Annual Report, Appendix, p. 107, fully detailed the general objections and evils arising out of it. The present order, however, in consideration of such relief having in recent times prevailed extensively, only provides for its gradual extinction, and still permits it in certain cases where the denial might be most felt as a hardship. The relief of this kind, which is authorised by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 26, to widows is necessarily excepted from the rule. The guardians will remember that, in cases where the non-resident pauper is irremovable, by reason of the late Removal Act, there is no legal ground for their granting relief, which, if required, should be given by, and charged upon, the union or parish of the residence.

Art. 6 prohibits the allowing relief to an able-bodied male pauper unless he be set to work, and kept at work by the guardians as long as he continues to receive relief. Several cases, however, which are described in Art. 7, are exempted from the compulsory operation of this rule, though in all or any of them the guardians may, if they think proper, upon a consideration of the circumstances, require work to be performed in return for the relief given.

The board must observe that every payment made by guardians to paupers ought to assume the form of relief—not of wages—and consequently should be measured by the wants of the applicant, and not by the quantity of work done. It is, therefore, of primary importance that the paupers should labour under vigilant superintendence, and should be required to execute a task fixed according to their physical ability.

The general consolidated orders provide, in the unions and parishes to which they have been issued, for the appointment, and prescribe the duties of a superintendent of labour (Arts. 153 and 217); and where superintendence is mentioned in this order it is assumed that a superintendent of labour is, or is to be, appointed under one of those orders, or, where they have not been issued, by the general authority of the body administering relief in the union or parish, and the board also assume that he shall be competent, under the direction of the guardians, to enforce the performance of the required task.

Art. 8 directs that the guardians shall, within thirty days after the time when they begin to put this test in operation, supply the Poor-law Board with full information as to the measures they have taken for giving effect to the provisions of this order.

Art. 9. The strict observance of this article is important for the correction of a prevalent error regarding relief by way of loan. It is not unfrequently supposed that there are cases in which, though the guardians may not give relief, they may lend it. But this article points out that what cannot legally be given, must not be lent; and that the power of lending is only to be exercised where the guardians think fit to do something less than absolutely give the relief applied for in cases where the application is lawful. In such cases, and such only, they may lend it; and such loans should never be made without being in due time strictly recovered.

Art. 10 is a proviso upon all that precedes it, with one exception; and it is introduced for the purpose of guarding against any special case which may occur, so that, by means of the concurrent action of the Poor-law Board and the board of guardians, departure in such case from the letter of the regulations may not involve the consequences of a violation of the law. The exception refers to the 3rd article, containing absolute prohibitions which can in no case be relaxed.—I am, &c.

MILITIA ACT.

CAN any of your readers inform me whether attorneys are exempt from service herein. See Gerrard's case, 2 Wm. Bla. Rep. 1123, and Pulling's Law of Attorneys, 175. A SUBSCRIBER.

THE MILITIA.

VOLUNTEERING FOR THE MILITIA AT MANCHESTER.—The overseers of Manchester have only secured 100 volunteers for the militia from the township. Of the number named, twenty have been in the army before, and no doubt are induced to enter by the expectation of promotion on account of their previous drilling and knowledge. The rest are young men, weavers, packers, and others, from the various trades in the town; but the number altogether is below the proportion required for the town, which contains 300,000 inhabitants. In Salford forty have volunteered, the population being about 100,000.

WARWICK.—Upwards of 500 men have accepted as volunteers for the militia in Warwickshire, and considerable numbers are still offering themselves at Warwick, Leamington Coventry, Foleshill, and other places in the county.

LEEDS DISTRICT.—After an adjourned meeting of the Lieutenancy of the West Riding, the volunteers for the militia in the Leeds Division of the West Riding attended at the Corn-Exchange Hotel for the purpose of being attested. The work of attestation commenced at twelve o'clock, and went on rapidly till two, when it came to a stop in consequence of all the blank forms sent down by Government having been used up. The consequence of this was that an adjournment was rendered necessary until next week. Contrary to expectation, the number of volunteers coming forward very great. Those offering are mostly young men of from 18 to 22, and many of them look well adapted for service. In the opinion of those having the management of the enrolment, there is no doubt of the full complement of militiamen required for the Leeds district being raised by volunteering.

MANCHESTER.—The number of volunteers in three of the principal townships of Manchester and of Salford is 169. Chorlton-upon-Medlock township, with 35,534 inhabitants, should give as its proportion of militia, about 98 men, but the volunteers are only 7; Hulme, with 53,470 inhabitants, and 140 men required, has raised 23; Salford, with 63,424 inhabitants, and 176 men required, has raised 38 only; Manchester township, with 186,987 inhabitants, and 516 men required as its proportion, has only 101 volunteers. Total, 339,427 inhabitants, and 930 militiamen required, towards which there are only 169 volunteers.

ESSEX.—This week the process of enrolling volunteers for this force has been going on, meetings of the deputy-lieutenants, attended by Capt. Pearson, acting as adjutant of the regiment, and Mr. Foaker, surgeon, having been held in the different sub-divisions. At present, however, little progress has been made towards raising the number of men required to complete the corps, only about 50 having been enrolled out of 1,049.—Chelmsford Chronicle

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

A CASE on appeal to the LORDS JUSTICES, on a motion to discharge the winding-up order, and an order for calls, is reported in our last number. (Re The Direct Exeter and Plymouth and Devonport Railway Company, ex parte Woolmer and Others, 19 Law T. Rep. 357.) In that case, a member of the managing committee of an abortive railway company, against whom an action had been commenced, obtained a winding-up order, before some other members of the same body, who intended proceeding for a similar order. An official manager having been appointed, proceedings under the order were had, with the assent of the other members of the managing committee. The Court, affirming the order of Vice-Chancellor PARKER, held, that whether the winding-up order was rightly or wrongly obtained, the last-mentioned persons could not move to discharge it. In respect to this question, Lord CRANWORTH said—"We have already intimated in the progress of the argument, that when the affidavits came to be fully stated before us, the first application,—the application by the petition to discharge the winding-up order, which Vice-Chancellor PARKER had refused to discharge,—was entirely without foundation. We intimated pretty clearly the ground on which we came to the conclusion, that the winding-up order, whether rightly or wrongly obtained, was an order obtained practically as much by the present petitioners as by Colonel Ellis. They were both proposing to obtain what they thought, and perhaps rightly thought, was a fit and expedient course to take; and Colonel Ellis got the order first. It was prosecuted by him, but evidently with the sanction and concurrence of the other parties, who took as much part in the proceeding as he took, and, therefore, we are clearly of opinion that they could not say that Colonel Ellis had done wrong in obtaining the order from the commencement. If he had not done it, if he had been a fortnight later, or a week later, they would have got it themselves. Both parties were proceeding to obtain the order. Colonel Ellis obtains it, and the other party cannot now say that the order was wrongly obtained. We think the Vice-Chancellor was right in refusing the present petition to discharge that order, and, consequently, that the appeal from him must be dismissed with costs." In the course of the judgment, it was stated that the attempt to wind up the affairs of this company, and to diffuse the liability amongst other persons than the managing committee, who were eventually found to be liable, cost 3,019*l*. 4s. whilst here was but one creditor, and that for a sum of only 83*l*. With respect to the costs of these proceedings, the Court held that a call on all the members of the managing committee was properly made.

COUNTY COURTS.

ADVOCACY IN COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your attention has been frequently directed to the difficult question of advocacy in the County Courts, and the relative rights and duties of attorneys and barristers, rendered of late somewhat perplexing on account of the public mania for cheap law, and the direct encouragement given by Act of Parliament to the commission of a breach of the peace, hitherto maintained between the higher and lower branches of the Profession (?), which "peace," or mutual good understanding, all who wish well to their honourable calling still desire to maintain. On the one hand it is obviously to the advantage of the judges, and to the barristers, and to those attorneys who do not personally attend the courts, that there should be a Bar, and it would seem almost essential, now that Nisi Prius is nearly defunct, that those who are to succeed to the judicial office should qualify themselves by actual practice in these courts, else verily the armour wherein they trust will grow rusty and unfit for use. On the other hand it may be urged, that the suitors and the present popular attorney-advocates will be damnified—the first by an additional expense, and the second by a diminution of practice. The answer, however, to this objection is not difficult; as to the suitor, inasmuch as it is for the public welfare that none but trained advocates, "learned in the law," should be allowed to aid them in their litigation in order to prevent a confusion of law, so it can be no hardship that they be compelled to employ that order of men who, in an especial manner, qualify themselves for the task, and are privileged by the State to pursue this vocation; in other words, cheapness is not to be obtained by an infraction of order; and as to the attorney-advocate, it must be obvious that, if he should persist in dis- the barrister, he will be liable to be dis- in his turn (by the barrister), or, worse still, the unqualified silver-tongued son of an auctioneer! If one barrier of the Profession be broken down for the supposed benefit of the attorney, it will not be long before the public will call for the annihilation of all exclusive privileges, and raise up cheap and ignorant, yet plausible advocates of their own, to compete with the attorney-advocates.

In my opinion, Sir, the proper remedy for all this mischief is, the establishment of local courts, with unlimited jurisdiction in matters of law and equity, subject to appeal. That giant abuse, the Court of Chancery, contrived to monopolise the jurisdiction over all the property of the country, by the false pretence of having machinery more suitable than the Common Law Courts for investigating accounts, &c. &c. till at length, under one plea or another, the ancient Courts of Common Law became fairly ousted of their jurisdiction. The fatal mistake was in the common law judges refusing to take notice of "trusts;" so that when, by the modern practice of conveyancing, all property is become fettered with trusts, the Court of Chancery has imperceptibly, and by degrees, engulphed everything! The machinery of this Court, and the centralising system, are found to be most ruinous and defective. The machinery is accordingly to be remodelled; but the centralising system, alas! remains. What the country most wants (and that which would renovate the Profession), is efficient local tribunals of law and equity; and to this end all the country attorneys should actively bestir themselves. I might suggest that the twelve country Commissioners of Bankruptcy, and five of the discharged Masters in Chancery, and ten or fifteen extra hands, should form the judicial staff, leaving the Small Debts Courts for small debts.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

Equity.—A case in which a wife's equity to the settlement of a fund which had fallen in from her father, as against the creditors of her husband, was decreed, will be found in Dunkley v. Dunkley, 19 Law T. Rep. 357. There the wife had obtained a divorce from her husband on the ground of adultery, but without alimony. No provision had been made by the husband for his wife and children. On the falling in of the wife's reversionary interest in 1,000*l.* the whole amount was directed by the Lord Chancellor to be settled in opposition to the claim of the assignees of the husband. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chancellor said, that he "set the example in Ireland (Napier v. Napier) of deciding what share the wife ought to have, and that, too, without directing a reference." By this means unnecessary expense and delay were wisely and considerably avoided. His Lordship reviewed, seriatim, all the cases, stating that it was "very desirable the practice should be settled on this point, in order that counsel, when giving advice in chambers in cases of this kind, may advise their clients of the law, and save much expensive litigation, and its attendant delays." His Lordship reviewed the cases, "not because he entertained any doubt of what the rule is, but from anxiety to prevent litigation, and to shew they were not inconsistent with the conclusion he arrived at." These purposes and wishes, and the expression of them, do equal credit to the judgment-seat: they have the effect of removing doubt, meting substantial justice, and creating confidence at one and the same time. In the same case two points of practice were also settled. It ... held, that on an appeal under a claim, there must be in future a deposit as upon a bill; and that the practice as to the opening of an appeal under a claim is the same as that under a bill. In Chant v. Brown, 19 Law T. Rep. 361, one of a class of questions always interesting to the Profession, was considered. The point there raised was, whether documents prepared by a solicitor acting for a party under whose bill the plaintiff and defendant claims, and also for a third party as mortgagee, formed privileged communications. It was held by V. C. Turner that they were such, and therefore the interrogatories relating to them, and the depositions thereon, except for the sole purpose of proving handwriting, must be suppressed. It was also held that such documents as are prepared for the person under whom the plaintiff and defendant claim are not privileged. A very important case to solicitors is Re Gedge, 19 Law T. Rep. 359. From this we learn that uncertainty as to the rules and principles on which orders of course for taxation are obtained is removed, and the practice at length finally settled. The rule there laid down is, that it is incumbent on the party who applies for an order of course to tax a bill, to proceed in the same manner as if he were asking an injunction ex parte; that is, to state every material fact to the officer to whom he applies, in order to enable him to judge whether the case is really one for an order of course, and that if he do not do so, but suppresses special matters of consequence, the Court will not stay to inquire whether, if a special application had been made, an order to tax would have been allowed, but will discharge the order of course, even though he might have been entitled to the order to tax on a special application.

Common Law.—A question as to what constitutes an attestation of a power of attorney sufficient to satisfy the provisions of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, was decided by the Q.B. (dissentiente Erle J.) in Pocock v. Pickering, 19 Law T. Rep. 363. There a warrant of attorney had the following attestation:—"Signed, sealed, delivered, &c. in the presence of me, H. C. who at the request and in the presence of the said J. P. &c. (the parties executing) have set and subscribed my name as the attorney on their behalf attesting the execution hereof, having first read over and explained to them and each of them the nature and contents thereof.—H. C." The Court held (Erle J. dissentiente), that the attestation did not comply with the requisites of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, for want of a declaration that the subscribing witness was the attorney in the transaction for the parties executing the warrant. The refinements of argument in support of the view taken by the Court and offered by the judgment, do not, we confess, satisfy us; our opinion goes rather with Erle J. who thought the attestation sufficient.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

As there are few transactions originating more frequent litigation than bills of sale, it may be well to note a point concerning them in Christie v. Winnington, 19 Law T. Rep. 352. In that case, Williams, J. at Nisi Prius, expressed an opinion that a bill of sale by the sheriff to the execution creditor, in the ordinary form and delivered to him, confers a good title to the goods in the latter without execution by him of the bill of sale. In the same case it was held that the question, whether an execution creditor has received notice of act of bankruptcy sufficient to render his execution ineffectual, was not a question for the judge, but might be sometimes, as in that case, left to the jury. Two points were also raised by counsel in the same case and reserved by the judge; the first, whether it is necessary that the time of the execution of a cognovit under 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, should be made by the attesting witness? The second,—if necessary, then, whether an execution on a cognovit duly filed (the affidavit of the execution creditor not being by the attesting witness) is void as against a bankrupt's assignees? These points, though obviously likely to have frequently arisen in practice, appear to be without precedent, no reference to authorities having been made during their discussion. In Re Roberts, 19 Law T. Rep. 351, some useful points in bankruptcy were decided by a District Commissioner. It was there held, that a solicitor's bill before taxation, formed a good petitioning creditor's debt. It was furthermore held, that the non-attendance by an insolvent trader at a meeting of his creditors, convened during his absence by his clerk at his request, and which he had promised to attend, was an act of bankruptcy.

In Attwood v. Hill, 19 Law T. Rep. 353, which was a case at Nisi Prius, W. a member of a boat-building society, having become the allottee of a boat, held by the committee in trust for the society, subsequently sold it to A. his landlord, who had no notice at the time of the nature of W.'s title. W. having become a defaulter to the society, they seized the boat; it was held by Cresswell, J. in an action of trespass, that the society were justified in the seizure.

The Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery.—Among the improvements effected by the Suitors in Chancery Relief Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 87), is one declaring that the Accountant of the Court of Chancery, from the 28th of October next, shall be paid a salary of 2,700*l.* in lieu of "brokerage" hitherto received by him, in addition to the salary and allowance now made for books and stationery. The "brokerage" heretofore received by the Accountant-General is to be paid by him to the Suitors' Fee Fund.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. KEENE, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before Lord ST. LEONARDS.)
IN CHANCERY.
Saturday, March 13.
WYKE v. ROGERS.

Principal and surety—Promissory note—Evidence.

A. and B. (principal and surety) became bound to C. in the payment of 400l. of which sum, by an arrangement between A. and B. 120l. were paid to the latter. B. repaid to C. that sum, before the time limited by the bond for the payment of the 400l. and C. after that time accepted from A. a promissory note payable at two months for the remainder, on a parol agreement (which was proved) that the note was not to be considered as given in discharge of or as substituted for the bond. A. died insolvent. On a bill filed by surety against creditor for a declaration, that under the circumstances he might become released and discharged from the bond, and for an injunction to restrain creditor from proceeding in an action which he had commenced for the recovery of 280l.: the remainder of the 400l.:

Held, that the surety was not discharged.

When a security is taken, which may be supposed, by postponing the time of payment, to restrict the right of suing within that time, and so to release the surety, parol evidence is admissible to prove that there was an agreement that such security should not have that operation.

If an intention to give what is in effect time be declared by a written agreement, in order that the right as against the surety may be reserved, it is necessary that such a reservation be declared also in writing.

This was an appeal from the decree of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in a suit instituted to restrain the defendant from issuing execution on a judgment at law under a bond against the plaintiff as surety. The question was, whether, in a dealing between the creditor and the principal debtor, the surety (the plaintiff) had been released.

The facts were briefly these:—In May 1843, Seth Evans, of Abergavenny, borrowed of Alice Rogers, the defendant, 400l.; 120l. of which were received by Jacob Wyke, the plaintiff, and the remaining 280l. by Evans. Evans and Wyke executed to the defendant Rogers a bond, bearing date the 18th of May, 1843, whereby they became bound to her in the penal sum of 800l. with a condition for making the same void on payment by them, or either of them, to her of 400l. with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, on the 18th of May, 1844. The bond was executed by the plaintiff as a security only for and on behalf of Evans, so far as regarded the 280l. and of this fact the defendant, at the time of its execution, was aware. On the 20th of January, 1844, the plaintiff paid to the defendant 120l. being so much of the 400l. as he had received. The 280l. received by Evans, and which formed further part and residue of the 400l. were not paid by him at the time stipulated by the conditions of the bond; and on the 20th of January, 1845, he made and delivered to the defendant a promissory note for that sum, payable to her or her order at the Abergavenny Bank. The promissory note was not paid when it became due, and had previously been negotiated by the defendant to Messrs. Bailey and Co. bankers, of Abergavenny, who discounted the same, and who shortly afterwards commenced an action at law against Evans for the recovery of the amount of the note and interest, and obtained a judgment. Evans having executed an assignment of all his estate and effects for the benefit of his creditors, no execution was issued upon the judgment. The defendant subsequently brought an action against the plaintiff and Evans upon the bond, for the recovery from them of 348l. being the sum of 280l. and interest thereon, at 5l. per cent. per annum, to 6th May, 1848. Upon this the plaintiff filed a bill, alleging, inter alia, that the sum of 120l. which he had paid as aforesaid, was received by her in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands which she had as against him upon or in respect of the said bond in respect of 400l. thereby secured, and that at the time he so paid to her that sum she admitted that her claim against him upon the bond was fully satisfied, and that the promissory note which had been so as aforesaid given and delivered to her by Evans was received and taken by her in full satisfaction and discharge of the 280l. the balance of the 400l. secured and made payable by the bond, and was received and taken by her as a security for such balance, and at the time when such promissory note was so made and delivered as aforesaid, the said defendant undertook and agreed that the payment of the 280l. should be postponed and delayed until the time when such promissory note should arrive at maturity, and that the transaction between Evans and the defendant with regard to the making and delivery of the promissory note, and the arrangement between them as to postponing the time for payment, took place entirely without the consent or knowledge of plaintiff, and praying that he might become released and discharged from the bond, and that the same was satisfied as against him, and that the defendant Rogers might be restrained from taking any further or other proceedings at law against the plaintiff in the said action.

The defendant by her answer stated that when the plaintiff paid the 120l. it was distinctly understood between him and the defendant that he was and would be held liable for the remainder of the 400l. if the same was not paid by Evans, and that it was distinctly understood and agreed at the time the promissory note was given, that it was not to be considered as payment of the balance due upon the bond, or substituted for such bond, but that such said bond was to remain in the hands of the defendant, and was to continue to be a security to her for the remainder of the money thereby secured, after deducting therefrom the sum of 120l. which had been paid by the plaintiff; that there was a special understanding that the promissory note should not operate against the power of proceeding for the recovery of the amount under the bond. In the course of the suit, Mr. Price, the solicitor to the defendant, was examined and gave evidence to that effect. The Vice-Chancellor directed a reference to the Master to inquire whether, at the time when the promissory note was given, there was any and what agreement respecting the bond between the defendant and Evans, and under what circumstances the promissory note was given. There was a very lengthened viva voce examination before the Master, who found that the promissory note was not given in discharge of the bond, and that there was a general understanding between Rogers and Evans that the remedy of the former on the bond was not to be taken away, and that there was no written nor, beyond the general understanding, any distinct parol agreement respecting the bond between those parties. On the cause coming on to be heard on further directions, his Honour directed the injunction which had been granted in the cause to stay the proceedings at law upon the bond to be dissolved, and that the defendant was to be at liberty to issue execution on the judgment obtained by her against the plaintiff.

That decree was made in the absence of the plaintiff, and an application was afterwards made to have the cause restored to the paper and to be reheard. To this rehearing the defendant objected, and his Honour, who, on the hearing on further directions, had required the case to be stated to the Court, and had thereupon formed his opinion, refused to interfere.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff now came before this Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is not an appeal, but an application for a rehearing of a cause. I have jurisdiction; my duty being to hear appeals from judgments in the courts below. I, however, feel that this is a case deserving of the consideration of the Court. Here is a litigation on a matter of 280l. which must already have swallowed up a considerable portion of that sum. If I resend it to the Court below, in all probability it will come back again on appeal. I doubt whether I have jurisdiction, but if the counsel for the defendant are willing to consent that I should hear the cause, I will do so, but only under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and on the express understanding that this is not drawn into a precedent. I only want to put an end to this frightful expense.

C. P. Cooper and J. Browne, of the Common Law Bar (with them Bilton), submitted that the surety was released, provided the creditor placed himself in such a situation that a Court of Equity would restrain him from proceeding. It was originally contended that the promissory note was given in discharge of the bond; but the question was now narrowed to this, whether time was given to Evans by the promissory note; and referred to the case of Lewis v. Jones, 4 B. & C. 506. It was contended that the position of the only witness as attorney for the parties, and his liability to his client should he do anything to release the surety, detracted from the credit of his testimony. If there had been the express agreement alleged as to the nonrelease, that fact should have appeared on the face of the promissory note.

Wigram, Bovill, of the Common Bar, and Pearson, argued on the testimony of Mr. Price, the solicitor, that there was an agreement that the note should not prejudice the remedy under the bond; and that there was no equity to deprive the defendant of the fruits of the judgment at law; and cited Pring v. Clarkson, 1 B. & C. 14.

Browne, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In this case the plaintiff had entered into a bond as surety for the sum of 400*l.*; 120*l.* of which were paid, and 280*l.* remained to be paid. A promissory note was given by the principal debtor to the creditor for the latter sum, payable at two months. The effect of that transaction at law was in no manner to impeach the bond, and the bond remained just as powerful an instrument, and equally as effective at law, as it did before. A question at law might arise, whether that promissory note did not necessarily, in the absence of any agreement being proved to the other, operate in discharge of the surety,—that is to say, whether it was to be taken simply as a collateral security for the 280*l.* or whether it was to be considered as a security which, being payable at the end of two months, must be understood to give two months' time to the principal, so as to prevent any remedy being resorted to to compel payment, either against the principal or surety during that period. Now, all the cases prove that if, after the execution of an instrument a security is taken which might operate as a discharge of the surety by giving time, if the remedy is preserved as against the surety there is no discharge. In this case an action had been brought on the bond, under which the defendant would necessarily have recovered at law; the plaintiff, therefore, resorts to this Court in order to stay the proceedings, and to obtain equitable relief. Now, equity cannot relieve as against a legal obligation unless a clear equitable case is made out: the plaintiff is opposing a legal right, and must, therefore, shew to the Court that the dealing in question did operate to release him in equity, although not at law, from the obligation. Now, is there anything necessarily in the transaction which operates so as to give time, and so to release the party? No authority has been cited for that proposition, and I do not mean to give any opinion on that, either one way or the other. It is perfectly clear in law, that if there be, at the time when the security is taken, a period fixed for payment, and a transaction is subsequently entered into which may be supposed to postpone the time of payment, and to restrict the right of suing within that time, and so to release the surety, there you may prove by parol evidence that there was an agreement that it should not have that operation. Now, the argument at the bar at one time assumed this shape, namely, that you could not admit any parol evidence against this promissory note. That argument was beside the question. It is not sought to impeach the promissory note, or to prevent its having every operation, which, as a promissory note, can be given to it; but the evidence is introduced, to prevent that operation which it is insisted this note had, namely, to prevent any process on the bond, which would be a release of the surety: for that purpose, beyond all doubt the evidence is admissible, and if the evidence had not been admissible, then the plaintiff has miscarried throughout this case; and, instead of allowing it to go to the Master to inquire whether there was such an agreement or understanding to the effect contended for, he should have insisted that no such evidence was admissible, and that the matter was ripe to be decided by the Court at the time it made that inquiry. However, it went to the Master, and there was as much evidence as one could suppose could possibly be brought forward. There was a great deal of cross-examination. There was great expense incurred,—such expense as, in my opinion, cannot be justified when the amount which is in dispute is taken into consideration. That evidence is directly and conclusively against the party who insisted upon having it. The defendant herself, in her answer, swears that there was an understanding that it was not to affect her security. Well, it was said that that was not relied upon, and the Court did not rely upon it; observations were made that the answer was prepared by the solicitor, who was the person who would be answerable. This, I doubt very much; but this it is needless for me to consider. These observations had weight with the Court below, and the Court therefore sent it to the Master to ascertain whether or not any such understanding existed. Well, respecting this gentleman, whose character has not been impeached, some observations have been made on his credit; but every means of cross-examination have been resorted to, and there has been no other result except to prove, in the most distinct manner I ever heard a statement in evidence, not that there was an agreement, but there was no agreement quâ agreement; he swears, too, distinctly over and over again that it was stated at the time when the note was delivered that the remedy on the bond was in no way to be affected; but that the defendant should be at liberty to sue as if the note had not been given. Suppose I were at this moment to reverse the decree, what would the plaintiff do? He has no other evidence; he does not deny that it is open to evidence. There is the evidence of the defendant, and the facts sworn to in her answer; he is not satisfied with those. The solicitor, the only other person who could give evidence, has been subjected to a vivâ voce and cross-examination; he swears to the fact, which establishes the case against the plaintiff. What would be the effect of reversing the decree? What is to be done? There would be evidence on one side and on the other; and this evidence as it stands is, in my opinion, perfectly conclusive. Now it was said that, if there were a general agreement when the note was made, that it should not affect the remedy provided by the bond: this reservation ought to have appeared on the face of the promissory note. I wholly deny that it is proved as a collateral matter, and the cases which were cited proved no such thing. In those cases there were regular deeds, or regular written instruments, by which the compromise was made, and time was given; and the Court there held that if you were to introduce parol agreements to take away the effect of deeds, it would be mischievous and against law. If, therefore, by a written agreement you declare your intention to give what is in effect time; if you mean to reserve your right against the surety, you must reserve it by a written instrument. Now, on the Master's finding, what was contended for on the part of the plaintiff is this, the said there was a double agreement; he first insisted that there was an agreement that the promissory note was given in satisfaction of the bond. The Master is of opinion that the promissory note was not so given. It certainly would have required a strong case to make out that position. So to decide would be to convert what was a specialty into a mere simple contract debt. As against the defendant, the principal debtor would have made out and converted a specialty debt into a mere debt by simple contract. It could not have any such effect or operation; the Master found that there was no such agreement. The plaintiff then insisted that there was a general dealing and a general understanding between the parties, amounting to a parol agreement, that the promissory note was given and accepted in discharge of the security; but to this the Master says, "that there was a general understanding between Alice Rogers and Seth Evans that the said Alice Rogers's remedy on the bond was not to be taken away; but he found that there was no written, nor, beyond the general understanding before mentioned, any distinct parol agreement respecting the said bond between the said parties." It is clear the Master was right; there was no contract on those terms; but there was a general dealing and a general understanding, which in point of law amounts to a stipulation that did prevent that promissory note in equity from having the effect of discharging the surety. Equity is not tied up by such narrow bounds as is supposed in this case. In a matter of this sort, what a judge has to decide is, whether in real truth and honour there was or was not such an agreement as was here contended for. The evidence shews that there was no such agreement; it is made out to my perfect satisfaction. The Master is right, and I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

HIGH COURT OF APPEAL.

(BEFORE THE LORDS JUSTICES.)

Reported by C. H. KEENE, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

March 5 and 22.

WEBB v. THE DIRECT LONDON AND PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY COMPANY.

Landowner—Railway company—Purchase of lands—Abandonment of undertaking—Remedy at law for damages—No specific performance.

The promoters of an Act for making a railway entered into a contract with a landowner, which was afterwards confirmed by the company, whereby after agreeing, in the first nine clauses, to do or abstain from doing certain things which had sole reference to the completion of the railway, by the tenth they agreed to pay the landowner a sum of 4,500l. as purchase-money for the lands to be taken by the company for the formation of the railway, not exceeding eight acres, and for consequential damages to the property, and in consideration of this contract the landowner withdrew his opposition to the Bill:

Held, reversing the decree of the Court below, that on the abandonment of the railway by the company, after the passing of the Act, a Court of Equity ought not to compel the company specifically to perform the agreement, and that the landowner ought to be left to his remedy at law to obtain damages.

Principles on which the Court decrees or refuses to decree specific performance.

This was an appeal from the decree of the Vice-Chancellor Turner, made on a claim directing the specific performance of an agreement under the following circumstances:—An agreement, dated the 23rd of July, 1845, signed by, and made between, C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Laurie, three of the promoters of an Act of Parliament for making a railway from the Croydon and Epsom Railway, at Epsom, to the town of Portsmouth, to be called "The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company," on behalf of themselves and all other the promoters of the said Act, of the one part, and the plaintiff, P. B. Webb, of the other part, whereby the said C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Lawrie, for themselves, agreed with the said P. B. Webb as follows:—"First, that the company to be incorporated under the said Act of Parliament, when passed, shall, at their own costs and charges, build in a substantial and workmanlike manner a bridge over the said railway between the points A. and B. mentioned in the plan or map annexed to the agreement, or at such other place as the said P. B. Webb shall by writing direct; and that such bridge shall be of the width of at least sixteen feet, so as to afford a convenient and sufficient carriage-way for wagons, carts, and carriages between the parts of the property of the said P. B. Webb, described in the plan, which shall be divided by the said railway, and shall for ever thereafter keep the said bridge and roadway thereon in good repair. Secondly, that the said company shall deviate from their proposed line as delineated in the said plan, so far to the eastward thereof as to avoid altogether any interference with the piece of meadow land, the property of the said P. B. Webb, or the plantation round the same, distinguished in the said plan by the numbers of 152 and 153. Thirdly, that the said company shall, if empowered so to do, purchase a piece of land, the property of the dean and chapter of Salisbury, containing by estimation one acre (more or less), which will lie between the said deviated line of railway on the one side, and the said piece of meadow land and plantation numbered 152 and 153, and the piece of land in the said plan marked 35, on the other side; and immediately, on such purchase being completed, shall convey the same, at their own costs and charges, to the said P. B. Webb, his heirs or assigns, or as he or they shall direct, for a nominal consideration. Fourthly, that the said company shall build, in a substantial and workmanlike manner, an ornamental archway under their line of railway, between the points C. and D. mentioned in the said plan, so as to continue by means thereof the shrubbery-walk there, which will be divided by the said railway, and shall keep the said archway for ever thereafter in good repair; and that such archway shall be of the width of ten feet at least. Fifthly, that the said company shall allow the said P. B. Webb a crossing over the said railway where the same shall traverse the land of the said P. B. Webb on a level between the points E and F; and the said company shall erect and keep in repair proper gates on both sides of the said crossing, the gate on the west side thereof to be an ornamental one. Sixthly, that the said company shall plant with evergreens, or other ornamental shrubs or trees, the western side of the embankments of the said railway, as far as it shall cross the property of the said P. B. Webb, described in the said plan. Seventhly, that the said company shall not erect any fence upon the surface of the ground above the said railway where the same shall pass in a cutting, except an invisible iron fence; and if any telegraphic communication shall be set up by the side of the said railway, it shall be set up (as far as the same may be practicable) so as not to be within view from the mansion-house or pleasure-grounds of the said P. B. Webb. Eighthly, that the said company shall not erect or build any station or other building on any part of the lands of the said P. B. Webb, described in the said plan, which may be seen from the said mansion-house or the grounds surrounding the same. Ninthly, that the said company shall not enter upon nor deposit spare or refuse earth or materials, or any other thing, on any of the said lands of the said P. B. Webb, described in the said plan (except such as shall be taken by the said company for the site of the said railway), for any purpose whatsoever, without the consent in writing of the said P. B. Webb. Lastly, that the said company shall pay to the said P. B. Webb the sum of 4,500*l.* together with his costs, charges, and expenses incurred up to the day of the date of the agreement by reason of the intended formation of the said railway (not exceeding the sum of 150*l.*) before the company shall enter on any of the lands of the said P. B. Webb for the purpose of making the said railway; and that all timber and other trees on the lands to be taken by the said company shall be the property of the said P. B. Webb. And it is hereby declared that the said sum of 4,500*l.* is to be the purchase-money for the said lands so to be taken by the said company as aforesaid for the formation of their railway, not exceeding eight acres, according to such deviated line as aforesaid, across the property of the said P. B. Webb, described in the said plan, and for the consequential damage to such property." A memorandum of the same date, written at the foot of the agreement, and signed by C. J. Woods, the plaintiff's agent, was in the following words:—

"It is understood and agreed by and between the parties above named, that, in the event of the Act of Parliament referred to in the foregoing agreement not being obtained, the agreement for purchase hereinbefore contained shall be null and void.

"C. J. WOODS."

It appeared that this agreement was entered into while the company's Bill, empowering them to make the railway, was pending in Parliament; and that the consideration for it was the withdrawal of the opposition of the plaintiff as a landowner to the Bill. On the 26th of June, 1846, the Act (The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Act (a) was passed.

On the 5th of April, 1847, the company executed an indenture under their seal, whereby it was witnessed that the company, in consideration of the withdrawal of the opposition of the said P. B. Webb to the therein-mentioned Bill, did thereby ratify and confirm the said agreement of the 23rd of July, 1845, made on their behalf by the said C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Laurie, and did thereby for themselves, their successors, and assigns, covenant with the said P. B. Webb, his executors, &c. that they the said company, their successors and assigns, would in all things perform, fulfil, and keep the covenants and agreements entered into in the said agreement by the said C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Laurie. And the said P. B. Webb, in consideration of the covenant thereinbefore entered into by the said company, did thereby discharge and release the said C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Laurie, their heirs, executors, &c. from the observance and performance of the covenants and agreements in the said agreement contained, and on the part of the said company to be observed and performed, and from all liability whatsoever in respect of the said agreement so entered into by them as aforesaid; and the said P. B. Webb, his heirs, executors, &c. did thereby covenant with the said company, their successors and assigns, that he had not done or permitted any act, matter, or thing, whereby he would be prevented or hindered from discharging or releasing the said C. S. Crowley, B. Baines, and J. Laurie, from the said agreement.

The claim stated that the plaintiff had, before the agreement was entered into, incurred certain costs, charges, and expenses, by reason of the intended formation of the railway, to the amount of more than 150*l.* It appeared that the company had entered upon the land for the purpose of surveying and taking levels; but, subsequently, the railway was abandoned, and the company did not require the land. There was an offer on the part of the plaintiff in the claim specifically to perform the agreement on his part.

Sir W. Page Wood and Moxon, for the plaintiff, contended that the agreement was binding upon both parties, and was not conditional upon the de-

Bethell,(a) Malins, and Bovill, for the company, contended, first, that the agreement was conditional and framed on the supposition that the land was to be taken, and the railway made through the lands of the plaintiff. Secondly, that the price of the land by itself was not ascertained. The 4,500*l.* included not only the price for the land, but for compensation for severance, and consequential damages. Thirdly, that the powers of the company to hold land had expired. Lastly, that the plaintiff's proper remedy, if he was entitled to any, was at law: that is, the contract was one of such a character as a Court of Equity could not, without injustice, compel a specific performance of. (Harnett v. Yielding, 2 S. & L. 554; Kimberley v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 340; Reg. v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 15 Jur. 873; Shirley v. Davis, cited 6 Ves. 678.)

Moxon, in reply.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—It is now, I believe, a fortnight ago since this matter was first brought before us, and both my learned brother and myself have had ample opportunity of turning the matter over in our minds several times since the former argument, and having formed a strong opinion upon this case, we think it is not useful to detain the parties, but to give an opinion at once. Now, this is a claim, the object of which is, to get the specific performance of a contract, or alleged contract contained in a deed of covenant entered into by the defendants. That deed of covenant is a deed binding on the parties who entered into it, namely, the railway company, to carry into execution certain articles of agreement, or alleged articles of agreement, entered into by three gentlemen, Crawley, Baines, and Laurie, with the plaintiff on the intended formation of the company. Now what the plaintiff says is, that according to the true construction of that instrument these three gentlemen bound themselves, among other things, to pay to him the sum of 4,500*l.* by way of purchase-money for any eight acres of land of his, within certain limits, which the company should think fit to take for the purpose of making their railway; that the 4,500*l.* was to be accepted by him as the purchase-money of the land from the company, and as the consideration for the consequential damage to his property; and what the plaintiff contends is this, that that instrument amounted to such a contract; that the defendants, the company, after the company came into esse pursuant to the Act of Parliament, entered into the deed, whereby they bound themselves to adopt that as their contract upon the consideration that he released the contracting parties; and now he asks as against these defendants specific performance of that which he alleges to be the contract to purchase this property. The first question, and a very important one is, whether there is any contract at all? Upon the view we take of this case, it does not become necessary for us to give any positive opinion upon that subject. In the case before me, just referred to, when I was Vice-Chancellor, of Preston v. Liverpool and Manchester, &c. Railway Company, as far as I recollect that case, I have just had it handed up to me, and have had no opportunity of looking at it, I see by the note at the end, I gave the parties the opportunity of trying that question at law, it being a mere legal question. I do not apprehend that I had myself any sort of doubt about that contract, and that can afford no authority for the present case; I mean that part of the present case which consists of the doubt whether the contract was entered into at all. No doubt, if the railway had been formed, and the land taken, there was a contract that would have bound the parties; but the railway not having been formed, the question is whether, under the circumstances, the contract to purchase ever arose. On the part of the plaintiff, it is said that must be the construction, that there was a contract. On the part of the defendants, it is said that is not the reasonable construction; that if there was no railway, there was no contract to sell or purchase at all; and although the mere preceding clauses of the agree-would select a portion of the plaintiff's land lying within certain limits, not to exceed eight acres, and to take it for the purpose of the railway, and to pay him 4,500*l.* as the purchase-money for what they should so take. Now assume for the purpose of the argument, that was the contract; then the plaintiff seeks the specific performance of that contract. Now it is the plain A. B. C. doctrine of the Court, that it is not upon every contract that the Court will interfere to decree specific performance. It does so, to give more complete justice to a party who seeks the aid of this Court, where a party has entered into a contract to purchase an estate. It may often happen that the mere legal remedy of recovering damages for the non-performance of the contract would afford very inadequate relief, and from the earliest time it has been the doctrine of this Court to interfere to make the party do that which he has engaged to do, namely, convey the land he has agreed to sell. Whether, in order to give a corresponding remedy on the other side, and for what other reason we need not stop to inquire, but undoubtedly the same relief is also given, unless there be some reason against it, to the vendor who seeks merely to have the purchase-money, there is no doubt the Court will interfere; but even in the case of a suit by a purchaser, if there be circumstances rendering it unjust that the Court should interfere, the Court will not interfere in favour of a purchaser; and I should say, much more readily will the Court listen to an objection that is made against a vendor seeking a specific performance, because, of necessity, the vendor can get complete relief at law. Now, looking at that principle, let us see whether this is a case in which we ought to interfere. I suppose the instrument to amount to a contract, such as the plaintiff alleges it to have been. I think this is not only a case in which we ought not to interfere, but it is a case in which we should be exactly reversing the order of things, and making the machinery of this Court instrumental in doing injustice, instead of justice, because the only relief we could give would be to decree the payment of the 4,500*l.* But here it is admitted, that what the contract amounts to is really this:—A contract to pay 4,500*l.* to select eight acres of the plaintiff's land, and take it from him; and for those eight acres and other consequential damage to pay the 4,500*l.* Now, what the plaintiff would have to do at law, as I believe, would be to state this contract, and state the default, the breach of that contract on the part of the defendants, which will be their not having taken the eight acres of land; and so not having done, of course, consequential damage, and not having paid the 4,500*l.*; the amount of damage to be then calculated will, as I conceive, be a calculation made on the aggregate, which, taking all these circumstances into consideration, will do justice; whereas the relief that would be afforded in this Court would be positive injustice—would be giving to this gentleman 4,500*l.* as the purchase-money for that which they had not taken, and which, I believe, they never can now take. I do not wish to commit myself on that subject. It may be that they would take it and sell it. At all events, it is one of those cases in which, assuming the instrument to amount to what the plaintiff says it amounts to,—a contract to pay 4,500*l.* by way of purchase-money and compensation for damage to be done to other land, he has the ready means of obtaining complete redress at law; and, we think, to that redress he ought to be left. Our opinion is, that this claim ought to be dismissed, but, as we think, under the circumstances, not with costs, and without prejudice to the rights of the parties in an action. I own I very much regret, and my learned brother concurs in that, that the offer that has been made has not been acceded to.

Sir W. Page Wood.—My client has lost more money than the amount offered. The Legislature has thought proper to provide for this where a party remains four or five years in suspense, without being able to dispose of his property.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I should have the plaintiff of his opposition to the Bill; and even if the defendants have not profited thereby, which they may have done, the plaintiff cannot be put in the same position as he was previous to entering into the contract. That the company had entered into the lands, surveyed and took levels of them, felled trees, and that, according to the agreement, the purchase-money ought to have been paid before their doing such acts. That the unreasonable course pursued by the defendants, in contending that, notwithstanding all that had been done by the plaintiff, no obligation attached to the company, was directly opposed both to correct principle and authority. They cited Preston v. Liverpool and Manchester

with the railway, yet that necessarily implies it was to be done if the railway was formed, and the whole was conditional on the existence and formation of the railway. I say that is matter, at all events, of a very doubtful nature what is the construction of the contract. Assume, for the purpose of the argument, and that only, that the contract is such as that contended for by the plaintiff. I will call it the agreement of the defendants, whatever it was, the agreement of the defendants under their seal, that they

(a) At the conclusion of Mr. Bethell's argument a sum of money being offered to compromise the suit, the cause stood over, upon the recommendation of their lordships, that the offer might be taken into consideration. It was ultimately refused, and the argument was continued by Mr. Malins.

Dec. 4 and 5 and Jan. 14.

MORTIMER v. WATTS.

Devise—Leasehold—Discretionary power of renewal—Trustees, discretion of.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds to trustees upon trust, out of the rents and profits to pay and perform the rents and covenants, and if they thought it advantageous to effect renewals of the subsisting leases or any of them, as they should think proper, and if they, in their discretion, should think fit or expedient, but not necessarily or peremptorily, effect and keep on foot insurances on the lives of the cestuis que vie, or any of them, and should effect such insurances in such sum as, in the opinion of the trustees, should be sufficient to enable them, whenever a life dropped, to effect a renewal, and should, out of the rents and profits, or by mortgage thereof, raise money sufficient to effect the renewal of the leases so often as advisable. The testator was possessed of [illegible]lds for terms of years determinable on lives, and these had been renewed, but there was no covenant for renewal. On a case under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35:

Held, that the trustees were bound to renew from time to time, if able to obtain renewals on terms not disadvantageous to the testator's estate; that they had not a mere discretionary power to renew at their arbitrary will and pleasure, that there was an absolute trust to exercise their discretion; that in the exercise of their discretion they were bound to renew if they thought it desirable, and that they had a discretion to raise money in the modes pointed out by the will, and they were bound to exercise it if not injurious to the estate.

This was a special case, and the question thereby submitted to the Court related to the duties of the trustees under the will of the Rev. Nicholas Watts, late of Kingsteignton, in the county of Devon, with reference to the renewal of certain leases, whether it was obligatory upon them to renew, or whether they might, in the exercise of their discretion, refuse so to do. Mr. Watts, by his will, dated the 31st of December, 1845, gave and bequeathed to his wife, Judith, his dwelling-house for life, and he gave all the residue of his personal estate (except lease hold estates and chattels real) to George Ferris Whidborne Mortimer and John Bradford upon trust to collect and convert the same, and, after payment of debts, &c. to invest as therein mentioned, and stand possessed thereof in trust after payment thereout of 500*l.* a year to his wife during widowhood, to pay one-fourth part of the income for the benefit of the testator's son Nicholas, his wife, and children; and as to one other fourth part, to pay the same to such persons as the testator's son William John Watts should by deed or will appoint; and as to one other fourth part, to pay the same to such persons as the testator's daughter, Lucinda Diana Whidborne, with the consent of her present or any future husband, by deed or will executed as therein mentioned should appoint; and as to the remaining fourth part, on trust to pay the same to such persons as the testator's daughter Judith Elizabeth Moir, with the consent of her present or any future husband by deed or will executed as therein mentioned should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the said J. E. Moir for her separate use for life without power of anticipation; and from and after her decease in trust for her husband, Robert Moir, for life; and after the decease of both Mr. and Mrs. Moir, upon trusts for the benefit of their children. The testator then gave and devised all his freehold estate to his said trustees and their heirs, as to one fourth part, to the use of his son Nicholas and his children; as to another fourth part to the use of his son William John for life, to the use of all and every or such one or more, exclusively of the other or others of the child or children of him the said Wm. John Watts as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to all and every the child and children of him the said William John Watts and their heirs as tenants in common, with an ultimate limitation to William John Watts, his heirs and assigns; and as to one other fourth part, to the use of the said trustees and their heirs, during the lifetime of L. D. Whidborne in trust to pay the rents and profits thereof as they should become due, but not in anticipation, to such persons as she by any writing under her hand should from time to time appoint; and in default of appointment to pay the same to her for her sole and separate use, and after her decease to the use of her husband for life, and after the decease of both to the use of all and every, or such one or more, exclusively of the other or others of the child or children of the said L. D. Whidborne as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, to the use of all and every the child and children, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, with an ultimate limitation to to L. D. Whidborne, her heirs and assigns; and as to the remaining fourth part, to the use of the said trustees and their heirs during the life of Judith Elizabeth Moir upon trust to pay the rents and pro[illegible]s should be[illegible] due, but not

or her sole and separate use; and after her decease to the use of the said Robert Moir for life, and after the decease of both, to the use of all and every, or such one or more exclusively, of the other or others of the child or children of the said J. E. Moir as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use of all and every the said child or children, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common. Then follows this clause:—"I give and bequeath all my leaseholds or chattel messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments whatsoever and wheresoever, including any messuages, land, tenements, or hereditaments I may hold or be entitled to under any lease or leases for lives absolute, to the said trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, according to the nature and quality thereof respectively, for the respective estates or interests which I shall have [illegible] upon trust that they the said trustees, and the survivor and, &c. do and shall, out of the rents and profits of the said messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments and premises respectively, pay and perform the rents and covenants of and relating to the said tenements, hereditaments, and premises respectively which shall be subsisting at the time of my decease, or which shall be reserved or contained in any renewed lease of any of the said tenements, hereditaments, and premises, and which from time to time ought to be paid, observed, and performed on the part of the lessees, and upon trust, if they the said trustees or trustee for the time being shall think it proper or advantageous, as to any of the said tenements, hereditaments, or premises which are customarily or may be renewed; that the said trustees or trustee, for the time being, shall, or lawfully may, endeavour to effect renewals of the subsisting leases of the said tenements, hereditaments, and premises, or any of them, upon such terms as they shall think proper, so that the said premises may, during the continuance of the trusts of this my will, as far as the circumstances of the case will admit, be respectively held for three lives for a long term, determinable on three lives or for twenty-one years absolute, or according to the usual terms of renewal, and in order thereto do and shall, if they or he in their or his discretion think fit or expedient, but not necessarily or peremptorily, effect and keep on foot insurances on the lives of the respective cestuis que vie, or any of them named in such of the subsisting leases, for the time being, of the said tenements, hereditaments, and premises (or any of such leases) as shall be held on lives, or years determinable on lives, or on the lives of such of the cestuis que vie as shall be insurable at reasonable premiums, and shall or may effect such insurances in such sum as in the opinion of the said trustees or trustee, for the time being, shall be sufficient to enable them or him, whenever such life shall drop or fall, to effect a renewal of the subsisting lease on which the life insured shall have been named a cestui que vie, and do and shall apply the money to be obtained or received on the insurance of such life or lives as aforesaid in effecting a renewal of the subsisting lease in which such life or lives shall have been named a cestui que vie, if such renewals can be effected on such reasonable terms as the said trustees or trustee shall approve, and shall pay the surplus of such money, if any, or the whole thereof, if such renewal cannot be effected, to the person or persons who under the trusts hereinafter declared or referred to shall, for the time being, be in the possession of the said leasehold tenements and premises, or beneficially entitled to the rents and profits thereof; and shall or may, out of the rents and profits of the said leasehold premises respectively, or by mortgage thereof, or of any part thereof, raise money sufficient to effect the renewal of any of the subsisting leases of the said tenements, hereditaments, and premises for the time being, when and so often as a renewal shall be advisable, and as from not insuring, or from the insufficiency of the money arising from any such insurance as aforesaid, or from any other cause there shall be no funds or insufficient funds for the purpose, and do and shall apply the money to be so raised in or towards effecting such renewal or renewals accordingly;" and for the purpose of effecting such renewals the trustees were to surrender the subsisting leases and do all other necessary acts; and the testator declared that the trustees were to hold the said leasehold tenements, &c. on the same trusts, &c. regard being had to their nature and quality, as should best or nearest correspond with the uses, &c. thereinbefore declared of his freehold, and he appointed the said trustees the executors of his will. The testator afterwards executed six codicils to his will, by the first of which he appointed William Miskin a trustee and executor in conjunction with the two named by his will; and by the third of which, dated 22nd May, 1848, after reciting that his son Nicholas had lately died, leaving [illegible] and his children, and he directed his said trustees to receive and take the annual produce, revenue, rents, and profits thereof and invest and accumulate the same in Government Stock or Funds of Great Britain till his grandson Nicholas should attain the age of twenty-six years, and when he should have attained that age to pay him the said income, &c. of the said accumulations and personal estate for life, and after his decease to stand possessed of the said accumulations, and one-fourth part of his personal estate upon trust for the children or child of his said grandson as he should appoint, and in default of appointment upon certain trusts for the said children, and as to the one-fourth part of the freeholds of inheritance to the use of his said grandchild Nicholas for life, and after his decease to the use of all and every the child or children of his said grandson as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to their use as tenants in common, and the testator declared like uses of the leaseholds, &c. The testator died on 3rd May, 1849, and his will was proved by George Ferris Whidborne Mortimer and William Miskin on the 14th of July, 1849, John Bradford having renounced probate thereof, and by deed disclaimed the trusts. William John Watts has never been married. Lucinda Diana Whidborne has only one child, viz. the defendant Lucinda Diana Watts Whidborne, of the age of five years, and she has not exercised the power of appointment to her children. Judith Elizabeth Moir has only one child, viz. the defendant George Moir, of the age of ten years, and she has not exercised the power among her children. The defendant Nicholas Watts is an infant and unmarried, his guardian being Judith Watts. By an order of the 8th August, 1851, George Ferris Whidborne was appointed guardian of all the infant defendants for the purpose of concurring in this case. The testator was at the time of his death possessed of or entitled to certain leaseholds held upon leases for a term of ninety-nine years determinable upon lives under Lord Clifford, and all the leases contained a covenant to pay rent and do suit at the courts of the manor of Kingsteignton, and to keep the premises in repair; but none of the leases contained any clause binding the lessor to renew. It appeared it had been the ordinary practice to renew the leases on Lord Clifford's estate by granting (if applied for) from time to time, when a life dropped, a reversionary term determinable on the failure of another life, so as to make the current lives three in number. No renewals, however, of any of the leases in question had been made since the testator's death. The clear value of the leases is about 700*l.* a year. It appeared that an application had been made to Lord Clifford's steward for a renewal of a lease of one of the tenements, and on the 14th of January, 1851, the solicitor of his lordship replied by stating, that after the Hon. Mr. Clifford's coming of age, in 1840, Lord Clifford's power of renewing leases for years determinable on lives, was limited to tenements comprising less than two acres of land. Doubts having arisen as to the construction to be put upon the power of leasing given to the trustees as to whether the exercise of it was discretionary or imperative, a special case was prepared under the provisions of the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, for the opinion of the Court; the questions thereby raised being two; first, whether the trustees were bound to renew the leaseholds, or any or which of them, supposing them to be unable to renew some of them, in consequence of its being disadvantageous to the testator's estate, or whether they might exercise an absolute discretion as to the making or not making of such renewals; second, whether they were bound to take any means, by insurance or mortgage of the leasehold premises, or out of the present rents and profits to meet the expense of such renewals when the occasion for them should arise. The case now came on to be argued.

Wickens, for the trustees, stated the facts of the case, and that the trustees had been advised that they were placed in difficulty, and hence the application to the Court.

Wednesday, Jan. 14.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question in this case is a very simple one, which arises upon the construction of a clause in the will of a testator, empowering the trustees to renew certain leaseholds. The case came before the Court before the Christmas vacation, and I should not have reserved my judgment but for the desire that I had to read this clause, which is somewhat long and complicated; not because I thought that any real difficulty arises upon the construction of the clause. The question is, whether the clause gives a mere discretionary power to the trustees to renew the leaseholds, or whether, in fact, it imposes a trust upon them, which, if they did not execute it, the Court would execute for them; and I will state very shortly the reasons why I have come to that conclusion on the construction of that clause. There is a very clear distinction, which is familiar to all persons practising in Courts of Equity, between a mere discretionary power in trustees and a trust to be executed by them, though it may sometimes assume the shape of a power. Where there is a mere discretion in trustees to be executed simply as they think fit, this Court will not interfere with their discretion. If the trustees themselves do not themselves execute the trust, the Court will not execute it in their place. But the only difficulty which appears to me to have arisen in this case has arisen from the circumstance that the clause is in its form discretionary, and the reason for its being discretionary is very obvious. It is, I apprehend, the custom of conveyancers, when the testator directs that certain leasehold estates for lives, which are renewable, shall be renewed by the trustees, not to make it compulsory upon the trustees to renew, but to give them a discretion in the matter to do it upon such terms as they shall think fit; for unless the testator, or the framer of the instrument, were to adopt that course, the effect would be that it would be placing the estate and the persons interested in the estate in the power of the lessor to ask for such terms as he might think fit. Now, bearing that in mind, and that being, as I apprehend, the reason for it being done, we come to the words of the clause; and I think there cannot be any reasonable doubt upon the subject. The clause begins thus. [Here his Honour read it, down to the words "upon such terms as they shall think proper."] I pause here for a moment to point out what appears to me to be the object which I have before referred to, of giving the discretion to the trustees. If it had been compulsory upon the trustees to renew, if they could by possibility have obtained a renewal, it would have compelled them to] pay any sum, or at least any reasonable sum, which the lessor might have demanded. Upon that subject it appears to me, that the testator giving them a discretion in the matter, gives them a discretion as to the terms; and I shall point out presently, in what way I think that discretion ought to be exercised; and the trust is important, when compared with other words of the instrument. It is upon trust that they shall, if they think proper, renew and endeavour to effect renewals "upon such terms as they shall think proper." Now, then, that means that it is their duty, provided they can get fit and reasonable terms, to renew the leaseholds. And it goes on in this way,—"So that,"—now this is the object for which that renewal is to be effected—"so that the said premises may, during the continuance of the trusts of this my will, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, be respectively held for three lives, or for a long term determinable on three lives, or for twenty-one years absolute, or according to the usual terms of renewal." Well, that is the object for which it is to be done; that is to say, the object was, and it is an expression which is frequently found, that they are to do so for the benefit of the estate, that is, for the benefit of all persons interested in the estate, in the same manner as the person would do it if he were the owner in fee simple of the estate. And the manner in which the Court would execute a trust of this description, if the trustee were unable or refused to execute, would be, that it would refer it to the Master to know whether it was for the benefit of all parties interested, supposing them to be under disabilities, and not consenting in the matter, whether it was for the interest of all persons interested in the estate that these renewals should be effected. It is evident that the trustees are not to sacrifice the tenant for life to the persons interested in the reversion, but that they are to exercise their discretion in such manner as they may consider most beneficial for keeping the estate in its present condition. Then that will answer the first question, which is, whether the trustees are bound to renew the leaseholds, or any or which of them, supposing them to be unable to renew some of them in consequence of its being disadvantageous to the testator's estate; or whether they may exercise an absolute discretion as to the making or not making of such renewals. My opinion is, that they are bound to renew these leaseholds from time to time when a life drops, supposing them to be able to obtain renewals on terms not disadvantageous to the testator's estate; and that is to say, that they have not a mere discretionary power to renew upon their arbitrary will and pleasure. The power given by the testator is this, that it is an absolute trust to exercise their discretion, and then, if in their discretion they should think it desirable to effect such renewals, they are bound to do so. The second question is, whether they are bound to take any means by insurance or mortgage of the leasehold premises, or out of the present rents and profits, to meet the expense of such renewals, when the occasion for them shall arise. Now the trusts in the clause in question are these. [Here his Honour read the clause.] Now I may here observe, that the latter part of this clause confirms the observation that I have made with respect to the clause primarily, namely, that it is imperative upon them to exercise the discretion given them to renew. I think that the same discretion applies to them for the purpose of raising the moneys either by insurances of lives or in such manner as is pointed out by this clause, as they shall think most advisable at the time; that it is their duty to exercise that discretion, and if it cannot be done without great injury to the estate, then it would not be necessary that such insurances should be effected and such money should be raised. But that they must exercise in this matter that discretion for the purpose of obtaining the money in the shape or in the manner most beneficial to all the parties concerned. The latter part of the clause it is not necessary for me more particularly to refer to. I foresee that some difficulty may arise as to the payment of the surplus; but no question arises upon that. I am of opinion that the second question depends very much upon the first; and I am of opinion that this is a discretion that is to be exercised.

Roupell.—That clause also gives a power of sale and mortgage for that purpose. There seem to be three trusts in the trustees—to raise the money either by insurance, mortgage, or sale; and that would give me a trust to exercise the discretion in any of those modes.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In any of those modes which they may consider most beneficial; always considering that the main object is, as far as possible, to keep the estate in the condition that it was when the testator left it. That is the primary consideration.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 24 and Feb. 12.

ROCHFORD v. HACKMAN.

Tenant for life—Gift over on alienation—Insolvent debtor—Forfeiture.

A testator gave a life interest in dividends to a son, and declared that if he should in any manner assign, or incumber, or anticipate the same, the bequest to him should cease, as if the same had not been mentioned in or made part of his will, or as if his son were dead. The son took the benefit of the Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors:

Held, that the life estate was forfeited, and that the parties in remainder were entitled, and that the same did not pass to the assignee in insolvency.

This was a claim filed by James Rochford, and Martha Ann Rochford, his wife, against the trustees of the will of William Rochford, and other parties, praying that the Court would declare the plaintiffs entitled to one-half of 1,900*l.* absolutely, and to the other half contingently, on the decease of Richard Rochford, jun. before attaining the age of twenty-one years. The facts were as follow: William Rochford, deceased, by his will, dated Aug. 15, 1822, after bequeathing certain legacies, gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his personal estate unto two trustees named Groves and Hackman, upon trust to invest the same, and pay the dividends and interest to his wife for her life, and at her decease, to divide the capital into four shares, and to pay the dividends of one share to his son Robert Rochford, for his life, and after his decease to divide the capital of that share among his children equally, and to be vested interests as and when such children should attain the age of twenty-one years, and if no child should attain twenty-one then the same share to go over to the other sons. The will also contained trusts for the other sons of the testator, and their issue, with similar gifts over to the other sons and their issue, mutatis mutandis. The testator then made the following declaration: "And I do hereby will and declare, that in case my said wife or either of my said four sons shall in any manner sell, assign, transfer, incumber, or otherwise dispose of or anticipate all or any part of her, his, or their share and interest of and in the said dividends, interest, and annual proceeds aforesaid, then and in such case, and from and immediately after such alienation, sale, assignment, transfer, or disposition shall be made, the said several bequests so hereinbefore made to or in trust for her, him, and them as aforesaid, shall cease, determine, and become utterly void, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had not been mentioned in or made part of this my will, or as if my said wife or either of my said sons were dead." The trustees were appointed executors. The testator died on the 7th of September, 1831, and the executors proved the will on the 13th of the following month, and six days afterwards the wife of the testator died. The executors paid the debts and legacies, and invested the residue in their names in the purchase of 3,800*l.* Three per Cent. Consols. The trustee Hackman died in the lifetime of Mr. Groves, who died in 1846, having appointed Mr. Hackman and Mr. Knight executors of his will. Two out of the four sons of the testator died without issue. James Rochford, a third son, had issue, who attained twenty-one. Richard Rochford, the remaining son, had issue,—Richard Rochford the younger, an infant, and Martha Ann, who attained twenty-one, and was married to her cousin James Rochford. Richard Rochford, the son of the testator, was confined for debt, and on the 14th of December, 1849, petitioned for his discharge under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors made a vesting order on the 17th of December, and having appointed Mr. English the assignee of his estate, the insolvent was discharged from custody. The assignee under the insolvency claiming, by virtue of the vesting order, the dividends of the share of Richard Rochford, Martha Ann, with her husband, filed the claim against the executors of the will of the surviving trustee of William Rochford's will, and who, as such, were trustees of that will, and against the assignee of the insolvent's estate, and against the infant son of Richard Rochford, the insolvent, claiming to be entitled to the capital of half of 1,900*l.* Consols, the half of the testator's residuary estate, in the same manner as if he were then dead, and claiming also to have the other half of the 1,900*l.* Consols secured, to abide the contingency of the infant brother not attaining twenty-one years.

JUDGMENT.

Thursday, Feb. 12.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said it had been contended by the plaintiffs, and by the defendant, Richard Rochford the younger, that the insolvent's interest had ceased, and that the plaintiffs were absolutely, and that defendant was contingently entitled to the 1,900*l.* in which, but for the insolvency of Richard Rochford the elder, he would have been entitled to an interest for his life. His assignees, however, claimed to be entitled to the dividends of that fund during his life. In determining the question, the first point was, to see whether there were any fixed rules to guide the decision of the Court; and on examination of the cases there appeared to be two rules laid down applicable, and sufficient to govern the present case. First, that property could not be given for life, any more than absolutely, with any restriction upon alienation, and that any such restriction was void if annexed to a life estate, just as much as if annexed to an estate in fee; and, secondly, that although a life estate be expressly given by the first part of the will, it might be well determined by an explicit limitation over in the subsequent part of the will. The first proposition was fully supported by Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. 429, and Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 67; in both which cases there were estates for life given, with a restriction on alienation, but no gift over on alienation; and the doctrine laid down in these cases had not been contravened by any subsequent decisions. The second proposition, that a life estate may be determined by an explicit limitation over, was equally well settled. His Honour said he need only refer to the cases of Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, Cooper v. Wyatt, and Churchill v. Marks. It was said at the bar, indeed, that a limitation over was unnecessary; and the case of Dickson's Trust was relied on. He did not think it necessary to decide the point at present; but he did not understand the case of Dickson's Trust as deciding that a life interest might be well determined merely by a proviso that it should cease in a certain event, without any gift over being made. The true rule was that the Court must collect the testator's intention, whether the intention was that the life interest should continue or not from the whole will. The Court must look to the primary disposition to see what estate the testator intended to give, and to the ulterior disposition to see in what events it was given over. If the Court found that there was a limitation over, and that it met the event in which the primary disposition was to cease, then it was clear that the testator did not intend the life estate to continue. If the Court, on examination, found that the limitation over did not meet the event in which the previous gift was to cease, then there was no sufficient evidence of the testator's intention that the life interest should determine. This took away all difficulty and fell in with the case of Dommett v. Bedford, in which there was no gift over, but a proviso for cesser; but it would be difficult to argue that more force was due to a gift over than to a proviso for cesser. Some expressions of Lord Eldon in the case of Brandon v. Robinson had been the subject of remark, and a few observations upon them might therefore be proper. "A disposition to a man until he shall become bankrupt," his lordship said, "and after his bankruptcy over, is quite a different thing from an attempt to give it to him for his life, with a proviso that he shall not sell or alien it. If that condition is so expressed as to amount to a limitation, reducing the interest short of a life estate, neither the man nor his assignees can have it beyond the period limited." His Honour did not understand Lord Eldon there to say that the law would not permit of a proviso determining previous gift. On the contrary, he expressly said that if the proviso be so expressed as to reduce the interest previously given to one short of a life estate, neither the man nor his assigns should have it beyond the period for which the gift was limited. Lord Eldon then passed to the old law on the subject, and entering on the question whether the interest was assignable by the commissioners in bankruptcy, he said, "To prevent that, it must be given to somebody else." But this did not mean that in all cases there must be a gift over, but that under that particular will the assignees must take the life interest of the bankrupt, in the absence of any gift over. This seemed clear, both from what preceded and from what followed the particular gift. But without determining whether a gift over was in all cases necessary, his Honour was of opinion that in the case before the Court the testator had not merely provided for the cesser of the life interest, but had made a valid gift over. Some effect must, if possible, be given to all the words of the will; and if he were to hold otherwise in this case, no effect would be given to the proviso following the previous gift for life. Some observations were made on the terms in which this proviso was framed; but on looking to the previous part of the will, as well as to the ulterior provisions, he thought there was no difficulty, if he referred the different expressions, "as if the same had not been mentioned in or made part of this my will," and "as if my said wife, or either of my sons, were then dead," to the different persons and the different events to whom and upon which the interests were given over in the previous part of the will. He was also of opinion that the event which had occurred was an event which the testator intended should determine the interests given in the previous part of the will. He thought that the views he had thus taken were in accordance with Brandon v. Acton, and Shee v. Hale, 13 Ves. 404; and were not affected by Lear v. Leggatt, and Pym v. Lockyer. A learned text writer had expressed some doubt as to the soundness of the distinction, taken in Shee v. Hale, and other cases, between alienation under bankruptcy and under an insolvency, but his Honour saw no reason for the doubt. The conclusion was, that the life interest of the insolvent was determined, and the only remaining question was, whether the capital should be now divided. He thought that the capital was not yet divisible; for the determination of the life interest did not alter the class who were to take on that event; and a division of the fund at the present time might carry it beyond its objects, for after-born children would be equally entitled to come in. Therefore, Mrs. Rochford, the plaintiff, took under the will a vested interest in one moiety of the 1,900*l.* and the defendant, Richard Rochford the younger, took a contingent interest in the other moiety, depending on his attaining twenty-one years; but both these interests would open, so as to let in after-born children (if any) becoming entitled under the will. Those interests would be on the same footing as vested interests in a fund which was subject to a power of appointment, and which were, therefore, liable to be divested on the exercise of that power; in which case the parties entitled to the vested interests were entitled to the dividends and interest in the meantime. The fund would, therefore, be brought into court, and kept entire.

TROTTER v. VINING.

Trust—Husband and wife.

A. the wife of B. was entitled in her own right to certain real estate, and proceedings to recover the same were instituted against C. who was in possession. The claim was compromised by C.'s paying a sum of money, and A.'s executing a release of the estate. The money was received by B. who, in a letter to the attorney in the proceedings, stated his intention to invest it for his wife's use. The sum was afterwards invested in B.'s name, and he regularly paid the dividends to his wife. B. on several occasions spoke of the stock as belonging to his wife, &c. B. died, and upon the claim of A. it was held that B. was a trustee of the fund for her separate use, and the executors were ordered to transfer it to her.

This was a claim by Margaret Trotter, the widow of Thos. Trotter, deceased, against the executors of his will to recover 40*l.* Long Annuities standing in the name of the testator at the time of his death. In 1840 the plaintiff, her husband being then living, claimed to be entitled to certain real estate as the heiress-at-law of the Rev. John Ridghill. General Reeve was in possession of the estate, and disputed the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff and her husband were about to commence proceedings to recover the estate, when, after some negociation, it was agreed that in consideration of 687*l.* 19s. to be paid by General Reeve to the plaintiff and her husband, they should release General Reeve from the claim to the estate, and Thos. Trotter, the husband, should give to General Reeve a bond to secure him against any future proceedings in respect of the said claim to the estate. In pursuance of the agreement the plaintiff duly executed to General Reeve a release of all her right in the estate. The balance of the 687*l.* 19s. after paying the costs, amounted to 551*l.* 10s. 2d. and this sum was paid to the husband by Mr. Dennett, who acted as the solicitor for the plaintiff in the matter. In a letter addressed to Mr. Dennett, and dated the 5th of July, 1841, Mr. Trotter thus accounted for the disposition of this money:—"It appears that the law and other expenses in this matter are as follow:—Your bill, 129*l.* 17s. 11d.; the amount of General Reeve's bill, deducted from Mrs. Trotter's money, 66*l.* 11s.; Meredith's bill on me, 2*l.* 15s.; my own disbursements at various times for parish registers, wills, &c. 15*l.* 1s. 6d.; total, 205*l.* 8s. 5d.; leaving a balance in favour of my wife amounting to 551*l.* 10s. 2d. which I shall immediately invest to the best advantage for her use." Mr. Trotter paid to the plaintiff 49*l.* 0s. 2d. part of this money, and on the 9th of July, 1841, invested the balance (502*l.* 10s.) in the purchase of 40*l.* Long Annuities in his own name. Mr. Trotter died on the 8th of September, 1851, having by his will appointed W. Vining and J. Palmer, the defendants in this case, and three other persons, his executors, and the will was shortly afterwards duly proved by Vining and Palmer alone. It was proved in evidence on this claim that Mr. Trotter on several occasions verbally stated to different persons that the money was his wife's, and that he would not touch a penny of it; and that he had invested it for her, as he feared she would run through it. It was also proved that after the investment Mr. Trotter paid his wife 10*l.* per quarter, and that he spoke of it as her annuity, and that she had no other annuity than the dividends in question, and that the household expenses were always paid by Mr. Trotter and not by his wife.

Malins and Speed appeared for the plaintiff; and Bacon and Simons for the defendant.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the attorney in the proceedings against General Reeve must be considered as the attorney of the wife, and Mr. Trotter having written to the attorney the letter of the 5th of July, 1841, stating that he intended to invest the sum for his wife's use, and having afterwards invested the sum, and paid the dividends to the wife; these facts, coupled with Mr. Trotter's parol declarations, clearly established that the husband was a trustee of the fund for the separate use of the wife. His Honour would, therefore, make a declaration to that effect, and order the defendants to transfer the annuities to the plaintiff, she undertaking to indemnify the testator's estate against the bond given to General Reeve.

HYDE v. THE CORPORATION OF MANCHESTER.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 124th section.

The corporation of M. had occasion to go to Parliament for the purpose of constructing waterworks, and they required lands, of which part belonged to A. B. and part to C. D. but the boundary between the lands was undefined and uncertain. The corporation deposited plans, adopting as to this boundary the plan they had obtained from C. D. A. B. opposed the Bill in Parliament, but withdrew his opposition upon an agreement that the corporation should consult A. B.'s views, and fix the exact quantity of land required for the proposed works within six months after the passing of the Bill. The corporation, before the expiration of the six months, gave A. B. notice to treat, defining the lands they required by a plan annexed to the notice. The award of the arbitrators in terms gave compensation for the lands within the boundary shewn by that plan, but in the proceedings before them the statement of A. B. as to the boundary was taken and (as was alleged) acted upon. A. B. afterwards recovered in ejectment against the corporation a piece of land upon the disputed boundary, and for which the corporation had paid C. D. The corporation then proceeded, under the 124th section of the Land Clauses Consolidation Act, to acquire possession of the piece of land as in a case of mistake. A. B. filed a bill to restrain the corporation from so doing, but upon a motion for injunction the Court considered that the case was one of mistake and within the 124th section, and refused the motion, with costs.

By "The Manchester Corporation Waterworks Act 1847," "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845," and "The Waterworks Clauses Act 1847," were incorporated with that Act except so far as inconsistent therewith, and the corporation of Manchester were thereby empowered to purchase from the Manchester and Salford Waterworks Company who were empowered to sell to them, the lands, reservoirs, buildings, works, and property of that company, which lands, &c. immediately on the execution of a conveyance by the company under their common seal or on the payment of the purchase-money and the execution of a deed poll by the corporation, as therein mentioned, were by virtue of the Act to vest in the corporation; and thereupon all powers, authorities, rights, and privileges contained in the company's Acts were to vest in the corporation, except only so far as the same were inconsistent with the Act now in statement. By the 32nd section, after reciting that plans and sections of the reservoirs and works proposed to be made, and a book of reference containing the names of the owners or reputed owners, lessees or occupiers of the land in or upon which the same were intended to be made, had been deposited with the several clerks of the peace for the counties of Lancaster, Chester, and Derby, respectively, it was enacted that they should retain the said plans, sections, and books of reference, and permit all persons interested to inspect the same. By the 34th section the corporation was empowered to purchase such of the lands delineated in the plan and described in the book of reference, as should be necessary for the purposes of the Act. The 53rd section authorised the corporation to apply, in the next session of Parliament, for an Act to enable them to construct auxiliary reservoirs as therein mentioned. By the 60th section it was enacted, that the powers of the corporation for the compulsory purchase of lands should not be exercised after five years from the passing of the Act; and the 61st section empowered the corporation to enter into agreements for the purchase of streams of water and land, as therein mentioned.

Mr. Hyde, the plaintiff in this case, at the time of the passing of the before-mentioned Act, was seized in fee simple of certain lands near Vale House, in the county of Chester, part of which were delineated in the plans and books of reference mentioned in the Act; and the corporation being desirous of making a gauge basin and reservoir on or near the plaintiff's land, applied to Parliament for a special Act to empower them to do so. The plaintiff at first opposed this by presenting a petition against the Bill; and the petition, among other things, stated that the boundaries of the plaintiff's estate were very inaccurately drawn on the deposited plan, and that a considerable parcel of land, amounting to 786 square yards, belonging to the plaintiff, within the limits of deviation on the set plan, had therein been described as the property of the Duke of Norfolk, and appeared to be required for the purposes of the Act; but that the plaintiff had received no notice as to it from the parties applying for the Bill. This petition was referred to the parliamentary committee in the usual way; but before the assembling of the committee the plaintiff agreed with the corporation to withdraw his opposition, and thereupon the following memorandum was signed by the plaintiff's solicitor and the town-clerk of the corporation: "Manchester Corporation Waterworks, No. 2. "Mr. Hyde to withdraw his opposition upon the following terms:—That the question of value of the lands required by the promoters, and of the amount of compensation to be paid to Mr. Hyde for injury or damage for severance of lands, diversion, or use of water, or otherwise occasioned by the proposed works of the company to the remainder of his estate to be settled by arbitrators to be appointed in the manner prescribed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. That the promoters shall, in carrying out the proposed works so far as may be compatible with the efficient carrying out of this scheme, consult the views of Mr. Hyde to the fullest extent, and shall fix the exact quantity of land required, and the site of the proposed works, if required by Mr. Hyde within six months after the passing of the Bill. The promoters to pay 45*l.* towards the charges and expenses which Mr. Hyde has been or may be put to in opposition to the said Bill.—Joseph Heron, R. H. Wyatt."

The opposition by the plaintiff being thus withdrawn, the Bill became an Act on the 22nd of July, 1848, and was entitled "The Manchester Corporation Water Works Amendment Act, 1848." This Act was incorporated with the former Act, and the corporation were thereby empowered to make the said gauge basin on or near the plaintiff's land, and by sec. 10 of the Act it was provided that the power of the corporation for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purposes of the Act should not be exercised after the expiration of three years from the passing thereof. On the 17th of January, 1849, the corporation, in pursuance of the agreement before mentioned, gave to the plaintiff a notice to treat under the Lands Clauses Act and the before-mentioned Acts, and by such notice requiring a piece of land belonging to the plaintiff, containing 7a. 2r. 15p. and coloured pink in the plan thereto annexed, being part of the lands comprised in the plan deposited with the clerk of the peace for the county therein, and in the book of reference distinguished by the numbers 141 and 147.

On the 14th of June, 1849, the plaintiff claimed compensation in respect of the said land, and required that if disputed it should be settled by arbitration in the manner prescribed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. The claim was referred to arbitration accordingly, and in the proceedings before the arbitrators and umpire the plaintiff's counsel contended that the notice to treat and plan annexed did not correctly describe the southern boundary, which wa the longest side of the piece of land required to be taken by the corporation. The said plan did not in fact include all the plaintiff's land on the south side, but left a narrow strip containing 1,328 square yards between the land required and land belonging to the Duke of Norfolk, also taken by the corporation, and being on the south side of the land actually required from the plaintiff. The corporation, on the supposition that this strip of land belonged to the Duke of Norfolk, purchased it from the Duke, and paid him a sum of compensation-money in respect thereof, having laid down the boundary from some plans obtained from the Duke. On the 2nd of November, 1849, 1,620*l.* were awarded as compensation to the plaintiff for the purchase by the corporation from him of the lands described in the notice to treat and the plan thereto annexed, and in respect of all injury and damage which the adjoining hereditaments and premises of the plaintiff should or might sustain by the construction and maintenance of the works of the corporation. The plaintiff being dissatisfied with the award, attempted to set it aside, and neglected to attend to a notice served upon him by the corporation dated the 5th of April, 1850, requiring him to make out his title to the said piece of land mentioned in the award. On the 29th of May, 1850, the corporation proceeded under their compulsory powers to take possession of the land, having previously, on the 7th of the same month, paid into Court the 1,620*l.* compensation-money, and executed the deed-poll required by the Act. The corporation also took possession of the strip of land on the south side of the plaintiff's land. On the 26th of May, 1851, the plaintiff brought an ejectment against the corporation for the strip of land, and on the 14th of August, 1851, obtained a verdict in his favour. In Michaelmas Term, 1851, the corporation moved for a new trial, which was refused; and thereupon judgment was entered up for the plaintiff, but he did n t recover possession of the strip of land, and the corporation made part of their reservoir and executed other works at different times upon the strip of land. The corporation, upon the assumption that the case was within the 121th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, determined to proceed under that section, to obtain a legal right thereto; and accordingly, on the 6th of December, 1851, they served the plaintiff with a notice to treat for the purchase of the strip of land. By that notice it was stated by way of recital that the corporation had agreed for the purchase of the strip of land in question from the Duke of Norfolk, as the reputed owner thereof, and paid him a sum of money as compensation for the same, and had, with his consent, on the 29th of May, 1849, entered upon the same, and executed various works thereon; and reciting that subsequently the plaintiff's title to the said strip of land so taken had been finally established at law, and that through mistake the corporation had failed, under the aforesaid circumstances, to purchase the said strip of land, and that they required the same for the purposes of the said Waterworks Amendment Act, 1848, and that they desired to purchase the same under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. By a protest dated the 19th December, 1851, and served upon the corporation, the plaintiff stated that the time for the corporation to take land under their said agreement had expired, and refusing to sell to them the land in question. On the 30th of December, 1851, the corporation served the plaintiff with a further notice, dated the previous day, reciting their notice of the 6th of December, and that twenty-one days had elapsed since the service of that notice, and that the plaintiff had failed to give the particulars of his estate, &c. as thereby required, and stating the intention of the corporation, under the said Acts, to summon a jury after ten days from the service of that notice to assess the compensation money for the mesne profits of the said strip of land, and offering 75*l.* as the compensation money for the said land, and 3*d.* a day since taking possession, for the mesne profits thereof. Upon this, the plaintiff filed the bill in this suit, charging that the before-mentioned agreement was binding on the corporation, and that what they were then seeking to do was inconsistent therewith, and with the terms of the arrangement entered into between them and the plaintiff previous to the passing of the Amendment Act of 1848, and upon the faith whereof the plaintiff had ceased to oppose the passing of the Act, and praying that the corporation might be restrained by injunction from issuing their warrant to the sheriff requiring him to summon a jury for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the said piece of land, or the compensation to be paid to the plaintiff in respect of the same piece of land, and from taking any steps or proceedings whatever under the provisions, or as being, or stated, or alleged to be under the provisions of the said Amendment Act of 1848, or the provisions of the Acts incorporated therewith, with the view, or for the purpose, of obtaining the compulsory purchase from the plaintiff of the said piece of land; and also from doing any works or excavations in, or removing the soil of the said piece of land or any part thereof, and from building thereon or on any part thereof, and also from altering or removing any of the landmarks or boundaries of the said piece of land or any part thereof, and also from retaining or continuing in possession of the said piece of land or any part thereof.

Russell and Renshaw now moved for an injunction in the terms of the prayer of the bill, and cited Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, 1 Myl. & Cr. 650.

Bacon and Little, for the corporation, contended that the case was within the 121th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

Russell, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that he did not consider that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction. The circumstances of the case were these: the corporation of Manchester had occasion to go to Parliament, for the purpose of constructing the waterworks which were mentioned in the pleadings, and for that purpose they had occasion to take lands, part of which belonged to the plaintiff, and part to the Duke of Norfolk. The state of those lands was, that there was no boundary-fence between them. The boundary was undefined, and to a certain extent there seemed to have been some uncertainty about the precise boundary between the two lands. The corporation proceeded to deposit their plans in Parliament, and to enable them to do that, they adopted the plan they got from the Duke of Norfolk, shewing the boundary of his land, which of course also shewed the boundary of the plaintiff's, and they defined in the plan they deposited the boundary of the land between those of the plaintiff and the Duke of Norfolk by the information they got from these plans, and also from the tenants of the Duke of Norfolk. Then there could be no doubt that the boundary laid down by the corporation was done bonâ fide in that way, for it appeared that some time afterwards—it was not very material when—they bought from the Duke of Norfolk the lands within the boundary that the deposited plans had ascribed to him, and paid him for those lands. The plaintiff petitioned Parliament against the Bill, which was pending at that time, and promoted by the corporation; and one ground on which he complained of it was, that the boundary was laid down incorrectly as between the lands of the plaintiff and the Duke of Norfolk, and that that boundary gave the plaintiff 786 square yards too little. The plaintiff opposing a Bill in Parliament, an agreement was entered into between him and the corporation, that the corporation should, in carrying out their works, consult the views of the plaintiff, and should fix the exact quantity of land required for the site of the proposed works, if required by the plaintiff, within six months after the passing of the Bill; and, upon that agreement, the plaintiff withdrew his opposition, and the Act of Parliament passed on the 2nd of July, 1848. In January 1849, the six months were about expiring within which the corporation were, by the terms of the agreement, to fix the precise quantity that they required of the plaintiff's land. On the 16th of January they gave him the common notice to treat, fixing and defining the lands that they wanted by a plan which they annexed to the notice to treat. Now, this plan they had made out after communication with Mr. Stirke upon the lands, Mr. Stirke being the agent of the plaintiff. There was nothing to shew that they did not act with perfect bona fides in fixing the limits. It appeared that Mr. Stirke himself did not at that time accurately know the limits, he did not accurately ascertain them for some time afterwards. However, what the corporation did was after communication with Mr. Stirke to alter the boundary, giving the plaintiff not only 786 yards, which he claimed, but somewhat more, giving the plaintiff therefore some of that land which they either had bought and paid for, or which they were about to buy and pay for from the Duke of Norfolk. That was on the 16th of January. On the 21st, the agent of the plaintiff stated that he thought the plan was not quite correct; but he said that he would see Mr. Bateman, the defendants' engineer, upon it. On the 22nd, the six months were to expire. It did not appear that any communication took place between the plaintiff and Mr. Bateman at that time. The parties had then to proceed to ascertain the value of the lands defined on the plans which had been given by the corporation in the way I have stated, and that was to be done by arbitration. The plaintiff proceeded to ascertain more accurately than he had done at that time the precise boundary of his land, and he appeared to have employed a person of the name of Barnes for the purpose; and Mr. Barnes made a survey in July 1849, and by Mr. Barnes's survey it appeared that the plan given to the plaintiff in January still gave him too little, and that he was really entitled to one rood five perches beyond what the plan shewed. They were then before the arbitrators for the purpose of ascertaining how much was to be paid, and the corporation, in order to avoid all dispute, on the 27th of August, 1849, admitted that the plaintiff's boundary was really the boundary laid down by Mr. Barnes, and agreed that that should be considered the boundary for the purpose of the arbitration. Then it was asserted on the one side, and denied on the other, that the arbitrators in assessing the value gave the plaintiff compensation for that one rood five perches or whatever it might have been. His Honour did not think it was necessary to decide for the present purpose which of the two parties was right. He confessed the weight of the evidence appeared to him in favour of the corporation, and that they actually paid the plaintiff for that one rood five perches, but he did not think it was material, for this reason: if they did pay for it they had got an equitable title, which they could enforce adversely against the plaintiff in this court; if they did not pay for it, it was quite sufficient for the purpose of this motion to say, that they supposed that they had paid for it, and it was quite clear upon the statement of the umpire, and upon the evidence given before him, that that was claimed, for evidence was given on it, and the umpire said that he actually did give the plaintiff value for it; that was quite sufficient to make out the bona fides of the statement on the part of the corporation, when they said that they believed that they had paid for it, and they believed, by having paid for it, they acquired an equitable title to the land. In May, 1850, they took possession, and thereupon the plaintiff brought an ejectment to recover the land, which was in question. The only title which the corporation had got to the land was by a statutory deed-poll conveying it to themselves, which of course was limited to the land they had described in the plan, which they had given in January, 1849, and therefore they could not by the statutory provision give themselves a legal title to the one rood five perches. It was quite clear, therefore, that the plaintiff in the ejectment had the legal title, whether the equitable title beneficially was or was not in him, or whether he was prosecuting that action against the equitable rights of the corporation or not. He got judgment in that ejectment, and a rule for a new trial was moved for, and the corporation failed in disturbing the verdict. Then the corporation proceeded under the 121th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act to acquire possession of this land by paying the plaintiff whatever might be the value of it, and whatever might be the mesne profits made by them by the enjoyment of it on the ground that it was through mistake or inadvertence that the corporation had failed or omitted duly to purchase or pay compensation for it. Several questions had been raised upon that. It was first said that this clause of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act was not incorporated with the special Act relating to the undertaking, and clauses were referred to shewing that the time for exercising the compulsory powers was limited, and that the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act was only incorporated so far as not repugnant to this. But then his Honour found that this section provided for enabling the parties to purchase, whether the period allowed by the special Act for the purchase of land should have expired or not, so that there was nothing repugnant in the provisions of the special Act in incorporating that clause in it, and he thought, as he had said during the argument, the special Act must be read as if that clause were expressly incorporated in it. Then the next thing was that the corporation must shew, in order to bring themselves within this, that it was through mistake or inadvertence that they had failed or omitted duly to purchase or pay compensation for the land. From the statement he had made it appeared to his Honour perfectly clear that not only it was through mistake or inadvertence, but that it was through mistake or inadvertence into which they had been led by the imperfect information of the plaintiff himself and the way in which he communicated that to them. It appeared to him, therefore, that they were clearly in the position of being parties who had failed to purchase the land in proper time through mistake or inadvertence. Then it was said that might be very well if they were not bound by a special agreement, but by the agreement which they had entered into with the plaintiff to withdraw his opposition to the Act of Parliament, the corporation were bound to state in a certain time what precise land they wanted; that they were therefore acting not under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act at all, but that they were actually dealing with him on the footing of the agreement, and were now trying to set up something against the agreement. But his Honour did not think that was the true construction of the 124th clause, because that clause provided for all cases in which the parties promoters of the undertaking should have entered on any land which they were authorised to purchase if it appeared through mistake they failed or omitted duly to pay for it. It seemed to him to have nothing to do with the mode in which they entered on the contract under which they entered into possession of these lands. It was quite enough that the lands they were in possession of were lands they were authorised to purchase, and they had not acquired a complete title to this, not from any fault of their own, but solely on account of mistake or inadvertance. It was quite immaterial whether by agreement or by compulsory powers, or how else it was they got into possession of the land, if the circumstances were that they were in that position, and that through mistake or inadvertence they had failed to get a complete title. His Honour therefore thought that the corporation were within the 124th clause, and it appeared to him that they were quite within the time provided by that clause, because the clause gave them six months after the right should have finally been established at law. They were within six months from the time when the motion was refused at law, and up to that time his Honour thought they were perfectly justified in saying that if they had not got a legal title, they had, at all events, an equitable title, and he did not feel satisfied at the present moment that they had not an equitable title which they might have enforced as plaintiffs against Mr. Hyde, and compelled him to withdraw his proceedings, or stay his proceedings, in the action of ejectment. It therefore appeared that as far as could be determined on an interlocutory motion, the defendants were proceeding regularly and properly under the 124th section, and that the plaintiff had no right to come here and interfere with them. His Honour considered the plaintiff's conduct was very oppressive and litigious, and he could not refuse the costs of the application.

Land belonging to the Aylesbury Free School was taken by the London and North-Western Railway Company for the purposes of their Acts, and the purchase-money was paid into court. In some proceedings in Chancery to which the school was a party, it was ordered that the costs should be paid out of the funds of the charity. By a petition now presented for the application of the purchase-money, it was prayed that this money should be paid in discharge of the costs before mentioned, on the ground of their being an incumbrance, for the satisfaction of which the money was applicable within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act.

Goodeve appeared in support of the petition.

The Vice-Chancellor refused to make the order, as it would be an alienation of the charity lands, which the money represented, and there was no proof that the corpus of the land was charged with the costs in question.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Costs

J. V. Prior, in this case, which is reported ante, p. 152, stated that a notice of motion of appeal had been given, but an arrangement had since been made, by which the appellants were to withdraw their notice upon their costs being paid out of the estate. The Master had been applied to for his sanction to this arrangement, but he considered that he had not jurisdiction in the matter. The application now made to the Court was, that with the consent of the official manager, the Messrs. Bush undertaking to withdraw their notice of motion of appeal, their costs of the appeal, and in this branch of the Court, should be paid out of the estate.

The Vice-Chancellor accordingly directed that this should be done.

Costs—Winding-up Acts.

A party who has been present at a meeting at which a resolution was passed to wind up the affairs of a company, but who subsequently opposed a petition for an order to wind them up under the Winding-up Acts, will not be allowed the costs of such his opposition,—the Master having reported that it was expedient to wind up the company.

The facts relating to the application for the preliminary order to wind up this company were given in 18 Law T. 62.

Bigg now appeared upon the petition, in which it had been referred to the Master to ascertain and certify whether it was expedient to wind up the affairs of the company. The Master had reported that it was, and the petition now came on upon the question of costs. It appeared that this company was formed under an Act of Parliament giving powers to work mines in any part of Ireland, and the company might be dissolved at a meeting of 100 shareholders. The company having long ceased to carry on business, a meeting took place on the 5th of December, 1850, at which it was unanimously resolved that the company should be dissolved, but fifty shareholders only remaining, it was necessary to proceed to wind it up under the Joint-Stock Winding-up Acts, and the petition was accordingly presented. On that occasion a shareholder of forty-five shares asked for and obtained the reference.

Logie appeared for Mr. Parker, and asked for his costs. The Act of Parliament gave such extensive powers as to be very valuable, and Mr. Parker was unwilling that it should be rendered null without full investigation. He had not, in fact, opposed the petition, and had only filed one affidavit, and in such cases the Court would not give costs against the opposing party.

Bigg contended that Mr. Parker ought to pay all the costs. He was present at the meeting at which it was unanimously resolved to dissolve the company, and his opposition was most vexatious; 11,000*l.* were tied up in the hands of trustees, who could not touch it without the assistance of this Court.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that the Court should be very cautious how it either granted rash references, or refused to hear parties who entertained adverse views to petitioners in those cases. As it appeared in this instance that Mr. Parker had been present at a meeting at which it was unanimously resolved to wind up the company, which assumed that he had assented to it, he would not give him the costs up to this time; but as it appeared that only one affidavit had been filed, and the case had now come on for the accommodation of counsel, Mr. Parker ought not to pay the costs of this application.

Injunction—Church-rates.

The churchwardens of a parish who proceed bonâ fide to carry into effect the resolutions of the rate-payers to warm the church by the introduction of hot air or water pipes under the floor of the church, will not be restrained at the instance of one rate-payer from doing so.

Whether such a bill can be sustained by a single inhabitant rate-payer, quære.

This was a special motion to restrain the defendants, the churchwardens of the parish church of Morpeth, from executing any works under the floor of the parish church for the purpose of heating the same with hot air or hot water, and also from applying any part of the rates of the said parish in executing any works for heating the said church without the consent of the rate-payers of the said parish.

The bill was filed by the plaintiff, an inhabitant householder, and rated to the church-rate of the parish, and he thereby alleged that the parish church was a very ancient building; that the interior of the church had been used as a place of sepulture, and that the soil beneath the floor of the church was thickly mingled with bones and remains of human bodies; that plaintiff had lately discovered that a contract had been entered into by the defendants, as churchwardens, to execute certain works for heating the church with hot air or hot water, to be placed under the floor of the church, and charging that thereby the noxious gases which had been absorbed by the soil under the floor of the church would be given out, and would endanger the health and lives of the congregation, and that plaintiff and his family would be prevented from attending service in the church; that the churchwardens had not applied for or obtained a faculty from the ordinary, or consent of the parishioners or rate-payers.

A motion for an injunction in the terms above was now made.

It appeared that at a meeting which took place in the vestry on the 5th November last, a church-rate was made inter alia, for the purpose of enabling the churchwardens to render the church sufficiently warm to secure the requisite degree of comfort to the congregation, and on that occasion the plans for that purpose were laid before the meeting, and the project explained and agreed to; contracts were then entered into with stonemasons and others to carry out that resolution, and on the 5th January the works were actually commenced, but, on the 6th, notice was given to the churchwardens to suspend the works by the plaintiff, who is a solicitor, and also the secretary of the Local Board of Health at Morpeth, and the works were accordingly suspended, and this bill filed on the 27th of January.

A second notice was sent to the contractor on the 21st, and in the event of noncompliance, the plaintiff threatened an application to this Court. It also appeared that the plaintiff had applied to the vicar on the subject between November and January, and a meeting of twenty-four in vestry was suggested, and the defendants acceded to the views taken by the General Board of Health, who had communicated with the plaintiff on the subject.

Stuart and Bates, for the motion.

Malins and Dickinson, contrà, argued that the delay which had taken place between the time of the public resolution in vestry, which the plaintiff should have been aware of, and the filing of the bill, was alone sufficient to disentitle him to the injunction. The bill being filed on the 27th, special notice was given on the 28th for this injunction for the 31st; and the affidavits which were filed on the 17th of February never had been answered, which shewed that the plaintiff was in fact the sole mover in the matter; an offer had also been made to dismiss the bill upon the terms of each paying their own costs on the undertaking to do nothing in the meantime. They also contended that it was not competent for one person (not on behalf of himself and other parishioners, but alone) to file such a bill as the present.

Stuart in reply.

The Vice-Chancellor said that upon this application for an injunction a very grave question was raised upon the frame of the bill, viz. whether a single individual could sustain a bill of this description, and but that as he found clear ground for determining this motion independently of that question, he should reserve his judgment on that point until the hearing. The injunction asked, was to restrain the churchwardens from warming the church with hot-water pipes, and the scheme was originally brought before the select vestry upon the 5th November, 1851, and at that meeting the expenses of the proceeding were estimated, a plan was prepared, and a rate of 3d. in the pound agreed on. The plan was, moreover, explained to the rector and other persons present, among whom it did not appear the plaintiff was. In pursuance of their resolution, the churchwardens entered into a contract with Mr. King, and the plan was to convey the hot air or water in pipes separated from the soil by a course of brick-work set in lime. Upon the 5th January, 1852, the plaintiff, who is a solicitor and clerk to the Local Board of Health, communicated his objections to the proposed plan to Mr. Wilkinson, and on the 6th January he wrote to the churchwardens, stating that the hot pipes would generate noxious gases passing through the soil, which was composed of decomposed human bodies, some of which had been recently interred. The plaintiff suggested that the matter should be referred to the General Board of Health. Up to this time nothing could be better than the conduct of both parties. Upon the 6th January Mr. Wilkinson called at the plaintiff's office and explained the plan, and expressed surprise that the objection had not been taken previously. To this the plaintiff replied, stating that he had mentioned it to the rector a month before—a fact important, as shewing that the plaintiff was acquainted with what had been done. It was then arranged between the parties that the plaintiff should write to the Board of Health for their opinion, enclosing a statement of the case. Upon the 15th, the Board of Health wrote to the plaintiff; and on the 20th he communicated the letter to the churchwardens, which was to the effect that they thought the proposed plan objectionable, and suggesting an outer coat of Roman cement. To this the defendants at once acceded, and were proceeding to comply with the suggestion of the Board of Health, when they received a notice from the plaintiff not to proceed, inasmuch as he did not think that the opinion expressed by the Board of Health was favourable, and proposed to write again. To this the defendants also assented, and in answer to the plaintiff's suggestion to call a fresh meeting, replied "what is the use of a meeting, if you will not be bound by it?" They did not, however, refuse to call it. On the 22nd Mr. Wilkinson did write, and a meeting was agreed to be held by the 29th. Upon the 27th the bill was filed. Now up to this time he thought there was not a pretence for filing a bill. His Honour then proceeded to say that he thought that the defendants had been right throughout, and that therefore he thought he must refuse the motion, with costs.

Re EVAN'S Settlement.

Trustee Act, 1850—Practice.

A certificate of the Master on a reference under the Trustee Act, must be confirmed, and the consequential directions given, on motion.

In this case the cestui que trust, under a marriage settlement, obtained the certificate of the Master, under the 38th section of the Trustee Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60t, that new trustees should be appointed, and for a vesting order.

Shapter appeared in support of a petition, to confirm this certificate, and for the consequential directions thereon, and a question now arose, whether a petition was the proper course under the 39th section of that Act to make such an order. That section is as follows:—"And be it enacted, that any person who shall have obtained such certificate may apply by motion to the Court of Chancery, or to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, for an order to the effect set forth in such certificate, or for such other order as such person may deem himself entitled to upon the facts found by the Master." The matter had stood over to inquire into the practice.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR now said that he had inquired into the practice, and the opinion appeared to be that the proper course was by motion. A petition, moreover, was the more expensive course, and the Act expressly pointed out that by motion was the course to be pursued. It happened in this case that the Master's certificate did not appear, but the order might be taken upon production of the certificate to the registrar. The order must be taken as upon a motion. Ordered accordingly.

Auditor of poor-law accounts—Appeal by guardians to the Poor-law Board—Appointment of assistant overseer and collector of rates.

Where the guardians of a poor-law union had appealed against the disallowance by the auditor of the salary due to an assistant overseer and collector of rates appointed by them, and the Poor-law Board reversed the disallowance:

Held, that at the next audit that decision and order of the Poor-law Board was binding upon the auditor and the overseers, as well as the guardians, until removed by certiorari into this Court and quashed.

The effect of 7 & 8 Vict. 101, s. 61, is to take away the power of the vestry under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, to appoint an assistant overseer, whenever there has been an appointment in fact of a collector or assistant overseer by the guardians of an union under an existing unrescinded order of the Poor-law Board.

On the 5th April, 1837, the poor-law commissioners issued their order to the board of guardians of the Gateshead union, that they "within one month from the date of this order appoint one or more fit and proper persons to be the collector or collectors of the poor-rates of such of the several parishes comprised therein as the said guardians may deem to require a collector, and shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such appointments, report the same to us the said Poor-Law Commissioners, in order that we may approve or disallow the same, or give such other directions therein as the case may require; and in case and so often as any person so appointed shall die, or resign, or be removed, the said Board of Guardians shall as soon as conveniently may be after such death, resignation, or removal, proceed in like manner to a new appointment." On the 1st August, 1837, another order was issued reciting the last order, and another order on the 15th May then last, extending the time for appointment to the 15th day of June then next, which was issued after the previous order had expired, and another order of 27th June then last, which was also after the expiration of the last-mentioned order, extending the time to the 15th July then next, and then further extending the time until the 15th September then next. On the 8th May, 1838, Mr. James Hudson was appointed by the Board of Guardians collector of rates of the parish of Gateshead. The clerk of the Board of Guardians on the 17th May, 1838, wrote to the Poor-Law Board a letter in which he inquired respecting Mr. Hudson's appointment as collector, "As there is no existing order of the commissioners authorising the appointment, I beg to ask whether application should be made for such an order, or if it will be sufficient to forward a copy of the resolution for their confirmation." Upon this letter the Poor-Law Commissioners made a minute directing the issuing of an order, and upon such minute the following order was issued:—

"Know all men by these presents, that we, the Poor-Law Commissioners, &c. do hereby order and direct, that the Guardians of the poor of the Gateshead Union, in the county of Durham, shall, within one month from the date of this order, appoint a fit and proper person to be the collector of the poor-rates of the parish of Gateshead, if the said guardians shall deem it to require a collector, and shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such appointment, report the same to us, &c. And in case and so often as any person so appointed shall die, or resign, or be removed, the said Board of Guardians shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such death, resignation, or removal, proceed in like manner, to a new appointment, &c. And we do hereby further order that if the guardians shall deem that such parish shall require such services as are usually performed by an assistant-overseer, they may appoint the person so appointed as collector for such parish, to perform the duties of an assistant-overseer for such parish accordingly; provided always, and we do hereby order, direct, and declare, that if either of the churchwardens or overseers of the said parish is willing and desirous to collect the rates, the said parish shall not be deemed to require a collector, and that in such case the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish, shall observe the following rules and regulations, &c.

"Given under our hands and seal of office, this 8th day of June, A.D. 1838."

There was no re-appointment of Mr. Hudson by the guardians after the issuing of the last-mentioned order, but Mr. Hudson entered upon and continued to perform the duties of collector of rates up to the month of May 1842. By an order of 27th November, 1838, the Poor-law Commissioners directed that "the guardians of the poor of the Gateshead Union, in the county of Durham, shall within one month from the date of this order appoint one or more fit and proper person or persons to be the assistant-overseer, or assistant-overseers of such of the several parishes comprised therein, as the said guardians may deem to require an assistant-overseer, and shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such appointment, report the same to us, the said Poor-law Commissioners, in order that we may approve or disallow the same, or give such other directions thereon as the case may require." And after ordering that any person appointed should reside in the parish and not follow any other employment, the order proceeds, "and in case and so often as any person so appointed shall die, or resign, or be removed, the said board of guardians shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such death, resignation, or removal, proceed in like manner to a new appointment." On the 27th December, 1838, another order was issued extending the time for the appointment of assistant-overseer to the 21st January, 1839. No subsequent order was issued, and on the 6th May, 1839, it was decided by the Court of Q. B. in R. v. The Poor-law Commissioners, 9 A. & E. 301, that the Poor-law Commissioners had no authority to order guardians to appoint collectors, and thereupon the Act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, was passed. Mr. Hudson having resigned the office of collector, Mr. Robert Foreman was appointed by the guardians collector of rates and assistant-overseer, which appointment was confirmed by the Poor-law Commissioners on the 17th June, 1842. In the year 1844 the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, was passed, the 61st section of which enacts, "that the inhabitants in vestry assembled of any parish situated within the district for which any collector or assistant-overseer appointed under order of the said commissioners now acts may appoint such collector or assistant-overseer to discharge all the duties of an overseer of the poor, in addition to those of collector of poor-rates for such parish, and in the same manner as if he were appointed thereto as an assistant-overseer under the provisions of an Act passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled 'an Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor;' and whenever any such collector or assistant-overseer has been or may be appointed under any order of the said commissioners, and whilst the said order remains in force, the powers of any vestry or parish officers, or of any other persons, other than the board of guardians of such parish or union (if a board of guardians have been constituted), to appoint any collector or assistant-overseer, and (if so directed by the said commissioners) every appointment under such powers shall cease" Sec. 62 enacts, "that if the board of guardians of any parish or union make application to the said commissioners to direct the appointment of a paid collector of the poor-rates in such parish or union, or in any parish or parishes of such union, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by order under their hands and seal, to direct the said board of guardians to appoint such a collector; and the said commissioners shall have the same powers with respect to such collectors as are given to them by the said first recited Act with respect to paid officers; and all powers of the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, or of justices of the peace, or of any persons, other than the board of guardians of such parish union, to appoint any collector for any such parish as aforesaid, and (except when otherwise directed by the said commissioners) all appointments under such powers shall cease." Subsequently Mr. Foreman resigned, and on the 20th of November, 1849, Mr. John Usher was appointed by the guardians assistant-overseer and collector of rates of the parish of Gateshead. On the 24th of November, 1849, Mr. Thomas Shaftoe Robson was elected assistant-overseer by the inhabitants in vestry, under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, and his appointment was duly made by the magistrates. At the audit in May, 1850, the auditor disallowed a sum of 30*l.* paid by the guardians to Mr. Usher as a half-year's salary, and surcharged with it three persons, who were guardians of the parish of Gateshead. The guardians thereupon applied to the Poor-Law Commissioners, who, by an order dated 28th of October, 1850, under their hands and seal, addressed to the guardians of the union and the overseers of the parish and the auditor, determined that the disallowance and surcharge were illegal. The auditor at his next allowance disallowed 60*l.* for a half-year's salary to Mr. Robson, and surcharged accordingly, and allowed the 30*l.* to Mr. Usher, so giving the guardians of the union credit against the parish for 30*l.* and fixing the parish with that sum. Thereupon the auditor was called on to state the reasons for his allowance, disallowance, and surcharge, and a writ of certiorari issued to remove them into this court. A return was made by the auditor, setting out the facts and the several orders of the Poor-Law Board, and three principal questions were raised; first, whether the overseers were concluded by the decision of the Poor-Law Board on the application of the guardians against the disallowance of Mr. Usher's salary; secondly, whether the inhabitants in vestry had power to appoint an assistant-overseer, while there was an order of the Poor-Law Board in existence for the appointment of a collector or assistant-overseer; thirdly, whether there was in fact such an order in existence on the 20th of November, 1849. The case was argued (Jan. 17, 21), by Atherton and Tomlinson, in support of the auditor's return.

The judgment of the Court was now pronounced by Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—On bringing up the accounts of the auditor of the Gateshead union two objections were made (there was another objection to a small sum, which was abandoned in the course of the argument); the two substantial objections were:—First, to the allowance of 30*l.* paid by the guardians of the union for a quarter's salary of John Usher as collector of the rates, and assistant-overseer of the parish of Gateshead appointed by the guardians of the union. Secondly, to the disallowance of 60*l.* paid by the overseers of the parish to Thomas Shaftoe Robson for a half-year's salary as assistant-overseer elected by the vestry. As to the first objection, it appears that the auditor, considering that John Usher had not been legally appointed on the 16th and 17th of May, 1850, at his audit then held, disallowed to the guardians of the union the sum of 30*l.* so paid to Usher, and surcharged three persons, guardians of the poor of the parish, with that sum. These parish guardians required him to state his reasons, which he did; and thereupon they wrote to the Poor-Law Board, under the 36th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. The Poor-Law Board by their order of the 28th of October, 1850, decided that the disallowance and surcharge were unlawful. The auditor, therefore, on a subsequent audit on the 15th November, 1850, in obedience to such decision, reversed his former disallowance, and allowed the sum of 30*l.* to the guardians of the union. The effect of this is to give the guardians of the union credit for 30*l.* in their accounts with the parish, and to fix the parish with it. The overseers now apply to us, and contend that although the guardians of the parish, who elected to appeal to the Poor-Law Board, are bound by their decision, yet that they the overseers, representing the parish at large, are no parties to that appeal, and are not bound by the decision. Whether they may be right in so contending or not, still it is plain that in making that decision and order the Poor-Law Board were acting strictly within the jurisdiction given to them by the 36th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, and that the 105th section of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76 applies, and their order must be obeyed until set aside by the Court on removal by certiorari, which has not been done here. The order is addressed to the guardians of the union, to the overseers of the parish, to the then guardians of the parish, and to the auditor; and therefore the auditor was not only justified in allowing the 30*l.* in obedience to that order, but bound to do so, and this Court must confirm that allowance wholly irrespective of the question whether Usher was strictly appointed or not. As to the second question, the disallowance of 60*l.* to the overseers of the poor, as the salary of Thomas Shaftoe Robson, that involves the question, whether he was duly appointed to the office of assistant-overseer. He was elected on the 26th of November, 1849, by the inhabitants in vestry, under the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, s. 7, and all the requisitions of that Act were complied with. The question is, whether any subsequent Acts, and the circumstances which have occurred, have deprived the parish of the right to so appoint him. Now, no Act prior to that of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, directly deprives them of that right, whatever powers the intermediate Acts may have conferred on the Poor-law Board. The 61st section of that Act, after reciting the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, which confirmed the appointment of the collectors of poor-rates under the orders of the Poor-law Board, and further reciting, "that it is expedient that such collector should in certain cases be invested with other of the duties of overseers of the poor," enacts "that the inhabitants in vestry assembled of any parish, situated within the district for which any collector or assistant-overseer appointed under any order of the said commissioners now acts, may appoint such collector or assistant-overseer to discharge all the duties of an overseer of the poor, in addition to those of collector of the poor-rate for such parish, and in the same manner as if he were appointed thereto, as an assistant-overseer under the provisions of an Act passed in the 59th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intitled, 'An Act to amend the Laws for the Relief of the Poor,' and wherever any such collector or assistant-overseer has been or may be appointed under any order of the said commissioners, and whilst the said order remains in force, the powers of any vestry or parish officers, or of any other persons other than the Board of Guardians of such parish or union (if a Board of Guardians have been constituted), to appoint any collector or assistant-overseer, and (if so directed by the said commissioners) every appointment under such powers shall cease." The first part of this clause as to inhabitants in vestry adding power to a collector, applies only to collectors who are acting as such at the time of the passing of the Act (9th August, 1844), and is therefore immaterial to the present question. The latter part in terms, forbids the inhabitants to exercise the powers of the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, whilst there is a collector or assistant-overseer appointed under any order of the Poor-law Board, and whilst such order remains in force. Certainly Usher had been appointed collector and assistant-overseer under an order of the Poor-law Board in November, 1849, and that order remained in force (if ever it was in force at all) at the time when Robson was appointed on the 26th of the same month. But it is contended that the order of the Poor-law Board of the 8th of June, 1838, under which, (being prospective) Usher was appointed, never was in force and was illegal. It is remarkable that no Act of Parliament in express terms authorises the Poor-law Board to order the appointment of an assistant-overseer. The 46th section of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, as to paid officers, does not apply to an assistant-overseer, not even to a collector of poor-rates, as was held by this Court in the 9 A. & E. p. 911; Re The Poor-law Commissioners, a similar case. The statute the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, s. 2, which confirms the appointment of collectors already made, does not mention assistant-overseers, nor does it even give a prospective power to the Poor-law Board to order the appointment of collectors. The statute of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 62, does give such power as to collectors, but does not mention assistant-overseers. Still the 61st section of the last Act, using the language we have before cited, seems to recognise the appointment of collectors or assistant-overseers, under the orders of the Poor-law Board, and in such case prohibits the inhabitants in vestry from appointing a collector and assistant-overseer, although it may be observed that there is no Act of Parliament authorising the inhabitants in vestry to appoint a collector, but only assistant-overseer under the 59 Geo. 3. It would seem that the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, by so recognising such appointments, either gives the power to order it to the Poor-law Board by implication, which would be a strange mode of legislation, or attaches, as a consequence to such an appointment, whether the order for it be good or bad, if it remains unrescinded by this Court, a prohibition to the vestry to appoint an assistant-overseer. This also would be a strange enactment. However strange it may be, still we do not see how we can give effect to the Act without holding that the appointment, in fact, of collector, or assistant-overseer, or both, by the guardians of the union, under an existing unrescinded order of the Poor-law Board, takes away the power of the vestry under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12. Some attempt was made to shew, that no order of the Poor-law Board was in existence on the 20th of November, 1849, when Usher was appointed; but we think this attempt failed, because the order of, the 8th of June, 1838, was prospective to appoint from time to time, and has never been rescinded. Thus it appears to us, in point of law, the auditor was right in allowing the 30*l.* to be paid to Usher, and disallowing the 60*l.* paid to Robson; consequently this rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

LONDON SITTINGS AFTER HILARY TERM.

Thursday, Feb 26.

(Before Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. and a Common Jury.)

SIVEWRIGHT v. RICHARDSON.

Principal and agent—Negligence of agent—Broker's duty in making mercantile contracts—Liability for negligence—What is negligence in a broker of the city of London in the ordinary course of business.

A broker of the city of London who negotiates a contract between the buyer and seller of merchandise is bound either to enter the contract correctly in his book forthwith, or to deliver a correct note of the contract to both buyer and seller, and is liable to his principal for any damage the latter may sustain by his negligence in this respect.

Where a broker of the city of London makes out a contract, and does not enter the same in his book, but delivers the bought and sold notes to the parties, and these notes vary so materially that an action cannot be sustained on the contract, the broker is liable for the damages occasioned to his principal by the invalidity of the contract, and the costs incurred by the principal in unsuccessfully endeavouring to enforce it.

This was an action brought to recover damages from the defendant for the loss sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's negligence in making out the bought and sold notes of a contract on the plaintiff's part to sell to a Mr. Archibald 500 tons of pig iron. The declaration had also a count for negligence on the defendant's part in omitting to attend as a witness at the trial of Sivewright v. Archibald.

Bovill and Unthank for the plaintiff.

Watson, Q.C. and Pulling for the defendant.

It appeared from the evidence that the defendant was in February, 1850, employed by the plaintiff to sell 500 tons of Dunlops pig-iron; and he shortly afterwards concluded a bargain with a Mr. Archibald for the same. The defendant did not enter the contract in his book, but he delivered bought and sold notes to the plaintiff and Archibald. The price of iron fell, and Archibald refused to complete the contract. An action was then brought on the contract by the present plaintiff, which was entered for trial at Guildford, at the Autumn Assizes, 1850; but owing to the absence of the present defendant, the record was obliged to be withdrawn. The trial afterwards came on at Guildhall, when the bought and sold notes made out by the present defendant were found to vary as to the description of the iron. The sold note describing the iron as "500 tons, Messrs. Dunlop, Wilson, and Co.'s pig-iron;" and the bought note describing the iron merely as "500 tons of Scotch pig-iron." A verdict was returned for the plaintiff in this action, leave being reserved to the then defendant, Archibald, to move to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit.

The point of variance between the bought and sold notes was afterwards elaborately argued in the full Court (in Sivewright v. Archibald, 20 L. J. N. S. 529, Q.B.; 17 L. J. 264), when a majority of the judges held the objection fatal, and a rule absolute made for entering a nonsuit. The damages now sought to be recovered against the defendant were for the loss sustained by the plaintiff in having the verdict, Sivewright v. Archibald, set aside; together with the costs in that action, and also the costs of the day, occasioned by withdrawing the record when the same case came on for trial at Guildford.

Lord CAMPBELL, in summing up the case to the jury, said the question they had to decide was one of great importance to the commercial city of London. There had been many lamentable instances of neglect by brokers, whose duty it was to act for both parties, and who ought to enter contracts in their books, or, at all events, to see that the bought and sold notes agreed, so that the contracts which they made might be binding upon the parties. The plaintiff supposed the broker had done his duty, and acting on that belief, he had sued Archibald, and failed in his action. The same case had happened again and again, to the great detriment of commerce. His lordship then called the attention of the jury to the facts of this case, and thought there had been gross negligence on the part of the defendant. If the jury were of that opinion, the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the costs to which he had been put in consequence. The plaintiff was also entitled to damages on the second count.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff upon both counts, with 391*l.* damages.

Lord CAMPBELL said he entirely concurred in the verdict which the jury had given. The verdict would prove most useful, and he wished that an account of the trial were given to every broker in the kingdom.

Re CRONEN and SEXTON.

Partnership—Evidence.

Where partners apply at the same time to be discharged under the Insolvent Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 107 (English analogous, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), and the petition of one is dismissed for alleged suppression of property, whilst the other is discharged, counsel for the partner whose petition has been dismissed, will not be allowed to examine the other partner touching the partnership property.

The insolvents in this matter were traders in Cork, where their petitions came to be heard before Mr. Commissioner Baldwin, who directed an adjournment to Dublin; and they now came before the full Court for their discharge. Sexton was about to be discharged without opposition, but Cronen was opposed by Meetee, solicitor, on the ground of suppression of property. He stated that, upon an examination of the insolvent's books, he discovered that there was a discrepancy between the moneys received and those accounted for in the balance-sheet, amounting to about 800*l.* which was a clear proof of a suppression of property to that amount, and the schedule should therefore be dismissed.

Levy, for the insolvent, admitted that the difference as shewn by the books would require an amended balance-sheet and schedule, and he could not object to the dismissal of the petition; and when it was dismissed, he would claim the right of examining Sexton, whom he alleged had made away with the money.

Mr. Commissioner CURRAN said, no such right existed, inasmuch as Cronen did not return his partner a creditor.

Levy contended that Cronen's interest in the partnership property gave him all the rights a creditor could have to examine his insolvent partner with a view to take down his evidence, as well as to discover property for creditors, and he ought to be permitted to examine Sexton before his discharge: facts might be brought out that would shew he ought not to be discharged at present.

The COURT were of opinion that such a course would be letting in opposition on the part of a person not returned a creditor. When Cronen came to be heard on an amended schedule, he then might summon his partner and examine him.

Sexton was then discharged, without counsel being permitted to examine him on the part of his partner.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Re C. W. BEVAN.

An arrangement lately made by an insolvent in the Court of Bankruptcy under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, does not prevent the exercise of jurisdiction by this Court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

Mr. Commissioner LAW said,—In this case opposition is made by Mr. Nicholls on the part of a creditor who obtained judgment against the insolvent early in 1851, and was one of a list of creditors in regard of whom he soon after put himself into the Bankruptcy Court, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70. The first objection is, that the Court ought not now to entertain the matters of this petition so far as they relate to those creditors, because such matters are subject to the other jurisdiction. No one has been so determined as I have been to keep an insolvency in this court distinct from a prior insolvency of the same party. No one has been more desirous to avoid an undue interference with, or anticipation of the judgment of another Court. But I seek to found the decision of such questions, as they arise, upon some fair principle. Thus I have rejected the notion that a man's schedule shall contain those who were his creditors in an insolvency already adjudicated, on the plain ground that he now seeks no privilege as to them; and as they are by law incapable to claim payment of him, I hold it both absurd and unjust to treat them as parties to a suit in which the law gives them no interest. The insolvency in which they were creditors produced a definite adjustment of the future relation of all parties; and the terms of that adjustment prohibit them from being creditors in a new insolvency. I observed the same principle where a prior insolvency, whose concerns it was attempted to mix up with a schedule under 1 & 2 Vict. had been one under the Protection Statutes. But there are in the law other schemes of insolvency, where the results are not always so definite and intelligible, and may not so necessarily exclude the creditors from appearing in a subsequent process. If a bankrupt petitions this Court, desiring the additional chance for his personal liberty, we decline to deal with the subject; because it is duly before another tribunal, which has the power through a certificate to pronounce for him the benefit which he seeks from us; and it does not become this Court to enter upon the question of a speedier indulgence. But there is a contingency under which this Court has been used to relax that principle of non intervention. If in bankruptcy all judgment on the merits is refused, and the party is left with no protection, present or future, we do then entertain the question of liberty, on the one principle that a man shall not be imprisoned for life. Some may think that even here we should abstain. At all events the case is an exception; and it is the only exception to the rule which I approve, namely, that a process of insolvency here shall not touch matters which have before been definitively dealt with, or which are under another jurisdiction competent to deal with them. What, then, is the process now spoken of, as calculated to prevent me from dealing with the rights of certain parties under the petition lately presented to this Court? It is a process under which the Court that superintends it has no power to determine the future rights of the parties. Nevertheless, if a debtor, having, through the statute in question, brought himself and his creditors under the control of an arrangement in the Court of Bankruptcy, should presently change his mind, and without waiting for the effect of the arrangement contrive a plan for transferring himself to this Court, I should be ready to disappoint his project, and leave him to the arena which he had first selected. But when we see the circumstances which bring Mr. Bevan before me, and the terms of the arrangement which he made, there is no pretence under which I could reject him. I cannot throw him back into the Bankruptcy Court. They cannot receive him. They could do nothing for him or his creditors. Their business was only to superintend a compact, which was, that the debtor should make certain periodical payments, and should receive a limited and renewable protection. He could annul this compact whenever he pleased. He did so. By not paying he forfeited his protection, and both parties were remitted to their prior rights and duties. Over those rights and duties the Bankruptcy Court has now no jurisdiction whatever; and the debtor, who is in custody on eight detainers, some by his "arrangement" creditors, some by others, can look for his liberty to no power in England but the power of this Court. This question being disposed of, I am to consider the merit of the case. The progress of the insolvent's incumbrances has been this:—In 1848, by being secretary to a non-existing rail-road, he got into debt 150*l.* besides two law-bills. He married in March 1849; and he informs us by September of that year he owed about 800*l.* To alleviate his embarrassments he then first made "arrangement" in the Court of Bankruptcy, and enjoyed the protection of that Court for six months. He gave it up in March 1850, and in April 1851, presented a new petition of "arrangement," with debts increased to 1,800*l.* He enjoyed his new protection till the 27th December, when he was arrested; and in January petitioned this Court, with a list of debts in the aggregate above 5,000*l.* Mr. Bevan, as appears from his evidence and that of his attorney, Mr. Chas. Lewis, desires to throw all the blame of this rapid increase of debt on the perverse operation of the system from which he sought relief. Now, though it is obvious that his embarrassments are likely to be increased by his deluding himself with a relief of that description, still the extent to which he has multiplied his debts cannot be imputed to that as the operating cause: it involves blame, and much blame, on his part. We will assume that, in the first instance, he made an excusable blunder, in supposing that the process of "arrangement" would suit his particular case. The inventors of that process, in which there is very little of judicial interference, and chiefly the sanctioning of a private bargain with some formalities of a court of justice, evidently were influenced by benevolent feeling towards a non-trading debtor: and so spared him from the publicity of the Gazette. Hence arise incidents not tending to a reasonable result. He is required to exhibit a certain fraction of his creditors as assenting to the course which he adopts; but the tribunal is prevented from knowing whether this fraction is a true one. The total must be unsafe; for the only parties invited to the conference are the debtor and his friends. The tribunal is also to be satisfied that the petitioner is exempt from certain enumerated blemishes; that he has fallen into debt without fraud, violence, vice, or injustice to his neighbour; and that his course of action is invested with certain meritorious and reasonable properties. But, while this satisfaction is made a requisite preliminary, the means of arriving at it are utterly wanting; for here again the commissioner is not permitted to have evidence, excepting from the debtor and his avowed friends. The awkwardness of this becomes more apparent when we find the system to be characterised by the introduction of a power which had just been abolished from bankruptcy, namely, the power in a large fraction of creditors of binding the smaller portion to submit to unwelcome terms. We all know that the minority may be those who have lately been damaged in order to get the means of conciliating the majority; and, if this sort of unfairness were an item for judicial investigation, the compulsory vote might be judicially rejected. But such exercise of a veto is not provided for. Satisfaction that all is right is to be entertained in limine, when the commissioner can know nothing about it, unless the applicant should make a statement which puts him out of court at the same time that he puts himself into it. The officer of the court, after presiding at the two meetings, reports the requisite majority. This is signed as an exhibit, and the protection is continued. We certainly find afterwards, when penalties are provided against the agents of the law who may fail to respect the protecting certificate, that there is an exception as to any debt, which may have been incurred without those honest propensities hich the Act seems to require. But as no machinery is provided through which a sheriff's officer can decline to recognise that instrument as a voucher of the debtor's purity and the Court's satisfaction, he surely must adopt these conclusions, though they be but fictions of law. When the affairs of an insolvent man come into this place, light is thrown upon them by the admission of evidence; accordingly, in this instance, it is impossible not to see with what hopelessness of payment those debts were contracted on which Mr. Bevan made his last petition for arrangement. It is true, as urged on his part, that the great vice of the system, privacy, meant as a boon to the debtor, may be his insidious enemy. Through that blemish in the system he got a short reprieve, which truth would not have earned for him; and this gave more scope to his ill-advised proceedings. But this fault in the law is not to be rested upon as having produced, and so excusing, his present financial condition. It does not account for a growth of debt, in two years, from 800*l.* to 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* especially when there was all the time an income on which he could have maintained himself. In both instances the process of arrangement was sure to fail of its object, because the adversaries, who should have been disarmed, were not disarmed by it. He only gained a little time. This was no injury to him; and it was cheaply gained by the payment of 50*l.* twice a year in reduction of his debts. He multiplied those debts, not because of the arrangements, but in spite of them. The futility, however, of the process for such a case is easily explained. He required, as every insolvent man does, protection from all creditors. He could only have it against those whom he named. He could only name a part, for he only knew a part. Therefore he could only have protection against a part. This must be the case with every one who has sent forth, as Mr. Bevan did, negotiable securities into the world. The mass of his debts were of this description. Under the insolvent law, this has not such fatal consequence. All the world has a general invitation, while every known party has moreover a special invitation; and the privilege gained affects all, including bill-holders not ascertained. The protection laws are the same; they began in 1842, and in the second statute of 1844, this reasonable provision was borrowed from the Insolvent Act, at the same moment the "arrangement" law was first contrived. That law was necessarily incapable of this beneficial provision. And see what comes of that defect. In September 1849, Mr. Bevan first seeks the aid of the Court of Bankruptcy. No sooner has he obtained a temporary protection against those with whom he contracted his debts, than he is assailed on all sides by the assignees of those debts, bill-holders. He purchases their forbearance for a time by heavy premiums; and, to pay the purchase-money, borrows from fresh parties at a ruinous rate of interest. When the allowed time has expired, the same process is gone through again; the forbearance is to be renewed and paid for, and the means of paying to be provided. Thus debts are renewed and increased, much as they would have been without the arrangement, and claimants, with their rights of action, are multiplied. In March 1850, Mr. Bevan elected to abandon his protection, on perceiving that it could not ultimately benefit him. That he might easily have renewed it, is apparent, on looking to his account of moneys borrowed about that time. The interval between that time and April, 1851, was employed by him in obtaining some large loans, and very many smaller ones, through discount of bills: and one would have thought that experience might have dissuaded him from resorting a second time to a process which promised only a worse recurrence of those disastrous incidents. But alive only to the convenience of the moment, and wilfully blind to the mischief that must come to himself and loss to others, he plunges again into a bankruptcy "arrangement" in April, 1851, having borrowed heavily during the three months immediately preceding. By paying 50*l.* down, and promising 50*l.* more in January, he gets a protection against specified creditors. Then again arises, as of course, a host of plaintiffs, untouched by his instrument of defence. And what now is the result of his efforts? Though he actually borrows about 1,200*l.* more, and incurs fresh tradesmen's bills, he only keeps himself out of custody till the 27th of December. Even the 50*l.* which he was to pay out of his salary as the January instalment had been anticipated: and he comes to this Court, with a list of debts amounting in the aggregate to 5,000*l.* It seems to me that the creditors under that very merciful arrangement are entitled to say, that that proceeding was delusive on the part of the debtor. He was preparing, not to diminish his debts, but to increase them. His experience of the prior arrangement made him know that a few months would make his state still more calamitous, as had happened immediately after that proceeding. I have rarely heard of a case where such an amount of debt was contracted with so little hope of payment. A man in trade, who struggles too long and accepts credit while he can get it, is far more excusable than a nontrader, who follows the course observable in the present case: who, with the certain knowledge that every day is making his condition worse, and only to drive off for a few weeks the crisis of arrest, goes on borrowing from every quarter, whether professional lenders or friends, as if not caring for the consequence to them or himself. With such a history before me, I certainly think that the insolvent may be deemed fortunate, that no more of those who have lost their money by lending it to him, whether before or after the arrangement, should have come to make complaint. But, though one only stands forth, in a case of conduct so reckless and injurious, the Court is not warranted in affording the relief prayed without some qualification. It would be idle to pretend to acquit this gentleman of being the cause of his own embarrassments. His exploits in the Court of Bankruptcy are but episodes in his career of imprudence. He will be discharged in six months from the vesting order

REG. v. BAILEY.

False pretence—Variance between averment and evidence—Power of amendment under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1.

In an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, the pretence alleged was that the defendant had been to B. on behalf of the prosecutrix, and had served a certain order of affiliation on one J. B. and that he was entitled to receive for serving the said order the sum of 5*s.*:

Held, that this averment was not supported by proof that the defendant said that he had been with the order to B. to serve J. B. and left it with the landlady where J. B. lodged, he being out, &c.:

Held, also, that this was not an amendable variance within the meaning of the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1.

The prisoner, George Edward Bailey, was indicted for obtaining money by means of false pretences.

The indictment alleged that he pretended to Emma Fletcher, of West Bromwich, &c. "that he, the said George Edward Bailey, had been to Bretley, in Derbyshire, on behalf of the said Emma Fletcher, and served a certain order of affiliation on one John Bell (meaning John Bell of Bretley aforesaid, named in the said order of affiliation), and that he, the said George Edward Bailey, was then entitled to have and receive of the said Emma Fletcher, for serving the said order, the sum of 5s. whereas in truth and in fact the said George Edward Bailey had not been to Bretley, in Derbyshire, on behalf of the said Emma Fletcher, to serve the said order of affiliation on the said John Bell; and whereas the said George Edward Bailey was not then entitled to have and receive of the said Emma Fletcher the sum of 5s. by means of which false pretence the said George Edward Bailey obtained from the said Emma Fletcher two pieces of the current coin called half-crowns, of the moneys of the said Emma Fletcher," &c.

Emma Fletcher, the prosecutrix, deposed that the prisoner made the following statement to her:—"He told me he had been with the order to Bretley, to serve one Bell, and left it with the landlady at the Chesterfield Arms there, where Bell lodged, he being out; that he would not overcharge for his journey," &c.

Huddleston, for the prisoner, submitted that the allegation in the indictment was not supported by the evidence. The indictment alleged that the defendant pretended that he had served the order of affiliation personally on John Bell, whereas what the defendant said was, that he had left the order with a third person to give to him.

Scotland, for the prosecution, contended that the substantial charge was sufficiently proved. The defendant clearly intended to cause the prosecutrix to believe that the order had reached Bell's hands; and that a service had been effected by his instrumentality.

Greaves, Q.C. after retiring to consult Mr. Baron Platt, sitting in the Crown Court, said he was sorry to stop a case on this point, but both he and Mr. Baron Platt were clearly of opinion that the allegation in the indictment meant a personal service, and that consequently the pretence was not proved as alleged.

Scotland then applied to amend the indictment by making the allegation correspond with the evidence.

Greaves, Q.C. said that he was afraid that he had no power to order the amendment under the recent Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 1. As originally drawn, the Bill provided for such a case, but those words had been struck out in the House of Lords. The section, as it stands now, provides for a variance between the statement in the indictment, "and the evidence offered in proof thereof, in the name of any county, riding, division, city, borough, town corporate, parish, township, or place mentioned or described in any such indictment, or in the name or description of any person or persons, body politic or corporate, therein stated or alleged to be the owner or owners of any property, real or personal, which shall form the subject of any offence charged therein, or in the name or description of any person or persons, body politic or corporate, therein stated or alleged to be injured or damaged, or intended to be injured or damaged by the commission of such offence, or in the christian name or surname, or both christian name and surname, or other description whatsoever, of any person or persons whomsoever therein named or described, or in the name or description of any matter or thing whatsoever therein named or described, or in the ownership of any property named or described therein." In this case the variance could not be said to be in the name or description of any matter or thing named or described in the indictment. He was not sorry this case had occurred, for it illustrated the utility and necessity for the provision originally contained in the Bill.

The prisoner was therefore acquitted.

Saturday, Jan. 17.

(Before Perrin, Crampton, and Moore, JJ.)

Meara v. Edwards.

Practice—Setting fi. fa. aside—Bond conditioned to abide award.

On a motion to set aside a fi. fa. which has been issued on a judgment entered contrary to good faith, and the understanding of the parties ... a bond condition for payment by one of two partners to the other, of whatever sum should be found due on taking the account of a temporary partnership transaction, by an arbitration agreed upon, where there are conflicting statements, and where there is a primâ facie of incorrectness and partiality on the part of the arbitrator, the Court will direct an issue to try the correctness of the arbitrator's finding, in order to save the parties the delay and expense of going into a Court of Equity.

Martley, Q.C. applied to make absolute the conditional order to set aside the judgment, notwithstanding cause shewn. The plaintiff and defendant had entered into a temporary partnership for the purpose of trading in whiskey. This partnership continued for three months, when they came to the determination of winding it up, and taking the account. The defendant meeting at the office of plaintiff's attorney in Cork, where plaintiff resides, plaintiff, and a gentleman of the name of Cottar, to whom they agreed to leave the taxing of the accounts, the defendant entered into a bond in the penal sum of 120*l.* to pay whatever sum Cottar should find to be owing by defendant to plaintiff. There was considerable delay in getting the parties together in order to produce their books and vouchers before Cottar, to enable him to decide, as the defendant was a traveller for several English houses of business, and defendant's books and other requisite documents were at Bristol, in England. On the 25th of July, 1851, Cottar wrote to defendant to Bristol, calling on him to attend him at Kingstown, and that he would proceed to make his decision on the 1st of August whether he attended or not. Defendant being engaged in his business did not attend at Kingstown until the 7th of August, and on the 8th there was an agreement between plaintiff, defendant, and Cottar, to meet on the following day, Saturday, at defendant's hotel in Dublin, and proceed to the arbitration and taking the account. On that day defendant received a note from Cottar, saying that he could not come to town, but that he would be at home at half-past three. On the evening of the same day defendant went to Cottar's house at Kingstown, and saw there plaintiff and Cottar, who were then indisposed to going into the account. On the Monday following Cottar wrote to defendant to say that he had made an award, and would not go into the matter again. On the following day judgment was entered on the bond, and execution issued for 45*l.* being the amount of the award, which sum was levied under the fi. fa.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C. (with whom Johnes).—Mr. Cottar states in his affidavit that he made the award on the 1st of August, as he informed defendant in his first letter that he would. The arbitrator is a brother-in-law of the defendant, and not likely to make an ex parte decision. It was impossible to get defendant to attend. [Perrin, J.—How do you reconcile Cottar's statement in his affidavit that he made this award on the 1st of August with those letters written to defendant, making appointments with him after the 1st of August, and saying that he would be at home?] Mr. Cottar states, in his affidavit that these letters had reference to other business transactions. After such delay on the part of the defendant in coming before the Court on conflicting affidavits, the Court ought not to entertain this application.

Meagher in reply.—We lost no time. The affidavit on which we move was drafted and ready to be sworn before the first day of last Term. But from defendant being unable to find a commissioner to take his affidavit, and sending it backwards and forwards, all this delay occurred.

Crampton, J.—If we refuse the motion it would be a great hardship on the defendant. To send the parties into equity to take this account would impose considerable delay and expense. The best course would be to direct an issue to a jury, to find whether any, and what, sum was due by the defendant to the plaintiff. The money which has been levied under the fi. fa. to be paid into Court, and the plaintiff here to be plaintiff on the trial of this issue.

Reg. v. Hart.

Practice—Bail—Amount.

This Court will allow a person against whom a strong case on the information is made out, of sending a threatening letter, to stand out on sufficient bail.

This was an application that the prisoner might be admitted to bail. The offence charged was sending a threatening letter to the magistrates. Messrs. Forman and Channing, who had committed him, had refused to take bail; under these circumstances this application was necessary. The prisoner was prepared to give ample bail.

Perrin, for the Crown, opposed the application. The informations which had been sworn, stated that the threatening letter which had been sent was all in the hand-writing of the prisoner, and the person stating this was well acquainted with the handwriting of the prisoner, who was a country schoolmaster. It would be very wrong, under such circumstances, to allow a prisoner on whom so serious an offence was charged, to stand out on bail.

Crampton, J.—Unless very strong reasons offered, why should you refuse substantial bail? Let the prisoner find two sureties for 50*l.* each, and his own bail for 100*l.* before the committing magistrates, Messrs. Forman and Channing.

Habeas Corpus—Practice.

Where C. H. an unmarried girl, between sixteen and seventeen years of age, had, since her father's death, with the assent of her guardian, resided with a married sister and M. D. her husband, the Court, holding that the latter stood in loco parentis, granted a habeas corpus to bring up C. H. upon the application of M. D. founded upon an affidavit that she was detained from her family by a third party by means of fraudulent representations.

Hayes, on behalf of a Mr. Mark Delany, moved for a writ of Habeas Corpus, directed to James Glascow, ordering him to bring up the body of Catherine Hand. It appeared that Delany was married to Eliza Hand, sister of Catherine Hand. That their father, James Hand, died in 1844, leaving five children, of whom Catherine Hand was one, and who attained her sixteenth year in September, 1851. Upon the death of James Hand, Catherine, and the other children, came to reside with their sister Eliza, who was married to Delany, and remained with them until the 5th of January. Under the will of her grandfather, Catherine Hand was entitled to from 300*l.* to 400*l.* in case she should attain the age of twenty-one years, or marry with the consent of Edward Mooney, the surviving executor of the will. It was also stated upon affidavit, that the children resided with Mr. Delany with the approbation of Mooney and the Rev. Mr. Dunne, the guardian of the children; that James Glascow lived within a quarter of a mile from Delany's house; that in January he applied to Delany to use his influence with the Misses Hand, to induce one of them to marry him, not particularising which of them, which Delany refused to do; that on the 5th of January the sister of James Glascow spent the evening at Delany's house; that Delany was obliged to leave the house in the evening, and did not return till late, when he found that Catherine Hand had left his house with Glascow's sister. It then proceeded to state facts, from which it appeared that she had proceeded to Dublin, and that James Glascow admitted that she was in his custody. The affidavit further stated that Catherine Hand was detained by the fraudulent representations of Glascow, and that Delany's object in applying for the writ was to restore her to her friends.

Moore, J.—I do not recollect a case of this sort; but as I take Mr. Delany to be in loco parentis, I think you are entitled to the order.

On a subsequent day Catherine Hand was brought up in obedience to the writ, and was left at liberty to proceed to her friends, James Glascow being ordered not to interfere with her.

Peters v. The Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company.

Railway Company—Notice to treat—Mandamus.

A company's special Act provided that, where contracts for lands required by the company were in existence at the time of the passing of the statute, the value need not be assessed by the officer appointed by the Board of Trade. The Court Held, that a mere notice to treat did not come within this exception, and refused to compel the company to proceed to assess compensation by means of a jury.

Butt, Q.C. and Bond Coxe, moved in this case to make absolute a conditional order, which had been obtained on a former day, for a mandamus, requiring the company to take the necessary steps to award compensation to the applicant for a plot of ground required for the purposes of the company, and in reference to which a notice to treat was served in May 1848. The abstract of title to the lands had been furnished to the company's solicitor, and the sum of 1,200*l.* claimed as the purchase-money. It was now contended on behalf of the applicant, that the recent statute, providing that the value of land required by a railway company should be assessed by an officer appointed by the Board of Trade, did not apply, inasmuch as the company's special Act exempted from the operation of this statute all contracts which were previously in existence, and the service of a notice to treat constituted a contract within the meaning of the section. Without calling on

M. Barry and Coffey, who appeared on behalf of the company,

Crampton, J. said, that in the opinion of the Court a mere notice to treat was not within the the exception, and that the statute having appointed an arbitration, the present remedy was not by means of an inquisition and the finding of a jury, therefore the cause shewn should be allowed.

Coxe submitted that the order should not be discharged with costs.

Coffey.—All this litigation has been about twenty perches of ground.

Crampton, J.—The question raised is a new one, and the majority of the Court are of opinion that no costs should be given to the company.

WATKINS v. WILLIAMS.

Conditions precedent in subsequent petition — Grounds of appeal not stated in the petition of appeal.

A married woman having with her husband levied a fine of her real estate, an undivided moiety to such uses as she should by deed or will appoint, by her will devised the same to her husband, with power to sell or to raise money thereon by way of mortgage or otherwise, subject to a proviso that such part of such sums so to be raised as should be unexpended at his death should be charged upon certain houses belonging to the husband to be paid to her four nieces, share and share alike, and in case the estate should be mortgaged for less than its full value, then she devised the reversion of the same to her four nieces as tenants in common. The husband mortgaged the estate, but made no such charge as was required on his own houses. After the husband's death the nieces and their husbands mortgaged their estate, and in cross suits for redemption and partition and foreclosure, a foreclosure was decreed, and it was thereby declared that the mortgage made by the husband was a valid charge, but no commission for a partition was directed as prayed in the redemption suit. It was Held, that mortgage debt created by the husband was a valid charge, and that the direction that he should charge his own houses was not a condition precedent.

Held, also, that the owners of the equity of redemption will not be allowed to insist on a direction for a partition being inserted in the decree on a redemption suit against the will of the mortgagee, who has no interest in the question.

Objections to a decree not raised upon the petition of appeal cannot be taken on the hearing, as respondents would thereby be taken by surprise.

This was an appeal against the decree of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, the facts of which are fully stated in the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is an appeal from the decree of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce upon the following grounds:—First, on the ground that it ought not to have been declared by the decree that certain mortgages created by Rees Davis were valid; secondly, on the ground that the equitable mortgage created for securing 600*l*. is not valid; and thirdly, on the ground that a partition ought to have been directed to be made between the different parties interested in the estates to which the mortgage referred. These are the grounds which appear in the petition of appeal. Other objections were taken by the appellants on the hearing of the appeal; but as I do not think it is competent to the appellants to take objections to the decree which are not stated on the petition of appeal, I can take no notice of them. The facts of the case are very complicated, but I will state such as are relevant and material to the judgment I am about to pronounce. By indentures of the 12th and 13th of May, 1817, George Price Watkins, under whom the respondents claim, took a transfer of a mortgage for 1,200*l*. on an estate called "Lower Tylecrown." Some years prior to this Lewis Williams, being the owner of the equity of redemption of Lower Tylecrown, also owner in fee of Upper Tylecrown, devised these estates to his daughters Abigail and Winifred, as tenants in common in fee, and died in the year 1802. Abigail Williams intermarried with Walter Lewis, and Winifred Williams intermarried with Rees Davis. In or about the year 1824 Abigail Lewis died intestate, leaving her husband Walter Lewis and three children—Edward Williams Lewis, her son and heir at law; Mary, afterwards the wife of Thomas Haverd, and Margaret, afterwards the wife of John Lewis. Edward Williams Lewis, the only son and heir of Abigail Lewis, died, leaving his sisters, Mary Haverd and Margaret Lewis, him surviving, in whom the moiety which belonged to Abigail Lewis became vested, as his co-heiresses at law. In September 1833 Walter Lewis, Thomas Haverd, and John Lewis, made an equitable mortgage of the moiety which belonged to Abigail Lewis to the said George Price Watkins for securing 600*l*. one-half of which appears to have been paid. By indentures of 16th and 17th November, 1838, John Lewis and Margaret his wife made a mortgage to George Price Watkins of one undivided fourth part or share of Upper and Lower Tylecrown, 1,150*l*. By indenture of the 21st of May, 1813, Rees Davis covenanted with Samuel Church that he, Rees Davis, and Winifred his wife, would levy a fine of her moiety of Upper and Lower Tylecrown to such uses as Winifred should by deed or will appoint; and a fine was levied accordingly. Winifred Davis devised to Rees Davis, her husband, her share of Upper and Lower Tylecrown, with power to sell and dispose of the same, or to raise any sum or sums of money thereon by mortgage or otherwise, as he should think proper. She then had a proviso in these terms:—Provided always, and these presents are upon this express condition, that such part of all and every sum or sums of money so as aforesaid raised by the said Rees Davis, either by sale or mortgage, as shall be expended at my decease, shall be charged upon the house belonging to the said Rees Davis, situate, &c. to be disposed of as hereinafter expressed immediately after the decease of the said Rees Davis; that is to say, that that sum shall be paid to my four nieces, viz. Charlotte Coltheart, Mary Lewis, Margaret Lewis, and Helen Williams, share and share alike; and in case the estate should be mortgaged for less than its real value, then the testatrix devised the reversion of the same to her said four nieces, share and share alike; and in case the estate should not be sold or mortgaged by the said Rees Davis, then she devised the same to her said nieces, their heirs and assigns, as free from incumbrances as they should be at her decease, share and share alike, as tenants in common. Rees Davis made certain mortgages to George Price Watkins, and in 1839 died without having made any such charge on the two houses as required by the proviso in the will of Winifred Davis. On his death th moiety in which he had life interest became vested in possession (subject to the mortgages) in the defendants Charlotte Williams (formerly Coltheart), Mary Haverd (formerly Lewis), Margaret Lewis and Helen Holderness (formerly Williams), as tenants in common in fee, and in their husbands, Henry Williams, Thomas Haverd, John Lewis, and John Holderness, in their right. George P Watkins devised the premises vested in him as mortgagee under the various mortgages to the respondents, and the several mortgage debts still remain due to the estate of George Price Watkins, except the part of 600*l*. which has been paid off. In this state of things the appellants, in February 1844, filed a bill for redemption and partition; and in March in the same year the respondents filed a bill of foreclosure. These causes came on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, when his Honour pronounced a decree of foreclosure, the particulars of which it is not necessary to state any further than this that it was thereby declared that the mortgages created by Rees Davis were valid, and also treated the equitable mortgage for 600*l*. as a valid charge, and it does not direct that a commission should issue for making a partition as prayed by the redemption bill. Against that decree the parties interested in the equity of redemption presented a petition of appeal, whereby they objected to the decree, first, on the ground that the mortgages created by Rees Davis are not valid; secondly, on the ground that the equitable mortgage for 600*l*. is not a valid charge; and, thirdly, on the ground that the decree ought not to have contained a direction for a partition. The other objections which were taken by the appellants, on the hearing of the appeal, and which do not appear on the face of the petition of appeal, I cannot entertain without infringing a rule of practice (stated 2 Daw, Chan. Prac. by Headlam, 1351), which is necessary to protect respondents from being taken by surprise. Now, with respect to the objection to the validity of the mortgages made by Rees Davis, the foundation of that objection is, that the power in the will of Winifred Davis, under which he created them, was dependent on the condition of Rees making such a charge, and inasmuch as he did not observe that condition, the mortgages created by the execution of the power were void, I am of opinion that this objection to the validity of these mortgages cannot be maintained. I do not think the condition embodied in the proviso is a condition precedent. Conceding that the words "unexpended at my decease," were written by mistake for "unexpended at his decease," and supposing also that the import of the proviso is sufficiently clear, and that the meaning was, that Rees Davis should create a charge, either by deed or will, on his two houses for such a proportion of the money to be raised by him as might happen to be unexpended at the time of his decease, the form of the proviso is most certainly not that of a condition precedent upon which an estate is to arise, but of a condition subsequent in that general sense of the term, in which it is sometimes used in contradistinction to a condition precedent to denote a clause which causes the cessor of an estate, given in a preceding sentence, whether such condition subsequent is a condition properly so called, which causes the revertor of the property, or a condition of limitation, which gives the property over to a third person. Indeed the word "provided," and the words "on condition," when they constitute the introductory words of a distinct sentence in the preceding sentence, are the technical words which properly introduce a condition subsequent, as opposed to a condition precedent. But, independently of the form of the proviso the condition cannot be condition precedent, because it would be absurd that Rees Davis, before raising the money, should have been obliged to execute a charge by deed on his own estate, to secure to the nieces so much as should be unexpended by him, and thereby put himself to considerable expense, and preclude himself from the free alienation of his estate, and from the power of raising money on it, when he could at any moment render such a charge wholly nugatory by spending the whole money. And as to a charge by will, that of course cannot be deemed to have been intended, as it might be revoked the next day. The proviso is of the nature of a condition subsequent in the general sense of the term, which I have mentioned. It is an irregular way of accomplishing the purposes of a conditional limitation properly so called; a conditional limitation takes effect in defeasance of the interest given in a preceding sentence; and this proviso is intended virtually to take effect in partial defeasance of the absolute interest in the entirety of the money to be raised, for it would seem to amount to the same, as if the testatrix had said, "But in case Rees Davis shall not expend all the money, which shall be raised by him, so much as shall be unexpended at the time of his decease shall go to my nieces, and Rees Davis shall execute a charge on his two houses to secure that amount to them." But whether this is the precise character and import of the proviso or not, which it is unnecessary for me to decide, there can be no doubt that it was intended virtually to be a limitation over in some way or other of so much of the money as should be unexpended. Now it is a rule, that where a money fund is given to a person absolutely, a condition cannot be annexed to a gift that so much as he shall not dispose of shall go over to another person. Apart from any supposed incongruity, a notion which savours of metaphysical refinement rather than of any thing substantial, one reason which may be assigned in support of the expediency of this rule is, that in many cases it might be very difficult and even impossible to ascertain whether any part of the fund remained undisposed of or not, since, if the person to whom the absolute interest is given left any personalty, it might be wholly uncertain whether it were a part of the precise fund which was the subject of the condition or not. Another reason may be, that it would be contrary to the well-being of the party absolutely entitled to lead him profusely to spend all that was given him, which in many cases might be all that he had in the world, for although he might provide against leaving himself destitute by buying an annuity, yet even if he did this, it might be at the expense of those for whom he might be under a moral obligation to make some provision. In Ross v. Ross, 1 J. & W. 151, Sir Thomas Plumer observed, "One consequence of permitting such limitation over would be, that if the party entitled to the absolute interest had not spent money, and were to die indebted to any amount, his creditors would be excluded from it. The validity of this reason may be doubtful, as it may perhaps be said that a man might properly be deemed to have spent the amount of debt which he has contracted, and which he has laid himself under an obligation to pay. In Bourne v. Gibbs, 1 Rus. & M. 614, a testator gave his personal estate to his wife for her own absolute disposal, provided nevertheless, that if his wife should make no disposition thereof in her lifetime or by her will, then he directed that such part as should remain undisposed should go, and he accordingly bequeathed the same to his nephew. It was held, that the sum of stock which was part of the testator's property given to his wife remaining in his name at her death, passed by her will, although it contained no allusion to her husband's will, Sir John Leach, M.R. being of opinion that the widow took an interest in the whole of the testator's residuary estate. So in Ross v. Ross (ubi supra), a testator gave to his son a sum of money, with a limitation over, in case he should not receive or dispose of it by will, or otherwise, in his lifetime. He died intestate, without having received the money, although it was carried to his separate account in a suit. Sir T. Plumer, M.R. said—This differs from a power and a remainder over in default of its exercise. If you give an absolute interest to a person, you cannot subject it for his life to a proviso that if he does not spend it, his interest shall cease. So in Cuthbert v. Purrier, 1 Jac. 415, an absolute interest was given to A. at twenty-one, with a bequest over in the event of his dying under that age, or afterwards, without lawful heirs, and being intestate. Sir T. Plumer said, as the testator had two objects, which are inconsistent to invest the son with the absolute property, and then to provide for the event of his not exercising his right over it, I think the Court is bound to transfer it to him. So in Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 431), Vice-Chancellor Wigram said the general rule at law is that an absolute interest is not taken away by a gift over, unless the gift over may itself take effect. Now, it has been repeatedly decided that were a legacy is given absolutely, and gift over is superadded, in the event of the legatee dying, without having disposed of his legacy, the gift over is void, and the legacy is absolute. So in Byng v. Lord Stafford, 5 Beav. 567, Lord Langdale said—If an absolute interest be given on an express condition, which may be lawful in itself, but is incompatible with the free enjoyment of the property, the Court does not modify the absolute interest, for the purpose of giving effect to the condition, but declares the condition void, for the purpose of supporting the absolute interest. The case of Doe dem. Stephenson v. Glover, 1 C.B. 448, in which I was counsel, is not opposed to these cases, as that was not a case of money limited over, but one in which there was a devise over of real estate. There a testator devised his real estate to his son, his heirs, and assignees for ever; but in case he should die without leaving any issue then living, or being no such issue, and he should not have disposed of and parted with his interest in the real estate, then the testator devised the same to his illegitimate daughter, her heirs and assigns. The judges were unanimous in the opinion that the devise over was a good executory devise, and that as the son had not parted with the estate in his lifetime, although he had disposed of it by will, it went over to the daughter. As to the case of Doe dem. Martin, 4 T. & R. 39, which was cited at the bar by the counsel for the appellants, a most substantial distinction exists between that case and the present. That was a case of a power enabling settlors to revoke the uses of a settlement, and the trustees to sell the estate and convey to a purchaser, so as that the purchase-money should be paid to the trustees and not to the settlors, to be paid out and invested by the trustees in the purchase of other property to be settled to the same uses. It was held that the power of revocation was conditional, and as neither of the conditions was performed, viz. the payment of the money to the trustees, and the re-investment of it in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses, the revocation was a nullity. In this case, as Lord Kenyon intimated, the exercise of power and the performance of the condition were beyond all doubt to be considered parts of one transaction. They were essentially and inseparably connected. The performance of the condition, instead of being a derogation from the ownership of the parties to be affected by the exercise of the power not permitted by law, was an act which those parties had a most unquestionable right to expect to be done. But, independently of the rule to which I have adverted, the mortgages created by Rees Davis cannot be affected by the proviso. Supposing, for the reasons I have assigned, it was not a condition precedent, then as the testatrix has specified no time for the creation of the charge, it would be sufficient for Rees Davis to create it at any time before he died, but it cannot be contended that he was bound to create it at all if he had spent all the money, and yet the appellants, upon whom it was incumbent to shew that the condition was not performed, have not proved that Rees Davis left any part of the money unexpended, and, consequently, have not proved that the condition was broken. For these reasons I am clearly of opinion that their objection to the validity of the mortgage created by Rees Davis altogether fails with respect to the second ground of appeal; it appears to me that the decree must be right in treating the equitable mortgage as a valid charge, for the appellants by their answer have admitted that the 600*l.* was lent, and that John Lewis and Thomas Haverd gave George Price Watkins a written undertaking that they would execute a mortgage of their respective interests, and that, if necessary, all proper parties should concur in levying a fine of the premises; the answer seems to me to admit a fact which constitute a valid equitable mortgage, and the life estates of the husbands of the two daughters of Abigail, and of the two other nieces of Winifred, and I see no evidence to impeach or reduce that mortgage, except so far as the payment of one-half of the 600*l.* With respect to the third ground of appeal, viz. the omission of a direction as to a partition, a partition appears to me not to be properly incident to a foreclosure or redemption suit, in such a way that the owners of the equity of redemption can be allowed to insist on it against the will of the mortgagee, who has no interest in the question. In the present case, with the consent of the mortgagee, the parties interested in the equity of redemption may have a partition, but I cannot regard the omission of a direction for a partition as constituting a ground for an appeal. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

IN CHANCERY.

(Before LORD ST. LEONARDS.)

March 10 and 17.

Re THE VALE OF NEATH AND SOUTH WALES BREWERY JOINT STOCK COMPANY, Ex parte LAWES.

Company—Winding-up Acts—Contributories—Sale of shares to the company.

The deed of settlement of a joint-stock company provided the mode by which a shareholder, parting with his shares, was to be relieved from subsequent responsibility. At an extraordinary general meeting of the company resolutions were passed, by which any of the shareholders might withdraw from the company on certain conditions. A. (a shareholder) did not then avail himself of the privilege of withdrawing. The conditions contained in those resolutions were, at a subsequent ordinary general meeting modified and altered; whereupon A. in pursuance of such conditions sold his shares to a nominee, one of the directors of the company. The transfer of the shares was duly entered in the share register book, as required by the provisions of the deed. The company was subsequently wound up under the Winding-up Act.

Held, affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, that A.'s executors were properly placed on the list of contributories.

This was an appeal from an order of the late Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce affirming the order of Master Brougham placing the name of Mr. John Lawes (the appellant) on the list of contributories to the company.

In the year 1840 a joint-stock company was established under the title of the Vale of Neath and South Wales Brewery Company, the constitution of which company was settled by a deed dated the 3rd of March in that year. Its nominal capital was stated to be 125,000*l.* in 6,250 shares of 20*l.* each; but no more than 3,640 shares were ever taken up.

William Lawes (deceased) became the owner of 30 shares, and held them up to the 21st of August, 1841. The 22nd and 23rd clauses of the deed of settlement were to the following effect:—22nd. "The directors shall at all times have or keep in the hands of the bankers of the company such a balance as shall be sufficient to answer the current expenses and demands of the company; and when and so often as the balance in the hands of the bankers shall be more than sufficient for the ordinary purposes of the company, or for paying the yearly dividends to the proprietors, the directors shall, so far as they conveniently can, accumulate the same until a surplus fund be raised or provided amounting the sum of 10,000*l.* sterling money, and shall report the amount of such accumulation at every annual general meeting; and for making the aforesaid accumulations, the directors shall lay out and invest the moneys or funds appropriated to such purposes in the names of the trustees, for the time being, of the company, in any of the public stocks or funds of Great Britain, or at interest upon Government or real securities in England or Wales, but not in Ireland, or in paying off and discharging the said mortgage money or sum of 15,000*l.* or any part thereof; and shall from time to time alter, vary, and transpose the said stocks, funds, or securities as occasion may require or as it shall be deemed expedient. And in case a sufficient balance at the bankers cannot be obtained by other means and for the purposes to which such surplus fund is by these presents made applicable, the said trustees or trustee for the time being, on being thereunto required by the directors, shall sell and convert into money a competent part of the surplus fund, and of the stocks, funds, or securities in which the same shall for the time being be invested."

23. "The directors may from time to time by and out of the surplus fund hereinbefore mentioned purchase and buy up any share or shares in the capital stock of the company which shall be offered for sale, and shall, at their discretion, either sell the same upon such terms and conditions as they may think proper, or shall suffer the same to sink into the general stock and funds of the company for the benefit of the existing shareholders, according to their several and existing shares therein."

The 50th section of the deed provides for extraordinary general meetings of the company; and on the 30th of April, 1841, an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders was convened, in pursuance of a requisition as provided by the deed.

Such extraordinary general meeting was convened by notice conveyed to each of the proprietors on or about the 30th of March, by printed circulars, sent through the post, addressed to each proprietor at his place of residence, as standing in the "share register book." The notice was in the following terms:—

"Sir,—I am instructed by the directors to give you notice that an extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of the Vale of Neath and South Wales Brewery will be held at No. 59, Queen-square, Bristol, on Wednesday, the 10th day of April next, at twelve o'clock precisely, for the purpose of receiving from the directors a proposition for paying off the advances made during the recent interruption to the trade, and discharging such other liabilities as require to be paid at an early period, and to provide for such payments, without appropriating to that purpose the funds accruing from the present trade.—I remain yours, very faithfully, William Lowther, Secretary."

On the 10th April, 1844, such extraordinary general meeting of the company took place, whereat the following was, among other resolutions, unanimously passed—"That if any shareholder shall be desirous of withdrawing from the company, the directors shall be at liberty to purchase his shares at a price not exceeding 15*l.* per share on his investing or procuring to be invested an amount not less than the purchase money of his shares, and taking the loan-note of the company for five years at 5*l.* per cent. interest for such investment, together with the purchase money for his shares; but in case of preference shares being so purchased by the company, the same shall be taken at a price not exceeding 20*l.* per share, and not less than a corresponding amount be introduced." The circular convening this meeting stated generally its object to be, to provide means for making certain payments and discharging other liabilities of the company.

Mr. Lawes was not present at the meeting either in person or by proxy. After the 10th of April, 1841, three duly convened ordinary general meetings were held; and on the 31st of July following, at an ordinary general meeting, the following resolutions were passed:—"It having been shewn that materially increased profits may be realised by an extended trade, it is highly desirable that the attention of the manager be particularly directed to the best extra means of effecting this object by making speedy arrangements with parties to become extensive wholesale customers in Bristol, Liverpool, and other places, and by such other means as are likely to prove effective."

"That the directors allow such further time as they think reasonable to those shareholders who have not complied with the resolutions passed at the special meeting held at Bristol on the 10th of April last, and that after the expiration of such further time this meeting sanctions the forfeiture of the shares of those proprietors who shall continue to be defaulters."

William Lawes exercised the option given him by the first resolution, and by indenture, dated the 24th of August, 1844, made between Wm. Lawes of the first part, W. H. Buckland of second part, and J. W. Little and W. Brenton of the third part, in consideration of the sum of 450*l.* therein stated to have been paid to W. Lawes by W. H. Buckland, W. Lawes assigned his thirty shares to W. H. Buckland. W. H. Buckland was one of the directors, and a nominee of the company.

The 40th clause of the deed of settlement is as follows:—"A book to be called 'The Share Register Book,' shall be kept by the secretary of the company in which shall be entered the names and additions of the several proprietors for the time being of shares in the capital and property of the company, together with the number of the shares which they shall respectively have therein, and the proprietors for the time being shall be entitled to copies by way of certificates, signed by two of the directors for the time being, of the entries relating to their respective shares in the said share register book, and such copies or certificates so signed shall, as between the proprietors of the company, be conclusive evidence of the entries of which they purpose to be copies."

A memorandum of the transfer of the shares to W. H. Buckland was entered in the share register book, and a certified extract from this book of the transfer, had been delivered to John Lawes, as executor of William Lawes.

The sum of 450*l.* was not paid by W. H. Buckland: W. Lawes advanced the further sum of 450*l.* and received a loan-note of the company for 900*l.* signed by two of the directors.

The affairs of the company shortly afterwards became so embarrassed as to render it impossible for them to continue their engagements, and ultimately, on the commencement of the year 1849, an order was obtained for the winding-up of the company, under "The Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848."

William Lawes died, and appointed John Lawes (the appellant) his executor.

The Master, by his certificate, included J. Lawes, as the executor of W. Lawes, in the list as a contributory in respect of the thirty shares which had been held by his testator, being of opinion that it was not competent for the directors, or for the company, regard being had to the deed by which the company was constituted, to have passed the resolution by virtue of which the sale to them by William Lawes was effected.

From this decision John Lawes appealed to the Vice-Chancellor. His Honour, in giving judgment, said, there were specific differences between that and Morgan's case, 1 Mac. & Gor. 225, but his impression was, that the late Lord Chancellor decided Morgan's case on a ground common to that (Morgan's) and the case before him, namely, that the intention of all the parties in the transaction of the transfer was, that the shares should be assigned to the company through the medium of a trustee; and that such a transaction could not be maintained unless the purchase by a director for the company was made according to their rules. His Honour found a distinction in Holloway's case, 1 De Gex & S. 777, on the ground that the legal formalities had been pursued, and that it had not been brought home to the party transferring that he knew or intended that the transfer was to be made to the company. His Honour decided that the motion ought to be refused, but directed that the costs should come out of the estate.

From this decision Mr. Lawes appealed.

Roundell Palmer and Lewin appeared in support of it, and stated that, on the hearing of the present case before the Vice-Chancellor, he decided it on the ground that the facts were identical with those in Ex parte Morgan; and although that case might have been rightly decided, yet the circumstances of this case were such, that a contrary decision would not be inconsistent with the principles there laid down. That Lord Cottenham's judgment (if right) went to the extreme point of the law, and ought not to be extended. It was an admitted hardship on the appellant. No fraud was imputed to him, and he was entitled to relief. The present case was distinguishable from it: here the transfer to the directors was made in pursuance of resolutions passed at the annual general meeting; and such transfer was rendered complete by the terms of the 44th section of the company's Act. The company were now dealing with the executors, who had no interest in, and were not liable to, the company. The entry of the substituted shareholder in the share register book had been regularly made, and must be taken to have been known to all the company; and their acquiescence must be implied.

Russell and T. H. Terrell, appeared for the official manager.

Wednesday, March 17.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case, I think, lies in a very narrow compass. I do not think it necessary to go through a detail of all the facts, because they are contained with great accuracy in the reports of the case, and the counsel on both sides are fully masters of them. The question is, whether this gentleman was or not properly put upon the list of persons bound to contribute to the expenses. Now, that depends upon the transaction. This was a partnership of a peculiar nature, consisting of a great number of persons, and yet strictly a trade; and I am very far from meaning to say, that such rules as were laid down, for example, in Const v. Harris, T. & R. 496, would not still be the rules which would bind the Court, in cases generally of that description; but here it is in the nature of a joint-stock company, with a great many partners, and it is necessary, I think, to hold such persons, as strictly as may be, to the terms of their contract; because as there are general meetings and extraordinary meetings, if you do not keep within the meaning of the deed, as necessarily a great number of the partners never can or will attend the meetings, you would have proceedings taking place which, in effect, according to the view of one party, would bind the absent parties, and yet be directly opposed to the terms on which they had entered into the partnership. Now, by this partnership, which was at first supposed to be of such value, an earnest stipulation is made that no more than ten per cent. under any circumstances, shall be divided. They began with eight per cent.; they come down immediately to six per cent. and almost instantaneously to no dividend at all—to no per cent.—and at the time the transaction took place on which this case depends, in point of fact the company was wholly insolvent, and was looking for the means of dragging on its miserable existence. Now the articles particularly provide that if there be a surplus fund to a certain amount, which is indicated 10,000*l*. that the directors may purchase shares; that is, if they become so rich as to enable them to buy out certain of their partners who may wish to retire, thereby increasing, of course, the interest of the remaining partners, that it may be done; but the company being greatly in want of funds in order to relieve the pressure of the circumstances which then existed, an extraordinary meeting was called. Now the deed expressly provides what shall be done in regard to those extraordinary meetings; and it says, in so many words, that in calling those extraordinary meetings there shall be stated a specific object for which those meetings are to be called. Now, I think it perfectly clear that the notice calling that meeting did not state the specific object, and I think it impossible to read the notice, which I need not now go through again, without feeling satisfied that there was an intention not to state fully to the shareholders what the scheme was which the directors intended to propound. At that meeting, after passing a resolution that every man according to his interest should bring in a certain amount of loan, it gave permission to the directors, if any shareholder wished to retire, to buy his share at a certain depreciated price, at three quarters, I think, of its nominal value; and upon his tendering a sum equal to the amount of the purchase-money,—a very singular transaction,—then one of these loan notes should be given for both the purchase and the amount of the loan, which was to remain for five years. Now, that was a mode of increasing, as it appears to me, the difficulties of this partnership; for it was not only pledging them to more debt than it would be necessary to do, but it was actually withdrawing a portion of the capital from the trade, and throwing greater liabilities upon the partners who remained: it was throwing a clear liability on every man who remained; and I can see nothing in the notice of that extraordinary meeting which could have led any shareholder to suppose that any such proposition was about to take place. Now that was followed by a general meeting; this circumstance having arisen, that, as regards Mr. Lawes, the shareholder in question, he did not avail himself of that, I will not call it a right, it was not a right on his part, but a privilege to tender to the directors his share, and a right on their part as far as the resolutions went to buy that share: he did not avail himself of it within the time; but there was a general meeting, and that general meeting passed a resolution enlarging the time, and then saying that the defaulters should forfeit their shares who did not take the advantage within the time Now, the question was raised before me, whether that general meeting had such power, or had not. In my opinion they had not the power; for their powers are expressly confined to that which should not be contrary to the provisions of the deed. Now this was directly in opposition to the deed; therefore I think it depended on the powers of the extraordinary meeting within; whose powers I do not deny it would have been, if they had stated the specific object for which the meeting was to be held; but I think it did not fall within the general powers of the general meeting; and if it did fall within the general powers of the general meeting, I think, upon consideration of the terms of the resolution, that it was confined to the liability of the parties to contribute their loans, and that it did not include that power which had expired by the lapse of time on the part of the directors to purchase shares of partners who desired to withdraw from the copartnership. I think, looking at the terms, you can hardly doubt that that is so; for it speaks of the defaulters and of the forfeiture of their shares; these were liabilities; but it says not a word about the privilege of being entitled to sell their shares to the company, and at a certain sacrifice of the amount of their loan, and the amount of their purchase-money, having the chance of withdrawing themselves and all their assets from any liabilities of the company; that company being at the moment, at the very time confessedly, I must say, in a state of insolvency: now, a good deal was said about whether this was a concluded and perfect transaction, as regarded the execution of the deed, and the entry of the deed in the books of the company, signed by two directors, and so on. I do not think that that question has any relevancy to the point that I have to decide; for though this was in terms a transfer to a third person, yet in substance it was a purchase by the company itself, and the name of that third person was used only as a mere trustee, and that transaction would bind both parties, that is, it must bind Mr. Lawes, the seller, as well as the general body, according to the nature of it. I think that the person who sold never could be heard to say that he was to be treated as an independent purchaser, standing upon the provisions of the deed of copartnership, which provided expressly what should be done by an outgoing seller; he never could be heard to say that, as a seller, for he was not selling in the market as a third person, and calling on the directors to approve of that transaction; but he was dealing immediately with the directors themselves, they being the real purchasers, and he being one of the general body of shareholders, was himself selling to them: I think that those clauses do not apply to this case, and that, therefore, I need not embarrass myself with the consideration of what I think after all was made out, that as between third persons this would have been a regular transaction: well then, it is said that this point was decided by the Vice-Chancellor in Morgan's case, but it is said with this difference, that in Morgan's case it depended entirely upon an extraordinary meeting, and now this case upon a general meeting, that there the instrument was not perfect, but here it is perfect. Now I have already removed both those differences, because I am of opinion that neither of them can influence the judgment which I am about to pronounce in this case. The Vice-Chancellor proceeded upon the ground of knowledge and acquiescence in all parties; when that case came before Lord Cottingham, he did not think that ground a solid one, and he reversed that decision. Now it is impossible for any man who understands the bearing of such cases not to feel that the doctrine of acquiescence must, in most of these cases, lead to insuperable difficulty, because, when you come to deal with individual members who are demanding equities which they have precluded themselves from maintaining by their own acts, you may find this difficulty arising at almost every step: that individual members of this one partnership may be bound by particular acts, quâ partners, by which the general body would not be bound; however, I do not feel I am embarrassed by that in this case, because I am of opinion that the extraordinary general meeting was not called with a sufficiently explicit notice to enable them to do the act. I am of opinion that the general meeting had not the power to do that act itself, and therefore no supposed confirmation of the act could give validity to it, and I am also of opinion that the resolution passed at that general meeting did not extend to this case. Then, upon the truth and merits of the case, I am clearly of opinion that this is a transaction which ought not to prevail. I make no imputation at all on the gentleman who unfortunately is still to be a contributor. I have no doubt of his bona fides: I have no doubt that in his views it was a real transaction, and free from all taint, or fraud, or contrivance; but it is an improper transaction: it was a dealing to allow a certain number of persons who had the command of money to escape from further liability at the expense of their copartners, and contrary to the express provisions of the deed under which they were all acting. I therefore think, that the Vice-Chancellor, upon the second view of this case, which I hold not to be distinguishable from Morgan's case, came to a right conclusion, and therefore I must dismiss this petition, and, I am afraid, with costs.

Petition dismissed, with costs.

(BEFORE THE LORDS JUSTICES.)

Dec. 19, 20, and 22, 1851; March 19 and 20, 1852.

TURNER v. TURNER.

Petition of rehearing—Issue devisavit vel non—Married woman's consent to discharge order for.

By decree, dated the 14th February, 1833, certain orders therein mentioned, which directed issues for the purpose of trying the validity of the will of W. T. alleged to have been insane, were on the petition of Mrs. M. the heiress-at-law and her husband discharged, and the will was established, and the trusts thereof directed to be performed. The petition stated that they had withdrawn all opposition to the will at the urgent request of their children, who were willing that certain costs incurred by the petitioners should be allowed to them as costs in the cause. The decree was stated on the face of it to be made with the consent by counsel of Mrs. M. the heiress-at-law. On the 13th of January, 1851, Mrs. M. obtained leave to file a petition to rehear the decree of the 14th of February, 1833, and she filed her petition accordingly:

Held, reversing the order of the Court below discharging the order for a petition of rehearing, and ordering the petition to be taken off the file, that there ought to be a rehearing, and that the petition of rehearing ought to be restored to the file.

Irregularity in the title of a petition of rehearing not being objected to in the Court below, was considered to have been waived, or at any rate to be immaterial, the petitioner offering to strike it from the title, which offer was not accepted by the objecting parties.

A reference to the title of a private Act of Parliament in a petition, is sufficient to give the Court and the parties notice of its contents, and no objection can be taken that the petition does not state enough, though it does not set it out.

Petition of rehearing stating too much, no part of the prayer being founded on the part stating too much, it can be objected to only as a ground for costs on the petition coming on to be heard. On the petition of rehearing coming on to be heard:

Held, that the decree of the 14th of February, 1833, ought to be varied by striking out the consent of Mrs. M. and inserting words whereby Mrs. M. her heirs and assigns after the death of her husband, might be at liberty to dispute the validity of the will and codicil of the testator, the husband being as tenant by the courtesy bound, to the extent of his estate, by the decree.

This was an appeal from the order of the present, discharging an order of the late, Master of the Rolls, whereby leave was given to present a petition of rehearing, and ordering the petition to be taken off the file. The circumstances of the case are as follows:—William Turner made his will, dated the 19th of September, 1829, and thereby he devised his real and personal estates to trustees, whom he appointed also his executors, upon certain trusts for the benefit of the children of his only child, Mary Ann, the wife of William S. Meryweather; and he gave his daughter an annuity of 500*l.* a year during the joint lives of herself and husband, and on the death of the latter it was to be increased to 1,000*l.* a year. The will and a codicil thereto were proved on the 3rd of October, 1829, a caveat which had been entered up against probate on behalf of Mary Ann Meryweather not having been followed up by the proper proceedings. On the day the will was proved the original bill in this cause was filed on behalf of the children of Mary Ann Meryweather, then infants, by their next friend, against the trustees, and against the said Mary Ann Meryweather, stating that Mary Ann Meryweather was heiress-at-law, and praying that the will and codicil might be established, and the trusts thereof carried into execution under the decree of the Court. Mary Ann Meryweather and her husband appeared and put in their answer jointly, in which they admitted the due execution of the will and codicil, and Mary Ann Meryweather also applied to the trustees for payment of a legacy of 500*l.* bequeathed to her by the will, which was paid to her. Mary Ann Meryweather and her husband afterwards obtained an order on a petition, for payment of the annuity of 500*l.* bequeathed to her by the will, and which was accordingly paid to her. Soon after the filing of the bill, and in Michaelmas Term, 1829, Mary Ann Meryweather and her husband, in right of Mary Ann Meryweather, as the testator's heiress-at-law and customary heiress, brought an action of ejectment against the trustees to recover possession of certain freehold and copyhold hereditaments, part of the testator's real estate, for the purpose of disputing the testator's will on the ground of his insanity. To this action the trustees appeared and pleaded, and notice of trial in the action was given by the plaintiffs therein, but afterwards they countermanded the notice of trial, and discontinued the action, and were ordered to pay the costs thereof. On the cause coming on to be heard on the 25th of January, 1832, Mary Ann Meryweather applied for an issue devisavit vel non to try the validity of the will, which was granted, and such of the plaintiffs in the suit as were then adult were directed to be plaintiffs at law, and the defendants William S. Meryweather and Mary Ann his wife defendants at law, and the trustees also obtained leave to attend the trial by counsel, and examine witnesses in support of the will, although they were not formal parties on the record. The issue was settled and set down for trial before a special jury, and everything was ready for trial, when the plaintiff withdrew their record. The trustees thereupon applied to the Court, and obtained permission for themselves to be the plaintiffs in the action, and an order was made on the 27th of November, 1832, giving the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Meryweather liberty to examine the trustees at the trial, and directions were given for the trial by special jury. William S. Meryweather and his wife appealed from this order, praying that the then adult plaintiffs might be continued plaintiffs at law, and for leave for William S. Meryweather and his wife to examine them at the trial and the petition was heard and dismissed in December 1832. Notice of trial was given by the trustees, and on the 29th of November, 1832, the issue was duly entered for trial, and was specially appointed to be tried on the 19th of February, 1833. On the 5th of February, 1833, William S. Meryweather and his wife presented a petition, whereby, after mentioning the proceedings down to the issue, it states that the said testator, at the time of the execution of the said will and codicil, was wholly under the control and management of certain persons who were hostile to the petitioners, and who, taking advantage of the impaired state of his mind, compelled him to make a will to the great injury of the petitioners, and that they had been guided throughout in opposing the said will from a deep sense of injury, and from the conviction that it was necessary for them the petitioners, to clear their characters of the imputations conveyed by the said will, more particularly as the said testator had therein directed that the guardianship of the petitioners' children should be removed from them, and that they and their children had ever lived on terms of the greatest affection, and that the said testator had also directed the payment of the annuity of Mary Ann Meryweather to be paid in a manner degrading to the feelings of the petitioners. They then stated that they had, at the urgent request and intreaty of their children (three of whom were of the age of twenty-one years and upwards), consented to withdraw all further opposition to the said will, the petitioners' children and the plaintiffs in the cause, being willing and desirous that the expenses hitherto incurred by the petitioners in preparing for the said trial should be allowed to the petitioners as costs in the cause, and therefore praying that the said order of the 25th of January, 1832, whereby it was ordered that the said parties should proceed to a trial at law upon the said issue, devisavit vel non, to the said will of the said William Turner, and the further order of the 27th of November, 1832, whereby it was ordered that the said trustees be substituted as plaintiffs in the said issue, and that the said plaintiffs do proceed to trial, might be discharged, the petitioners undertaking to admit the validity of the said will of the testator, and submitting to have the trusts thereof performed and carried into effect under the direction of this Court, and that the costs of and relating to the said issue, and of that application and consequent thereupon might be costs in the cause as between solicitor and client. On the 14th of February, 1833, this petition came on for hearing together with the cause, and an order was made thereon, whereby, after stating that M. A. Meryweather, as only child and heiress-at-law of the testator, by counsel consenting that the Orders of the 25th of January, 1832, and 27th of November, 1832, should be discharged, it ordered that the said Orders should be discharged accordingly, and it was declared that the said will and codicil were well proved, and ordered that the same should be established, and the trusts thereof performed and carried into execution. And it was then ordered, after ordering some matters not material to be stated, that the Master do also tax the costs of all parties up to and including the hearing of the cause relating to the aforesaid issues, and of the aforesaid issues directed to be tried in the Court of Ex. and all the proceedings relative and incident thereto, all such costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client. And it was ordered that, when the costs were taxed, they should be paid in manner therein directed. In March 1843, the executors were cited by William S. Meryweather and his wife in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, to prove the testator's will and codicil in solemn form; but it was held that they had barred themselves by their proceedings in Chancery with respect to the issue, and the executors were dismissed from further attendance in the Court, and their costs were ordered to be paid out of the testator's estate. In April 1844, the executors were cited to prove the will and codicil in solemn form, by Maud Sarah Meryweather, one of the children, and they accordingly proceeded to prove the same. However, on the 10th of March, 1846, the Court pronounced in favour of the will and codicil, all proceedings against the executors having been abandoned. In 1845, the surviving plaintiffs in the suit applied to Parliament for an Act to authorise the granting of building leases of parts of the testator's estate; the petition to the House of Lords for the Act was signed by Mary Ann Meryweather, and afterwards was passed. In the saving clause there was a saving to the Crown and to all persons other than and except the parties named in the testator's will, the testator's daughter, Mary Ann Meryweather, and her children and grandchildren respectively, and their respective real and personal representatives, and the right heirs of the testator, all rights, &c. to which they were entitled in respect of the hereditaments therein mentioned before the passing of the Act, or could or might have enjoyed in case the Act had not passed. In 1846, William S. Meryweather and his wife commenced an action of ejectment against the trustees, to try the validity of the will, but the Court, on the application of the trustees, and upon W. S. Meryweather and his wife undertaking, by their counsel, not to proceed further with such action, ordered that the petition should stand over, without prejudice to any question between the parties to the cause. In September 1849, William S. Meryweather and his wife commenced another action of ejectment against the trustees, but upon an application of the trustees, the Vice-Chancellor of England, on the 27th of March, 1850, made an order restraining the actions already commenced, and also restraining William S. Meryweather and his wife from commencing or prosecuting any other action of ejectment, in her right as heiress-at-law or customary heiress of the said testator, for the recovery of any part of his real estates devised to the trustees, or otherwise in any manner litigating or disputing the validity of the testator's will and codicil. On the 13th of January, 1851, Mary Ann Meryweather obtained an order from the late Master of the Rolls (Lord Langdale), giving her liberty to present, by her next friend, her petition of rehearing of the order of the 14th of February, 1833, and on the 29th of January, 1851, she obtained the usual order for setting down the petition of rehearing.

On the 29th of May, 1851, the trustees, upon motion, obtained an order from the present Master of the Rolls ordering the order of the 13th of January, 1851, for a rehearing, to be discharged, and the petition of rehearing presented by Mary Ann Meryweather to be taken off the file, upon the ground that she had, by many acts during a considerable lapse of time, acquiesced in the order of the 14th of February, 1833.

Bethell and Villiers for Mrs. Meryweather, contended that as a married woman she was not bound by the order of the 14th February, 1833. That petition was that of her husband, and that she did not appear by separate counsel, and therefore her alleged consent by counsel was not binding on her. That she would not have consented to the act to grant leases had she thought it would prevent her disputing the will.

Roundell Palmer and Hardy contended that Mrs. Meryweather was bound by her consent, and long acquiescence in the decree. And technical objections were also taken as to the petition being wrongly entitled—to its stating too little on one subject and too much on another. Those objections and the cases cited are sufficiently noticed in the judgment delivered by their lordships.

Roll, J. V. Prior, and Wright, for other parties.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The petition of rehearing is irregular in title, and probably it would have been necessary or right if the objection had been taken at the Rolls to reform the petition; but considering that the circumstances of the case were argued there on wholly distinct grounds, it may fairly be taken to have been waived; and if not, we do not think, under the circumstances, that we are bound to give effect to it, especially as the petitioner tenders to the respondent the option of having it struck out from the title which they do not accept. The question might then arise whether too much was stated in the petition of rehearing. That point, however, as I understand, too, was not taken at the Rolls. If it had been, we think that the principles on which the case of Wood v. Griffith, 1 Mer. 35, was decided could not govern such a case as this, and that there is stated in it nimiously (to use a Scotch phrase), if there is any thing of that kind, and that may be cured on dealing with the costs accordingly, if the Court shall be so asked. Then the question arises whether the petition of rehearing states too little. That point I understand to have been taken at the Rolls. But it appears to me, and though I expressed myself plurally just now, I am only speaking for myself, and Lord Cranworth will state his view of the case,—it seems to me that, considering that the title of the Act of Parliament was introduced, it gave notice at once to the Court and to the parties of the existence of that Act of Parliament, and there was nothing substantially kept back which is introduced on such occasions for such a purpose. Those difficulties, therefore, in the particular circumstances of the case, being, as I think they may be considered to be out of the way, the question then is, whether this lady is entitled to have the matters on which the order, or decretal order of 1833, was made, reheard, so far as she asks to have them reheard. Now the point arose in this way. A bill was filed, among other purposes to establish the will, against the heiress-at-law, who was a married woman. It came on to be heard, and then the only decree, if it was a decree was to direct an issue. An order was subsequently made upon the application of the trustees of the will, that they should be made parties to the issue, as I understand, in the place of some children of the lady who were to have been parties. That I understand to have been the nature of the order. Before that was tried, a petition was presented by the husband of the lady in the names of himself and his wife, which is in some respects very remarkable. [His Lordship here read the statements and prayer of the petition set forth antè.] Now mark the case stated in this petition. It does not state the conviction either of the husband or of the wife that the will was a good one; it states that they have been induced to abandon the opposition to a bad will at the request of the children, and for a pecuniary consideration, namely, the payment of certain costs in which alone the husband could be interested, and not the wife—it was in effect a money payment to him. That petition having been filed, comes on with the cause, and thereupon a decree or decretal order is made in conformity with that application, and which, I suppose, provides that the costs may be paid in the same way—the way mentioned—that is, that the bargain may be performed. If upon that it is not a sale by the husband of the wife's rights, I do not know what it is. With regard to this lady's consent by counsel, it may be said that the consent of a married woman by her counsel, she having no counsel distinct from her husband, and having been defended with him and by him, and not separately, it may be said that that is matter of sheer nonsense, and perhaps it is. Perhaps it is utterly without meaning, but if it has any meaning it is wrong, because she could not so consent. She is entitled, therefore, if there is anything in it, to have the matter set right, because it is contrary to the law of the country. But why should it be said against her right to correct an apparent error that it is merely nonsense which the order of the Court contains, that it is futile, and must, therefore, of necessity be disregarded? My opinion is that whether it be nonsense, that it cannot be opposed to her as a reason for not having it struck out the decree; it is contrary to the known and established law of the country. It was inserted in the order, I believe, I am convinced, without the knowledge of the learned judge, whose order it purports to be, and without having his attention called to it; nor is it the first instance in my experience in which parties have drawn down great mischief on themselves by altering the order according to their own fashion and views without the knowledge of the Court. But assume it to be all that it seems—assume that it prays nothing but what appears on the face of the order, and expressly as one of the causes by reason of which the order is made—assume that it be so, then the case comes to be this, that the husband abandons the right to have an issue to try the validity of the will as to freehold estates in fee simple of his wife's ancestors, and it has been said that the husband is dominus litis in the sense in which the expression has been used for the present purpose, that he has the entire conduct of the cause, and that the wife is bound effectually and for ever by what the husband does. Now that undoubtedly is a most serious proposition, considering the guard with which the law in this country in general surrounds a married woman as to her real estate. It is not, however, for me to deny that there may be cases in which the husband, by his manner of conducting the cause, so binds the right of his wife as to her real estate. There may be such cases; but is this one? It is not one in which the husband has said, "I conduct this cause for myself; I feel that I have no defence, and I give it up. The husband says, there is no will at all; my children wish me, or some of them, to give up the suit. I am offered certain money terms for the purpose, and therefore I give it up." What is that more or less than a sale? It is in other words, and mere words; but substantially I do not observe the difference. Then, if all these considerations were otherwise, is this a kind of point to be decided, not on a rehearing, but in the ordinary way in which important questions are decided by the Court, but an application to prevent a petition of rehearing from being heard, the closing of the doors of the court against the wife because something has been done which the Court decides is an answer to her claim? There may be cases in which it is right. There have been, indeed, cases in which judges of the highest authority have directed petitions of rehearing to be taken off the file. Undoubtedly such cases may occur. The case ought to be very clear for that purpose, and not, as I think, with great deference, in a case of this description, where there is so much to be argued. Without, therefore, giving any opinion whether the issue will, if directed, succeed, or whether the issue will be directed at all, whether there is any foundation or a total absence of foundation for the petition of rehearing, my impression is, that everything that is to be said against the petition of rehearing ought to be said when it shall come on as a cause, either on the materials existing in the cause and on the petition of rehearing alone, or upon that proceeding, coupled with such other proceeding, if any, as those opposed to it may think fit to institute. Although, therefore, the Master of the Rolls, in stopping this proceeding in limine, has done that which is substantially the best thing in the world for all parties concerned, I am of opinion, with great deference to him, that the matter must be discussed at a later stage, and therefore I think the petition of rehearing should be restored to the file.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I am of the same opinion. From the course which the argument has taken here, which, I understand, is the same as was taken at the Rolls, I think that many of the points which have been urged are not proper points before us. I give no opinion as to what will be the result of the rehearing of the petition, either with reference to the particular facts of this case or the general question, as to how far the husband conducting his wife's defence by his act bound her inheritance. That is a very important question. Upon that I express no opinion at all. What his Honour seems to me to have done—I think, with respect to him, erroneously done—is, that he considered that question, on the general merits of this case, as a point to be discussed on the preliminary question, whether the parties should be allowed to rehear or not. And the authorities which it would seem from Mr. Roundell Palmer's argument his Honour mainly relied upon were two or three cases before Lord Langdale, which I think proceeded on totally different principles. I allude particularly to Davenport v. Stafford, 8 Beav. 503; Hargrave v. Hargrave, 8 Beav. 289; and Gwynne v. Edwards, 9 Beav. 22. All proceeded on this ground. Assume, it was said, that the rehearing is a matter of right upon the certificate of counsel, or so much a matter of right that primâ facie the right is admitted; yet a party after a decree may so conduct himself that this Court will say, "It is inequitable to let you present a petition at all of rehearing." For instance, suppose a decree were made that gave benefits to each party, and that after that decree was made, one of those parties, A. says to B. the other party, "Let me have no more disputes about it, I will execute a release to you of all claims whatsoever." It is done for valuable consideration. And if afterwards that party giving that release were to ask to have the matters reheard, the principles on which Lord Langdale proceeded would apply. They went to this extent,—there is injustice, and you have precluded yourself from any right of rehearing; just as, if you had done that before the original hearing, you would have afforded ground of defence, and it is not just that you should now be allowed to rehear. I have put the case of a party to a release or by contract, which would be the same thing, actually debarring himself. This extends that doctrine somewhat further, but not further than principle requires and renders just. Lord Langdale said, "If by your conduct you have so dealt that the parties might infer that you never meant to question that decree, you shall not afterwards be allowed to have it reheard." That was the principle on which his lordship went in Davenport v. Stafford, Hargreave v. Hargreave, and Gwynne v. Edwards, which was the cause of a creditor seeking to put himself in the place of the plaintiff who had stated the decree, that plaintiff having precluded himself from rehearing the case in the opinion of the judge. Now, suppose that doctrine to be most correct—that a party may by his conduct prevent himself from having a right to rehear—a consent to that may prevent himself from the right to rehear,—how does that apply to the case of a married woman, who cannot contract, and therefore cannot by contract conduct herself in such a way as that? Is she is to be dealt with as if she had contracted? In my opinion, it is impossible for a married woman by contract to prevent herself from having the right to have her cause reheard; so neither can she do so by her conduct. It appears to me that the distinction was not sufficiently directed to the attention of his Honour in dealing with this case. From the very short and loose note that was handed up to me, it appears that his Honour relied upon those cases, and dwelt very much upon the knowledge that must have been in the mind of Mrs. Meryweather as to what had been done, and that therefore she ought to have been bound. Assume her knowledge to have been as perfect as possible, that she had had a copy of the decree, and released all further demands. In my opinion it would have been an act perfectly inoperative; and I do not think her conduct could have put her in a different situation. It appears to me, that the cases relied upon did not warrant the judgment of his Honour. It might be heard. But as a general question, has not any party in a cause a right to have that reheard, if he think fit to do so? Generally speaking, he can do so. I think there is nothing to take this out of the ordinary course. So much for the matter that was argued at the Rolls. There are two or three points of minor importance which have been suggested here. One, that there is an error perfectly technical, namely, that the matter is wrongly entitled. That point was not taken at the Rolls, and if it had been, I am persuaded that his Ho[illegible] would have allowed the party liberty to amend. We should probably have power to do the same, but we find that the parties do not wish it. There are two other objections that may be called formal, but they have a semblance of substance. It is said that this petition states too much, and as another objection, it is represented that it does not state enough. With regard to its stating too much, that is of course unimportant. Nothing is prayed in respect of what is stated too much, and it comes within the same category as the improper and additional title. It is quite innocuous. That point was not taken at the Rolls: I therefore think it must fail, just like the superfluous title. There is another point, which, though in some sense formal, has a semblance of substance. It is this, that the petition does not state that which it ought to state—that it was ground of arrangement, and that seems to be the ground on which Lord Eldon proceeded on one of the grounds in Wood v. Griffith, in dismissing the petition. But that case is no authority for the present. In Wood v. Griffith, the decree was that the defendant should concur with the plaintiff in executing a sale of certain property in which I suppose they had a common interest. That was a decree made adversely to the defendant, but after the decree had been made the defendant consented to an order whereby it was referred to some known auctioneer by the order of the Court to settle the conditions of sale. Now, Lord Eldon said, and said truly, I should be slow to say that having consented to that order, precluded the party from having the original decree reheard. But in presenting the petition of rehearing (I do not mean that these are the very words, but this is what I understand), the party must state to the Court enough to enable the Court to know what it is that it is rehearing, and what has been done, and what position the Court will be in when it is reheard. I cannot say that it would not be material to know that since the decree has been made, the party consented to it for settling the conditions of sale. The party ought certainly to have stated that in his petition of rehearing. Upon that ground the petition of rehearing that was presented with that motion was dismissed, but without prejudice to the party presenting another. How does that apply here? Why was it important that that order that consent for settling the conditions of sale should have been stated in the petition of rehearing? Why because, if the decree is varied on the rehearing, the Court will have to consider what should be done under that order which is made under the decree of rehearing. What is the point here? It is that the Act of Parliament ought to have been stated under which certain leases have been granted. Why, nobody in the world can question what has been done under the Act of Parliament. That is to stand, whether the decree on rehearing is varied or not. Indeed, that puts it that that is to remain just in the state in which it would have been if the cause had been reheard. Of course it would be out of the question to admit of dispute, that what has been done by the Legislature is valid quâcunque viâ datâ. It appears to me that the objection as to not having stated the Act of Parliament wholly fails, and the parties are driven back to the merits, the general merits of this petition, which I think are entirely with the parties who ask to rehear the case. I do not mean to give the least opinion, either as to what the result of a trial or issue would be. I should be of opinion that, under the circumstances, the decree was erroneous. It may be found, on investigating the subject more fully, that the husband is for this purpose competent to bind the interests of the wife. And then the decree would have been perfectly right, although erroneously stating what it was not necessary that it should state.

Order of the Master of the Rolls reversed. All costs reserved until after the rehearing or further order, with liberty to apply.

The petition of rehearing now (19th March) came on to be heard.

Bethell and Villiers, for Mrs. Meryweather.

Wright, for all the children (except Lady Sandys), in favour of the application.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE. This case comes before the Court under very extraordinary and peculiar circumstances. It is not necessary to say whether, when there is an adjudication of the validity of a will of freehold estate in a case where the heiress is a married woman, that adjudication can be questioned by her on the ground that she was a married woman at the time, or by her heir on that ground after the coverture shall have determined whether there have been, or have not been, a trial at law. Cases of that description we desire to leave totally untouched, considering this not one of them. Subject to any observation upon that point which those who oppose the present application are desirous of making, we consider at present that this is a case in which there has not been substantially an adjudication of the will, inasmuch as that point was retired from by the husband; when he had charge of the case, he himself and his wife, not on the ground that the will was good, but on the ground that if the contest proceeded the result would be favourable to the will, but on the ground that though the will was a bad one, there were reasons and inducements which led the husband, having the conduct of the cause, to think it was better that the will, though a bad will, should be established. We are at present, therefore, disposed to think, subject to what we may hear, that it ought to be left open to the wife or her heirs, hereafter to make what she can of that point. But that during the life of the husband the estate is effectually bound, so that during his life, he being tenant by the courtesy, there cannot be a trial, and therefore subject to dealing with this case more unfavourably to those who support this application, what we at present purpose to do, is to vary the decree or order of the 11th of February, 1833, by striking out, "and the consent of Mary Ann Meryweather," and inserting at the end of it the following words, "that this decree or order is to be without prejudice to any suit or question, which may be instituted or raised as to the validity of the said will, and accordingly, the said Mary Ann Meryweather, her heirs, and assigns are to be at liberty to institute, prosecute, or make any suit, proceeding, or application, which they may be advised after the death of the said William Stevens Meryweather, for the purpose of recovering the real estate of the said testator, on the ground that he left the said Mary Ann Meryweather his heiress-at-law, and disputing the validity as to the real estate devised by the said will." Now, as I have already said, if those who oppose this application consider that they have a reasonable chance of obtaining anything more advantageous for them, we are of course ready to hear them, and hear them with attention.

Villiers, in reply.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—This is a case, which though, as we have often before said, we believe practically to be of no importance at all, really does open a number of very difficult and somewhat curious questions, namely, as to the right of a husband as dominus litis in a suit in which his wife's inheritance is interested. Now there does seem to be very great authority for saying that all convenience and all analogy to the old proceeding in respect of real actions would seem to proceed by reason à priori of this being the state of the law; namely, that if there is a suit against the husband and wife in respect of the wife's inheritance, if the wife does not or the husband and wife do not at the time desire to have an issue, the Court may declare the will to be proved just as if she was not a married woman. All convenience, I say, seems to require it. I cannot remember any case having come under my own experience; but if I had been asked the question I should have said it was just the same with a married woman, and that if she does not claim she must be bound by it. Mr. Walker, who is a registrar of very great experience, states it as his impression that it is very frequently done. He has brought us a note of two cases, and one was distinctly a case in which that had been done; but on looking at the registrar's book, singularly enough the decree does not seem to have been entered; and although the decree was not entered, there was an order made afterwards reciting it, and some directions given upon some interlocutory order about costs. If it had been absolutely necessary to decide that, for myself I should probably have wished further time to make some further search. But assuming that to be so; assuming it to be the law that the wife, or the husband acting for the wife, does not claim an issue at the time the cause comes to a hearing; assume, then, that the wife is bound. Now in this case an issue was directed, then arises the dry question, an issue having under these circumstances been directed, the husband afterwards presents a petition to vary that order, and to get rid of the issue—Can he do that? Now, in my opinion, he cannot; that is a different proceeding altogether. He did not think fit to claim an issue; and the wife having obtained the benefit of an issue, he thinks fit afterwards, on her behalf, to compromise the suit. Now, as was repeatedly thrown out by my learned brother, that is not a proceeding by analogy to the old proceeding at law; for though the wife may be bound in suits as to real property, yet undoubtedly where there has been a compromise of right as to her estate by a fine expressly or impliedly, in either case she may separately apply to the Court herself, or some person for that purpose; though the result of that seems to me that the husband could not by this petition get rid of the right that the wife had acquired in 1832. If the husband could not do it by his own petition alone, it could not make it at all better by joining the wife as co-petitioner, still less can it be entered on the decree that she had consented. It is merely a superfluity of words that mean nothing. It is, in truth, the husband's right. What is the effect of the order that was made on that petition of the husband joining the wife with him? I believe we both are of opinion that although inoperative in binding the inheritance as against the wife, it must be conclusive as against the husband. Indeed, it is hardly necessary to determine that, because he was a party afterwards to an order which expressly proceeded on that footing, the consequence of that is, that he is for ever bound. He being tenant by the courtesy, and therefore entitled sub modo during his own life, he has bound that inheritance, whether there was or was not a good will. He is bound to act on the footing of its being a valid will, so long as he lives. Then the question arises whether we ought not to provide that the wife, or those who come after her, may not be precluded from disputing that will after the husband's death. We think that we ought to make such a provision, that if upon his death Mrs. Meryweather, if she should then be alive, or her heir, if she should be then dead, should be so minded, to dispute this will, they should not be prejudiced by the act of the husband in having got rid of the order that was made in 1832, for the trial of an issue as to the validity of that will; but that they ought to have the same right as if the order of 1833 had never been made. With that view, my learned brother sketched out some few words, that seemed to embody at the first blush all that was necessary. If it should turn out that any thing more is necessary, words of course in this paper may be introduced. That seems to be the course that we ought to pursue to get rid of or vary the order of 1833 in the mode proposed, by striking out that it was by the consent of Mary Ann Meryweather, and inserting a provision that it is to be without prejudice to any suit or proceeding of Mrs. Meryweather after the death of her husband, if she should survive him, and if she should not survive him, then her heir-at-law, if he should think fit, is to institute proceedings, and so on.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I repeat that this transaction was analogous to a compromise, and not to a final adjudication, and that the two stand on importantly different principles. The idea in which we both concur has been endeavoured to be expressed; but it may be very well susceptible of improvement on either side. Therefore, if either side shall wish to suggest any thing upon that, we should be very glad indeed if it could be done. Mr. Walker shall have a copy made of this, and shall hand a copy out to the parties, merely as a suggestion, and we will very gladly hear any thing that may be stated upon it. You quite understand the idea upon which we proceed. The minutes, as settled this day (March 20) were,—"Vary the decree or order of the 11th of February, 1833, by striking out the 'consent' of Mary Ann Meryweather, and inserting at the end of it the following words:—'That the decree or order is to be without prejudice to any suit or question which, after the death of the said W. S. Meryweather, may be instituted or raised by the said M. A. Meryweather, her heirs, or assigns, as to the validity of the will and codicil, or either of them.' And accordingly the said M. A. Meryweather, her heirs and assigns, are to be at liberty to institute, prosecute, or make any suit, proceedings, or application that they may be advised after the death of the said W. S. Meryweather, for the purpose of recovering the real estates of the said testator, on the ground that he left the said M. A. Meryweather his heiress-at-law, and of disputing the validity as to real estate of his said will and codicil, or either of them. The costs of all parties, and consequent upon the petition of rehearing, including the costs of the trustee's motion at the Rolls to take the petition off the file, &c. and of the appeal to discharge the order of the Master of the Rolls thereon, to be costs in the cause."

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Dec. 16 and 17.

GOOCH v. GOOCH.

Will—Construction—Limitation over—Cutting down interest given—Distribution.

A testator gave his real estates to trustees, in trust, to apply the rents for the benefit of his daughter and all her children, in equal shares, and on any of the children attaining twenty-one during the minority of her youngest living child, his or her part or share should thenceforth be paid to him or her respectively, for his or her own use, and when the youngest child should have attained twenty-one, the savings of the rents, &c. in the hands of the trustees were to be divided equally among all the children then living, and if any of them should die under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, his or her share was to go in equal shares to the testator's daughter and the other children, at twenty-one; but if any should die under twenty-one leaving issue, such issue was to take its parent's share; and on the youngest child attaining twenty-one the testator gave his said estate to the then eldest living grandchild of his daughter, and the residue of his real estate he directed to be sold, and the proceeds divided equally among his daughter's other children except such eldest grandson:

Held, that the trusts over in favour of the daughter's grandchildren were void for remoteness.

Held, however, the limitations over, being void, did not cut down or destroy the gifts to the children of the daughter and the survivors of them.

Held, also, that there was a contingency with a double aspect, on which the testator intended the property to be divided when the youngest child should attain twenty-one, that if all the six children of the testator were then alive, the property was to be divided amongst them; if any died without leaving issue, it was to be divided amongst those who survived; if any died leaving issue, it was to be divided into as many shares as there were survivors, and one more for the issue of the deceased, in which case there would be an intestacy of the latter share, which was void.

This case came again before the Court to be spoken to on the minutes. The questions of remoteness had been fully gone into at the hearing (see 19 Law T. 231; supra); but on subsequent consideration, his Honour, though still of opinion that he had taken a proper view of the case, was desirous of hearing a further argument on the general bearings of the questions involved, and as to the distribution of the fund so far as the limitations thereof were not void for remoteness. On this account it may be advantageous to state the words of the will. The testator, by his will, dated 24th October, 1792, devised his real estate to William Bazire and Jonathan Tipple, upon trust to receive the rents and profits during the lives and life of the survivor or longer liver of all the children, which his daughter Mary, the wife of John Gooch, had or should have, and pay and apply the same in keeping the houses and buildings in repair, and paying certain annuities, &c. and subject thereto to apply the same to the support of his said daughter, and in the maintenance, education, and bringing-up of all her children which she should from time to time have living, in equal shares between her and them; and he directed that when any of her children should attain the age of twenty-one during the minority of her youngest living child, the part or share of such child or children attaining twenty-one should from thence be paid to him or her respectively to and for his, her, and their own use and disposal; and when the youngest of his grandchildren who should live to attain twenty-one should have arrived at that age, then he directed that such savings or overplus of the said rents and profits as should be then in the hands of his trustees, and the rents then due should be paid and divided to and amongst his said grandchildren that should be then living equally; and in case any of his said grandchildren by his said daughter should die under twenty-one without leaving any issue then living, then that the parts and shares, or part and share, of the said rents and profits of such grandchild and grandchildren so dying under age, and without issue should be paid and applied to and amongst his said daughter and the survivors or others of his grandchildren by her in equal shares, to be paid to the latter at their respective ages of twenty-one years. But in case any of his said grandchildren should depart this life under the age of twenty-one years leaving issue, such issue should be entitled to the share of the said rents and profits its father or mother would have been entitled to if living; and in case his said daughter should depart this life before all his grandchildren should have attained twenty-one, then her share of the said rents and profits should, from her decease, be paid and applied for the use and benefit of all her children and their issue until the youngest of such children should attain twenty-one, in equal shares; and in case his said daughter should happen to be living at the time the youngest of his grandchildren by her should attain twenty-one, then upon trust to pay her an annuity of 100*l.* for life, which he charged on his real estate as therein mentioned, and also an annuity to his brother Thomas and his sister Elizabeth Seawater respectively to be charged on his real estate; and from and after all his grandchildren by his said daughter and the youngest of them should have attained twenty-one, he directed that the clear rents and profits of his real estates accruing from that time should be applied to and amongst his said grandchildren and the issue of any of them that should happen to die leaving issue, equally share and share alike, and to the survivors and survivor of them until the decease of the longest liver of his said grandchildren, the issue of any children or child so dying to be entitled only to the share which its parent, if living, would have been entitled to; and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor or longest liver of his said grandchildren, then upon trust to convey all his said messuage so situate in Sutton, in the county of Suffolk, subject to the payment, with the rest of his real estate, of a proportionate part of the annuities previously given by him unto that son, of any one of his said grandchildren as should at such decease of the survivor or longer liver of them be then the eldest living grandson of his said daughter and his heirs, and he directed him to take the name of Tipplo; and all the residue of his real estate subject to and charged with the payment of the residue of the said annuities, he directed to be sold by his trustees after the decease of the longest liver or survivor of his said grandchildren; and the moneys arising from such sale and from the rents and profits thereof, from the decease of such surviving grandchild, until such sale, he gave unto all and every of his grandchildren, the children of his daughter, whether male or female, other than and except such eldest grandson of his said daughter, who would be entitled to his Sutton estate by virtue of the demise thereinbefore mentioned. The testator then gave his personal estate to his trustees upon like trusts, and he appointed his trustees executors of his will. The testator died in 1797, leaving his daughter Mary, his only child and next of kin and heiress-at-law and customary heir. Mary Gooch had six children, all living at the death of the testator, viz. Mary Bazire, by a former husband, and five then infant children by her husband John Gooch, viz. John Tipple, Anne, Maria, George, and James. Mary Bazire died unmarried in 1800, Mary Gooch died in 1801, and Anne Gooch died unmarried in 1807. John Tipple Gooch died in 1837, intestate as to real estate, and leaving Watson Gooch, his eldest son and heir-at-law, who was also the heir-at-law of Mary Gooch and of the testator, and entitled presumptively under the will to the Sutton estate as the eldest grandson of the testator's daughter Mary Gooch. Maria married Robert Cann and had issue. George Gooch was also married and had issue. The testator was in possession of both freehold estate and copyholds of Borough-English tenure, and George Gooch, as being the youngest son of Mary Gooch, claimed as her customary heir, and also as customary heir of the testator. At the hearing the questions of remoteness were disposed of (see supra, p. 274), and the matter was now again mentioned, his Honour having first stated more fully the view of the case he had taken, and its bearings upon the interests of the several parties. The points raised will be seen by his Honour's judgments.

Tuesday, Dec. 16.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have been considering this case since it was last before me, and I should rather like to hear Mr. Walpole on the subject. I am very much of opinion that it was a proper view that I took of this case with respect to the will,—that it was a contingency with a double aspect, in which the testator intended, when the youngest child should attain twenty-one, the property should be divided in this manner: if all the six grandchildren were alive, to be divided amongst them; if any died without leaving issue, it was to be divided amongst the number of children who were surviving; if any died leaving issue, then it was to be divided into the joint number of the surviving children, and the children of the child who had died leaving issue. In that case if the child died leaving issue, there would have been an intestacy. That is my decision. But what is there illegal in a man saying, "I give to A. for life, and after his death to his children, for their lives; and on the death of the surviving of those children, if he is then alive in person?" That would be perfectly good. "But if A. B. is dead, then I give it to the children of those children." That would be clearly bad. But because he has given in one event to the children of his child, that would not make the gift to A. B. bad. That is the general view I take of this case.

Walpole and Smith then addressed the Court on the construction of the words of the will.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The view which I take of this case is, that if I were to follow the interpretation which Mr. Smith endeavoured to induce me to put upon this will, I should be violating the direct and exact words of the testator; and I look at it, as he says, from the death of the testator. The testator gives a set of trusts (which it is not necessary to regard, because it has nothing to do with the present question), which is to continue until the youngest grandchild shall attain twenty-one. Then he says what is as nearly as possible expressed in these words: "Upon the youngest grandchild attaining twenty-one, I desire that the rents shall be divided into this number of shares, that is to say, as many shares as there shall be grandchildren then living, and grandchildren dead, having left issue." It follows, if there are no grandchildren then living, but there are grandchildren who died leaving issue, it would be divided into this number of shares: if there are only grandchildren alive without grandchildren dead leaving issues, it would only be divided into the number of shares of the grandchildren then alive. He had six grandchildren,—two had died not leaving issue; by what possibility, in accordance with the terms of the testator's will, can you divide it into six parts? He says it is to be divided then into as many shares as there are objects composed of those two classes of persons, that is to say, living grandchildren and stirpes of deceased grandchildren, just as much as if he had said "grandchildren and children of A." as many as there are of these two classes combined. Then if there are none of the grandchildren who died leaving issue, why are you to give them shares? It appears to be directly opposed to the words of the testator's will. He has directed it to be divided into as many shares as there are persons, to be derived from two sources; one of those sources fails; the other source takes the whole. And, then, what is there that is void in it, because it is only in case there were grandchildren who had left issue that it would be void? He might have said, "I desire it to be divided into as many shares as there are children of A. and children of B. and I desire to die intestate with respect to those shares of the children of B." That would be perfectly good; and if there were no children of B. the children of A. would take the whole. In my opinion, therefore, the orders of 1812 are correct. It was a class of shares to be ascertained when the youngest child shall attain twenty-one; and the number of shares, according to the testator's will, was four, and accordingly it is to be so divided. In my opinion, according to the construction of the will, the same process was to take place upon the death of any child, until they all died, and when the survivor died, a new set of limitations was to take place. By the same process, there was to be a new class ascertained whenever any grandchild died. Then supposing a grandchild died without leaving issue, it would be divided into thirds; and supposing two grandchildren died, without leaving issue, it would be divided into halves. On the other hand, supposing a grandchild died leaving issue, it was to be divided into fourths; then that fourth given to those children (of the grandchildren) was too remote, and was, therefore, void. I took some pains with the will, but it is possible that I may be wrong upon the subject; at the same time, it is very fit that the view I take of the case should be as clear as I can make it, in order that it may be set right if I have miscarried in the matter. It does not appear to me that the orders of 1812, as I have at present heard them, go further than to say that upon the youngest grandchild attaining twenty-one, the rents [illegible] to fourths. That appears to be [illegible] does not appear to go beyond [illegible] of a grandchild leaving issue. [illegible] that Mr. Palmer may have to [illegible] view of the case, that thereupon it was still to be divided into fourths, and that one of those fourths would become void for remoteness, and it would go to the heir at law or customary heir.

Palmer then addressed the Court.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I will look at it and settle the minutes to-day, and if I have occasion to mention it again I will mention it to-morrow morning; if not, I will let you have the minutes to-morrow morning. I shall say nothing more about the division of the fourths when the youngest child attained twenty-one. I am of opinion that it is quite right. With respect to the other question, I will look at it and see whether, in fact, I have not rather been misled in the observations I have made by supposing that the words of the will were repeated over and over again, so as to make a fresh division whenever any child died.

Wednesday, December 17.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have looked carefully at the matter of Gooch v. Gooch since yesterday, and I am of opinion that the minutes are right as they stand. When I stated my opinion with respect to this, that after the youngest child had attained twenty-one the distribution of the fund into fourths in the event that had happened, I stated that I thought that opinion was correct, and I adhere to that opinion; but when I stated that a new distribution took place on the death of each successive child, I had present in my mind that the words which relate to the distribution of the fund when the youngest child attained twenty-one were repeated. The fund is given to them and their survivors, and the limitation over being void will not cut down or destroy their estate. I am of opinion that the minutes are correct as they stand.

Re LETHBRIDGE and MACKRI[LL]

Solicitor—Bill of Costs—Taxation—Delivery of bill—Payment—Costs of application.

A. and B. were appointed executors of J. F.'s will; B. was a solicitor and a partner in the firm of B. and C. but was authorised by the will, notwithstanding his being an executor, to charge for professional services. The firm of B and C. was employed professionally in the affairs of the executorship, and three several bills of costs which had been incurred, one of them in the lifetime of the testator, were delivered to the executors, who drew cheques for the amount, which cheques were handed over by A. to B. in his capacity of solicitor. On a petition for delivery of the bills and taxation by a party beneficially interested in the residuary estate, the delivery of the cheques by A. to B. was held to be a payment, and more than a year having elapsed since payment of two of the bills, delivery and taxation were refused: but as to the third payment having been made within the year, it was ordered to be delivered by a given time, and the petition as to taxation, &c. was ordered to stand over till after delivery to give the petitioner an opportunity of considering whether taxation would be desirable.

The respondents then delivered a bill of costs, not in the name of the firm, but in the name of C. only. The petitioner having decided upon proceeding with the taxation, applied for an order accordingly, and asked the Court to insert in the order a direction that the Master might treat the bill delivered as that of the firm and not of C. only:

Held, that the Court had no power to give any such direction, but could only order taxation of the bill which was delivered and on which the claim was made: and as B. claimed nothing, the order would be for taxation of the bill as delivered in the name of C.

That if any thing should be found due from the solicitor on the taxation, as that would be corpus, it must be ordered to be paid to the executors:

That the costs of the respondents should depend upon the result of the taxation.

This was a petition for delivery and taxation of certain bills of costs after payment thereof. The case had been before the Court on the 23rd of December last (see 18 Law T. 192, supra), and an order was then made for delivery of one of the bills, and the rest of the petition was ordered to stand over till to-day to give the petitioner an opportunity of considering, after delivery of the bill, whther it would be desirable to apply for an order for taxation. The bill being delivered the petitioner now applied for an order to tax. The facts of the case are fully stated 18 Law T. 192, supra; but they are shortly to this effect. Henry John White and William Thomas Mackrill, were appointed executors of the will of Sir James Flower, and Mr. Mackrill, being a solicitor, was thereby authorised to charge for professional services. Three several bills of costs were delivered to Mr. White by Mr. Mackrill on behalf of the firm of Lethbridge and Mackrill, of which Mr. Mackrill was a partner, and cheques were drawn by Mr. White and Mr. Mackrell, as executors, on the bankers of the executorship, and these cheques were handed by Mr. White to Mr. Mackrill in his capacity as solicitor, in payment of the bills. This was held to constitute a payment of the bills (vide supra, 18 Law T. 192); but one of the bills, amounting to 195l. 9s. having been paid within the twelve months, the Court directed that that bill should be delivered to the petitioner, Mrs. Lusignan (who was tenant for life of the residuary estate of the testator, and of course a party who was ultimately to bear the payment so made by the executors); but the rest of the petition was to stand over to give Mrs. Lusignan an opportunity of judging of the fairness and reasonableness of the charges contained in the bill when it should be delivered, and of the propriety of asking for an order to tax. The bill having been delivered by the respondents it was found not to be made out in the name of the firm, but to be headed thus: "The executors of Sir James Flowers, deceased, to J. Lethbridge." The petitioner now renewed her application to the Court, and asked an order for taxation of the bill, accompanied with a direction that the Master should treat the bill as the bill of the firm.

Bevir, for the petitioner, asked the Court to insert in the order for taxation a direction to the Master to treat the bill as that of the firm, and not merely as that of J. Lethbridge; and he insisted that as on the previous occasion (vide supra, 18 Law T. 192), the respondents had opposed the petition, the object of which was the taxation of the bills of the firm without alleging that the business was done by one, or the bills due to one, and indeed had shewn by their affidavit in opposition that the bill had been paid to Mr. Mackrill for the firm, they could not now, for the purpose of even harassing the petitioner, set it up as the bill of the one. That it might not only affect the principle of taxation upon which the Master would proceed; but it would also abridge the remedy given by the common order for the examination of the parties and the production of papers in their possession. The Court, though not having any power in this repect under the Act, would make this direction in exercise of its general jurisdictions over the solicitors, its officers. He then referred to cases in which the Court had refused to allow one of a firm of solicitors being a trustee to set up a claim through his partner for costs for business which had, in fact, been done by the firm. (Christophers v. White, 10 Beav. 523.)

Roupell, contrà.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought he had no power to make any such direction. The Court could only order taxation of the bill which was delivered, and on which the claim was made. In this case Mackrill claimed nothing. The order would therefore be for taxation of the bill which had been delivered.

Bevir then suggested whether, as the application was made by the tenant for life of the residue under the 39th section of the Act, the Court would in case anything should be found to be coming for another solicitor on the taxation, make any direction with regard to the party to whom it should be paid.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said any such sum would be corpus, and must be ordered to be paid to the executors.

Roupell asked for the respondents' costs.

Bevir contended that there was nothing to take them out of the common course; and that the right to them would depend on the result of the taxation.

The MASTER of the ROLLS so decided.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

March 5 and 9.

KING v. MALCOTT.

Lessor and lessee—Security against—Breach of covenants.

A claim was filed by the representative of a lessor to have the estate of the lessee, who had died, administered and a portion of the assets impounded to answer any future breaches of the covenants in the leases, there being no present breach, but the Court dismissed the claim with costs.

A lease was granted containing the ordinary covenants on the part of the lessee to repair, to pay the rent, and to insure the premises from loss or damage by fire. The lessee assigned the lease in the usual manner, taking a covenant from the assignee to observe the covenants of the original lease, and to indemnify the lessee for all losses in respect of any breach of the same. The lessee made his will and devised and bequeathed both real and personal estate, which he charged with the payment of his debts. The executors proved the will and paid the debts, but declined to accede to a demand made upon them by the person representing the lessor to set apart a sufficient part of a sufficient sum to answer any consequences of breach of covenant in the lease. There being no breach at that time the executors declined to do so, and thereupon the present suit by claim was instituted, praying that the usual administration accounts might be taken of the lessee's estate, including what was due, or might become due, to the plaintiff for rent, and that the estate might be applied in payment of the debts, and that a sufficient portion of the estate might be set apart to answer any breaches of the covenant in the lease.

Kenyon Parker and Rogers, for the plaintiff, argued that as if there were any breaches hereafter the lessor would be entitled to bring his action against the executors, therefore the retention of a part of the estate was only a reasonable precaution. Any breach would create a debt, and as the lessee himself had charged his estate both real and personal with the payment of his debts, it was still more reasonable to take such a course. They cited Hawkins v. Day, Ambl. 160; Simmonds v. Bolland, 3 Mer. 547; Dobson v. Carpenter, 12 Beav. 370; and Fletcher v. Stevenson, 3 Hare, 360. Williams on Executors, 817, was also referred to.

Amphlett, for the executors, argued that the lessor was not a creditor until there had been a breach of the covenants, and as there had been no breach, the presumption ought to be that there would be none. Were it certain that the debt would arise, there would be some ground for detaining the assets of the lessee from distribution, but it was plain that the breach might never occur, and equally clear that the lessor had no right as against the estate of the lessee to have that security which he could not have had against the lessee himself, and a security, moreover, for which he never contracted. (Flight v. Cook, 2 Ves. sen. 619; Franks v. Cooper, 4 Ves. 763.)

Tuesday, March 9.—THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question is, whether the plaintiff is now entitled to have the lessee the testator's, assets impounded, for securing him against possible breaches of the covenants of the lease. There has been no breach of covenant up to this time on which any legal debt is due. No action would now lie against the executors for the purpose of compelling payment of any rent in arrear, or any damages for repairs. Not only is there no rent due, but there is no certainty that anything ever will be due on any of these covenants, because if the rent be paid at the day, and if the other covenants be duly observed, no action will ever lie upon any of them. There is, therefore, no certainty that any debt will ever be due; which makes this case readily distinguishable from the cases quoted. Where there has been a bond or covenant for payment of a certain sum of money; there the money must become due, and must become due on the bond or covenant. In the general decree for the administration of a testator's estate in an administration suit, the usual reference to the Master is to take an account of all debts due to and from the testator. If the testator be a lessee no debt is proveable under that decree by the lessor if there be no rent in arrear, nothing, in fact, is due to the lessor from the testator or his estate. But suppose rent afterwards becomes due, and that proceedings were taken by the landlord, a sum of money will be set apart to answer his demand. That arises, not from the right of the creditor to come in under the decree, but from the right of the executor to an indemnity out of the assets. The creditor becoming a creditor after the decease of the testator, on account of the covenant, is not a creditor at the time of his decease, and therefore is not entitled to come in under the decree. The lessor never bargained with the lessee that any portion of his assets, or any fund whatever, should be impounded for the purpose of securing to him the due performance of his covenants. For that due performance he looks to the personal security of the lessee; and that is all he can go against at law. Why should a Court of Equity give a more extensive remedy than a Court of Law? The case of contingent legatees was urged in argument by way of analogy, and it was said that such legatees (certainly not more to be favoured than creditors) have this right of retaining and impounding the assets of their testator. But, in the case of legatees, every legatee has a right under the will, and there is, therefore, a liability actually existing, to which the estate is subject. Does any such liability here exist? It may be that a liability will arise hereafter, but there is none at present. There is also a difference between a contingent interest in a legacy, and a contingent legacy. The first is a sum which is, in every event, certainly payable to some person, though to what person is uncertain; the second is a sum which it is uncertain whether it will ever be payable at all. The case of Webber v. Webber, 1 Sim. & Stu. 311, shews the proper course to be taken in consequence of this difference. The person entitled to a contingent legacy is not, as seems to have been assumed at the bar, entitled to have a sum actually retained to answer the legacy when the contingency arises. This is not an unusual way of providing for the legacy, but it is matter of arrangement, not of right, and, in strictness, the legatee is only entitled to have security for the repayment of the sum should the contingency arise. Lord Redesdale's judgment in Lynar v. Mills, 2 Sch. & L. 339, is, I think, quite sufficient to govern the present case. There the testator had covenanted to pay an annuity, and assigned a terminable fund for securing it, and had further covenanted, that if such terminable fund should fail, all his real and personal property should be charged with the payment of the annuity. On a bill brought by the annuitant against the executors, praying an allocation of part of the testator's assets to answer the annuity the terminable fund having not yet failed, Lord Redesdale said, "I cannot allocate any part of the property in this case, it would be tying up two parts of the property to the same purpose—the particular fund, which is ample while it lasts, and also part of the general estate producing the same income. The intention of the deed was, that no additional security for the payment of the annuity should be given, except upon the failure of the particular fund. The plaintiff has made her bargain and taken a particular security, and now files this bill in direct contradiction to it." Here the landlord has for his security the leasehold property itself, which is a fund clearly liable to make good the breaches of any covenant contained in the lease, and also the general liability of the whole personal estate of the testator, in case the leaseholds themselves should be insufficient. Does a landlord ever intend to have any specific security beyond the security of the property demised? In fact, such a case as the present case is immediately after the passage I have read referred to by Lord Redesdale in the same judgment, for he asks directly afterwards, "Every covenant in a lease may be broken; yet, was it ever held that a party could come here to have personal assets allocated to answer such possible breaches? Such a bill might possibly be entertained, if it were alleged and appeared, that the executors were wasting the assets, but that is not pretended here." The ... put by Lord Redesdale is one of considerable difficulty, because, even there, if the executors ... committing waste, how can a Court of Equity treat that as a legal debt which is not a legal debt? However, I do not intend to say anything on that question at present, as it does not arise here, there being no pretence of the executors wasting the assets, and it would be very improper to prejudice the case, when it may arise, by any observations not made on a full review of all the decisions. On these grounds I must dismiss this claim, a course which, besides, is highly advisable, on the ground of expediency, since the consequence of the doctrine contended for by the plaintiff would amount to this that the estate of no lessee could ever be distributed within any reasonable period from his decease.

The claim was then dismissed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALLSUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple Barrister-at-Law.

March 25, 26, and 29.

Ex parte CARPENTER'S EXECUTORS, re THE LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM EXTENSION AND NORTHAMPTON, DAVENTRY, LEAMINGTON, AND WARWICK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint Stock Companies' Winding-up Act—Breach of trust by directors.

In a railway company, shares were allotted, deposits received, and the parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement executed. The directors appointed five of their number to be a finance committee, with power for any three of them to draw cheques. Cheques were drawn, and the money appeared by the cash-book to have been applied for contingencies, which contingencies were, by the secretary's evidence, shewn to be the purchase of shares in the market. The scheme having failed, the company was ordered to be wound up, and the Master charged the members of the finance committee who had signed the cheques with the amount of the cheques, they being at liberty to discharge themselves by shewing a proper application of the moneys.

Upon appeal, the Master's order was discharged.

This was a motion on behalf of Richard Cromwell Carpenter and the Rev. Geo. Carpenter, executors of Richard Carpenter, deceased, for the discharge or variation of an order of Master Blunt, dated the 6th of February, 1852. The Master's order was as follows:—"Whereas, &c. it appearing to me that the several contributories respectively hereinafter named have applied certain moneys of the said company hereinafter more particularly mentioned in breach of the trusts reposed in them by the parliamentary contract of this company, dated the 16th day of August, 1845, I do hereby order and direct that the official manager of this company do open the several accounts hereinafter mentioned between the said company and the said R. C. Carpenter and Geo. Carpenter (as personal representatives of the said R. Carpenter, deceased,) Seth Nuttall Fisher, Peter Henry Edlin, Sir John Edward de Beauvoir, bart. and Frederick F. Weiss, and that in such accounts he do debit and charge the said contributories respectively with the several sums of money hereinafter mentioned (that is to say) first, an account between the said company and the said R. C. Carpenter and George Carpenter (as personal representatives of the said R. Carpenter, deceased), S. N. Fisher, P. H. Edlin, Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, bart. and F. F. Weiss, and that in such account he do debit and charge the said R. C. Carpenter and George Carpenter (as such personal representatives as aforesaid) S. N. Fisher, P. H. Edlin, Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, and F. F. Weiss, with the sum of 1,000*l*. Second, an account between this company and the said R. C. Carpenter and G. Carpenter (as such personal representatives as aforesaid), S. N. Fisher, and P. H. Edlin, and that in such account he do debit and charge the said R. C. Carpenter and G. Carpenter (as such personal representatives as aforesaid) with the sum of 3,150*l*. 18s. 9d. Third, an account between this company and the said R. C. Carpenter and G. Carpenter (as such personal representatives as aforesaid,) S. N. Fisher, and Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, bart. and that in such account he do debit and charge the said R. C. Carpenter and G. Carpenter (as such personal representatives as aforesaid,) S. N. Fisher, and Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, bart. with the sum of 741*l*. 12s. 6d. And I do further order and direct that the said R. C. Carpenter and G. Carpenter, as personal representatives of R. Carpenter, deceased, S. N. Fisher, P. H. Edlin, Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, bart. and F. F. Weiss, do on or before the 31st day of March, 1852, bring in before me statements in writing of such sums of money (if any) as they respectively may claim to be entitled to and to have allowed to them respectively, in discharge of the several sums so to be debited and charged against them as aforesaid. And that in default thereof, the said official manager be at liberty to proceed to enforce the payment, by the said contributories, of what on the balance of the said accounts respectively shall appear to be due from such contributories respectively. And as to the sum of 10,000*l*. sought by the official manager to be charged against the several members of the managing committee of the company, in my said order of the 23rd day of January, 1852, named, I do adjourn the further consideration of such charge until after the cause, now pending in this court, entitled, "Bryson v. The Warwick and Birmingham Canal Company," relating to the said sum of 10,000*l*. shall have been heard or otherwise disposed of." The company was formed in June 1845, and provisionally registered, the capital to consist of 500,000*l*. in 20,000 shares of 25*l*. each; deposit 1*l*. 7s. 6d. per share. The shares were allotted, and a considerable sum received on account of the deposits. At a meeting of the directors of the company on the 15th of August, 1845, it was "resolved, that Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, R. Carpenter, esq. Capt. S. N. Fisher, P. H. Edlin, esq. and F. F. Weiss, esq. be elected and appointed to be a committee of finance, any three of them to form a quorum, and with power to draw upon the bank by cheques, to be signed by not less than three of them, and to be countersigned by the secretary;" and at the same meeting it was "resolved that Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, bart. W. F. Black, esq. J. D. Hopkins, esq. Capt. S. N. Fisher, be elected and appointed a committee for general purposes, with power to take offices and to proceed to the appointment of a secretary."

On the 8th of September, 1845, a cheque for 1,000*l*. was drawn on account of the company, and paid by the Commercial Bank of London, signed by Fisher, Carpenter, and Edlin, and it appeared from the cash-book of the company, that this sum was applied for contingencies. The cheque, however, was not produced.

In October, 1845, three other cheques, one for 1,200*l*., another for 858*l*. 15s. and the third for 92*l*. 3s. 9d., all signed by Fisher, Carpenter, and Edlin, were paid on account of the company, and by the cash-book appeared to have been applied for "contingencies."

In November, 1845, a cheque for 741*l*. 12s. 6d.

payable to "contingencies," and signed by Fisher, Carpenter, and de Beauvoir, was paid on account of the company, and appeared by the cash-book to have been applied for "contingencies."

The parliamentary contract and subscriber's agreement were executed, but the latter had been lost. The company was, in June, 1849, ordered to be wound up (13 Law T. 231), and some of the proceedings in connection with the winding up, will be found reported in the case of Ex parte Gay, 17 Law T. 240; 18 Law T. 167.

The sums which by the Master's order now appealed from, were charged upon the members of the financial committee, had, according to the belief of the secretary, as stated in his evidence, been applied in the purchase of shares.

In giving his judgment, the MASTER said,—"With reference to a part of the case I do not think it is necessary to defer giving judgment. It appears to me that as regards those sums which are sought to be charged against the gentlemen, who have signed the cheques, there is nothing like a defence, and there is no defence suggested. These were funds subscribed by the shareholders in this company for a particular purpose, namely, for the purpose of carrying out a railway. The funds, which were drawn out by these cheques, were not applied to that purpose, at least there is no evidence to shew they were applied to that purpose. It is clearly in evidence that shares were being bought with the funds of the company, and that when the funds were so applied, they were entered in the books as for "contingencies." The sums which were so drawn out with these several cheques, were so entered. Therefore, there is sufficient evidence for me to charge these gentlemen, in the first instance, with the moneys, which were so drawn out as sums, which were improperly applied. If they can make out a case to shew that these sums we applied to a purpose, to which they ought to have been applied, or if they can shew they were properly applied, or were brought back, or can in any way discharge themselves it is open to them to do it. That applies to all the sums except the 10,000*l.* and the first 1,000*l.* With respect to the first 1,000*l.* it is quite clear, at least no jury would doubt it from the evidence which has been given here, and I am here in the nature of judge and jury, that that sum of 1,000*l* was applied by Mr. Carpenter for the purpose of buying shares in the market. I have not a particle of doubt that it was so applied. If it w I have very little doubt that it was so applied with the knowledge of the other persons who were members of the finance committee. At least if they had not knowledge that it was so applied, they were culpably ignorant from not having used the means of information from which they ought to have acquired it. It falls clearly within the rule which was laid down by Lord Hardwicke in the case which has been referred to, and which has been recognised in subsequent cases. I think there was culpable neglect if there was nothing more, but I believe the evidence would go to establish actual knowledge that this money was drawn out and applied to purposes which were clearly illegal. However, with reference to that sum also, if they can explain that which, upon the face of it, appears not to be capable of explanation, it will be open to them in discharge to shew that it was so applied. This disposes, therefore, of the whole e except the 10,000*l.*; and, with reference to that, I shall take time to consider whether I will allow that part of the charge to stand over until the suit which is before the Court has been brought to a conclusion. If, upon consideration, I think that ought not to be the case, I will take time to consider whether I will charge them with that sum. There may be greater difficulty in charging that sum on all the directors who are sought to be charged than there is with reference to the first 1,000*l.* I will let the parties know in a few days whether I make up my mind to direct that part of the application to stand over until after the suit is determined, or I will give my opinion upon whether I ought to charge or discharge them. If it does stand over, I will take care that the official manager prosecutes the suit with the greatest possible diligence."

Bacon and Hallett appeared for Mr. Carpenter's executors in support of the motion of appeal.

Daniel and Southgate appeared for Mr. Weiss, who had given a similar notice of motion, appealing from the Master's order.

Selwyn and Swift for the official manager.

The following cases were cited—Re The Marylebone Bank, 1 Hall & Twells, 100; Parbury v. Chadwick, 12 Bea. 614; Deeks v. Stanhope, 1 Sim. N. S. 448; Cox's case, 3 De G. & Sma. 180; Chadwick's case, Re The Madrid and Valencia Railway Company, 15 Jur. 597; Ex parte Inderwick, 3 De G. & Sma. 231; Hollingsworth's case, 3 De G. & Sma. 102; The Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 400; Styles v. Guy, 1 Mac. & Gord. 422; Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Leicester, 7 Bea. 176; Booth v. Booth, 1 Bea. 125; Fenwick v. Greenwell, 10 Bea. 412; Attorney-General v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had come to the conclusion that the Master's order could not be sustained consistently with the principles and practice of the Court. The circumstance were, that five individuals, with several others, were members of the managing body, and that these five were appointed to be a finance committee, with power for any three of them to sign cheques, which were to be countersigned by the secretary. It was admitted on both sides that some, if not all of the five, acting by the direction of the managing body, had employed the funds of the company to a large amount in buying up shares in the company. The Master had by his order, in fact, charged these persons with the moneys which they were instrumental in applying for the purchase of those shares. His Honour would be extremely sorry to say anything intimating any difference of opinion from the conclusion to which the Master had come as to the proceeding in question, which the Master had rightly characterised as a breach of trust in the application of their funds. It was possible there might be an explanation given of it, but he had not heard any. He did not in the least differ from the view which the Master had taken. It appeared to his Honour to be a misapplication of the funds of the company tending, as had been forcibly put by Mr. Selwyn, in the course of his argument, to destroy the very object for which the money had been put into the hands of the directors. Whatever jurisdiction the Master might or might not have under the Act, he certainly had all the jurisdiction necessary for taking the ordinary accounts, and enforcing the ordinary liabilities. In carrying out the object of the Act of Parliament another class of liabilities, not of the ordinary kind might arise. It was not necessary to consider this point in the present case. It appeared to his Honour that the vice of the Master's order was this, that it assumed that the five individuals, where there was no cheque forthcoming, or three of them where there were cheques, were the parties who, as between these persons and the company, are solely and ultimately chargeable with the moneys misapplied. It assumed that complete justice would be done in the case by making these persons, who were the hands of the governing body, solely liable, by making an order for the restitution of funds to be applicable as funds in which whole of the company had a benefit. When it was considered that these acts were done under the direction of the governing body, and that the object of this proceeding was to wind up the company, and to settle all matters as between all the members of it, it was certain that the object would fail, if the Court were to proceed upon the principle of making those persons solely liable, who, no doubt, were implicated in the misapplication of the money, but not more so than other persons who were not parties. If this money were recovered, the very persons who had directed a misapplication of it, would have the benefit of the fund being brought back. It seemed to him that all persons who were implicated in the transaction were jointly and severally liable; and that there was an obvious distinction between the present case and The Attorney-General v. Wilson and that class of cases, where the application was to have the funds restored on behalf of a company, no members of which were implicated in the misapplication of them. His Honour being of opinion that there was a misapplication of the funds, it appeared to him, with regard to the mode of proceeding, that it was not consistent with the ends of justice that it should be against those persons only as the Master had considered. The transaction itself was much more complicated than to enable him to treat these parties as being solely liable to bring back these funds. He had very little doubt that some other course would be found to enable the Master to investigate what had been done. The Master's order must be discharged, and the costs be reserved, with liberty to apply.

PEARSE v. COLE.

Costs—Solicitor—Jurisdiction.

A married woman can take no proceedings in a cause, except in the name, and with the concurrence of the next friend:

Where, therefore, a motion was made on behalf of a married woman, no next friend being named in the notice of motion, the Court will exercise a jurisdiction to compel the solicitor who gave such notice of motion, to pay the costs occasioned by it.

This was a suit which had been instituted by husband and wife, together with other parties, as plaintiffs, against the defendants, to have certain properties in the West Indies declared chargeable with certain incumbrances, and for the necessary accounts. This suit, however, abated by the death of one of the defendants, and a bill, which was contended to be a bill of revivor, had been filed by a Mr. B. purporting to be by and on behalf of the abovementioned plaintiff against the defendant, and in which a decree, instead of the usual order of revival had been obtained. An application was now made by motion on the part of Mary Pearse, the wife, that the bill of revivor filed by Mr. B. might be taken off the file, the same, as it was alleged, having been filed without the authority of the said Mary Pearse, and that an order to revive made in the cause, dated the 15th day of December, 1851, and a decree of revivor dated the 20th day of December, 1851, might be discharged for irregularity, and that Mr. B. the solicitor, might pay the costs of the application. It appeared that Messrs. Y. and G. also solicitors, had previously filed a bill in the name of Mary Pearse, by her next friend, purporting to be a bill of revivor which it was alleged was also defective, and they had given the present notice of motion, not intituling it as being by the next friend of the wife.

C. P. Cooper and Jolliffe, in support of the motion, relied upon the affidavits which had been made shewing that no authority had been given by the wife to file the bill of revivor.

Karslake, contrà, stated that he was instructed to appear by the plaintiffs, including the wife, through the instrumentality of Mr. B. who had filed the bill of revivor. He contended that a feme coverte could not take any step in a cause in which she was a party, unless by her next friend; that no next friend being mentioned in the notice of motion, the solicitors who improperly gave such a notice should be made to pay the costs of it.

Prior and Winstanley for other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said there appeared to him to be a series of blunders on both sides, and that he should not proceed to make any order on the present motion unless upon the undertaking of Mr. B. to take from the files of the Court the improper decree for relief which had been obtained instead of the usual order for revival. As to the jurisdiction of the Court to make the solicitors who gave an improper notice of motion pay the costs of the application, he wished for further authorities to be sought for.

The following cases as to the jurisdiction were subsequently cited: Fawks v. Pratt, P. Wms. 593; Ex parte Cuthbert, 1 Mad. 78; Cockell v. Whiting, 1 Russ. & My. 43; Bennett v. Wade, 2 Atk. 324; Cook v. Broomhead, 16 Ves. 133; Ex parte Simpson, 15 Ves. 476; Aubrey v. Aspinwall, Jac. 441.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after refusing to allow the notice of motion to be amended by inserting the name of a next friend, said,—The plaintiff Pearse has or had an interest which formerly existed in right of his wife, therefore the original bill in which they were plaintiffs was properly filed by them. This application was, however, made by the wife without a next friend to take a bill of revivor off the file on the ground that it had been filed without her authority, and to compel the solicitor to pay the costs; therefore, that latter part of the motion could not succeed, as the solicitor having been engaged in the original suit, had a right to file such a bill. The motion then being to be dismissed, the Court would have to dismiss it with costs if made on behalf of a person capable of paying costs; but Mrs. Pearce, being a married woman, could not pay costs, still less could she pay costs to herself and her husband, who were the plaintiffs. But the parties against whom the motion is directed had a right to costs, and he (the Vice-Chancellor) had never had a doubt as to the general jurisdiction of the Court to make a solicitor who made a motion without authority pay the costs of it. The only doubt was, whether, according to the present practice, he ought to make this order on the present application, or whether it ought to be the subject of a separate application. He (the Vice-Chancellor) was satisfied that the proper course was to dismiss the motion, and that the solicitors who made the motion should pay the costs. It did not, however, appear to be necessary that the Court should think that the solicitor had acted from improper motives, as he might have acted either from inadvertence or ignorance, he would still, however, be compelled to pay the costs.

Motion refused, with costs against the solicitors.

REG. v. HAMMOND.

Corporations (municipal) — Election — Voting papers—Place of abode of candidate—5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 32—Quo warranto.

The words "place of abode" in the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 32, mean the place in which the candidate for whom the voter intends to vote actually resides; and that section will not be complied with unless the place of actual residence be set forth in the voting paper.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a new trial in this case, which was an information against the defendant for exercising the office of councillor of Yarmouth, a borough within the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76. The question raised was, whether certain voting papers, which described the defendant as of "Church-road, miller," was a correct description of his "place of abode" within the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 32, the defendant's place of business being in Church-road, and his place of residence in High-street.

Tuesday, Jan. 13.—O'Malley and Couch shewed cause.—The place of business is within the purpose of the section, and will better fulfil that purpose which is the best possible identification of the person named. (Haslop v. Thorne, 1 M. & S. 103; Johnson v. Lord, 1 M. & M. 444; Alexander v. Miller, 2 C. & G. 424; Roberts v. Williams, 5 Tyr. 583.) Place of "abode" may mean place of "business" (Southampton Dock Company v. Richards, 1 M. & G. 448; 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 72), even at the option of the voters. (Com. Dig. Abatement, F. 25.) The cases under the Registration of Voters Act, 6 Vict. c. 18, do not apply. They explained R. v. Deighton, 5 Q.B.

Worlledge and Keane, contra.—The Act shews a clear distinction in respect of place of business and of residence, between the qualification of candidate and voter; and this is conspicuous in the forms, especially in forms number 3 to section 17. [COLERIDGE, J.—The 121st, the 127th, and 131st sections also support that distinction.] It is plain from the 6 Vict. c. 101, that for the purposes of election to the Imperial Parliament place of abode does not mean "place of business." (Lucket v. Prowles, 2 C.B. 187; Allen v. Greensill, 4 C.B. 100.) Place of "residence" would afford a greater certainty than place of business, and is therefore to be preferred as an interpretation of the phrase, "place of abode;" for it cannot have been intended that the voter should have an option as to the manner in which he will describe a person who has a place of residence distinct from his place of business.

By the COURT, Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Tuesday, Jan. 26.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. In this case we are required to put a construction on the words "place of abode" in the 32nd section of the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, which enacts that "every burgess entitled to vote in the election of councillors may vote for any number of persons not exceeding the number of councillors then to be chosen by delivering to the mayor and assessors a voting paper containing the Christian names and surnames of the person for whom he votes, with their respective places of abode and descriptions." At the time of the election in question of town councillors for the borough of Great Yarmouth, the defendant resided with his family in High-street, and he carried on the business of a miller in Church-road, having a mill there. His present place of residence and business are both in the parish of Gorleston, and within the limits of the borough of Great Yarmouth. A certain number of the voting papers for him described him as "William Hammond, of Church-road, Gorleston, miller." If his place of abode is properly stated in the voting papers according to the Act of Parliament, he was duly elected a councillor, but otherwise he was not, and the verdict in his favour must be set aside. After an attentive consideration of the Act of Parliament, we are of opinion that by "place of abode" it means the place of residence of the candidate. Such is the usual meaning of this expression. In Johnson's Dictionary "abode" is defined to be "habitation, dwelling, place of residence," and "residence" defined to be "place of abode, dwelling." A man's residence, where he lives with his family and sleeps at night, is always his "place of abode" in the true sense of that expression; and if this be stated to be his place of abode, no doubt nor difficulty ought to occur. In some instances he may be quite as well known if described of the place where he carries on his business; but this is never his place of abode in the ordinary sense of the expression, and he may have a place of business to which he goes very rarely, and which may be known to few as belonging to him. It was urged that the object of this enactment was to designate the individual for whom the vote is given, by requiring the voting paper, along with his name and surname and description, to contain his place of abode; but surely this does not shew that his place of business may be stated, instead of his place of residence; for, the place of residence being mentioned, no doubt can exist as to the individual for whom the vote is intended to be given. The defendant's counsel did not venture to contend that a statement of the place of residence would not be sufficient. They must, therefore, say that a choice is given to state in the voting paper either the residence of the candidate or his place of business; and if he has several places of business, any one of them which the different voters may think fit to select. But this latitude might lead to confusion and errors in summing up the votes, and the object of the legislature, as contended for on the part of the defendant, will be more effectually gained by considering that the language employed is used in its ordinary sense. Wherever the expression "place of abode" occurs in this Act of Parliament, it will be satisfied by the meaning of "place of residence;" and in some places where it occurs, as in sections 121 and 127, and in schedule (D. 2) referred to by section 17, it will admit of no other meaning. We are bound to suppose that it is used in the same sense throughout the whole statute. The Queen v. Deighton, 5 Q.B. 896, was a case that was relied upon by the counsel for the relator, as an express decision upon the meaning of the expression "place of abode," in this section of the Act of Parliament; but there the rejoinder admitted that the defendant's place of abode had not been truly stated in the voting papers, and merely averred that he was so described in the voting papers, without any fraud, and that the description so given of him was as well known as if his place of abode had been mentioned. The judgment of the Court against him proceeded upon the ground that his place of abode had not been mentioned in the voting papers, and the Court did not there decide that his place of abode could not be considered his place of abode. On the part of the defendant reliance was placed on Ricketts v. Williams, 3 C. M. & R. 561. That case turned on the statute 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, which requires notice of action to be indorsed with the name of the attorney intending to sue out process, "together with his place of abode." The Court held that an indorsement, stating the attorney's place of business was sufficient within that Act; principally, it appears, because the information intended to be furnished under that Act was, the place where the attorney, as such and acting in such character, was to be found; and the decision is manifestly inapplicable to the case of the abode of an individual, merely as such, independent of any profession or business. The defendant's counsel likewise referred to the cases in which it has been held that an affidavit describing the deponent as of his place of business is enough, where, by rule of Court, he should be described as of his place of abode. These cases only prove that for some purposes the place of residence may be place of abode, and they are of little use to shew the meaning to be given to the words in the Municipal Corporation Act. There is, however, a statute in pari materia, the Registration of Voters Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, and in construing this Act the learned judges of the Court of Common Pleas seem to have been of opinion that where it uses the words "place of abode," it means "place of residence." (Luckett v. Knowles, 2 C. B. 187; and Allen v. Greensill, 4 C. B. 100.) We have been much pressed by the fact that, in the present case, the defendant was as known by his place of business as by his place of residence; but if we were to hold that the place of business is sufficient, we must lay down a general rule upon the subject, which, if unqualified, would, in many instances, defeat the object of the Legislature; and if qualified with the condition that the candidate is as well known by his place of business as his place of residence, might lead to great uncertainty and much litigation. We think it the safer and better course to conclude that the Legislature used the words in their plain and ordinary sense, and required that the voting paper shall contain the candidate's place of residence, which in all cases he may be easily identified. For these reasons we think that the verdict for the defendant must be set aside, and the rule for a new trial be made absolute.

Tuesday, Feb. 10.

RENSHAW v. BEAN.

Easement—Ancient lights—Alteration—Extinguishment or suspension of right.

Upon the trial of an action for obstructing ancient windows, it appeared that the plaintiff had, within twenty years, added a new story to his house, and enlarged the old windows in the lower stories. The obstruction consisted in the addition of another story to the defendant's house, which was on the opposite side of a narrow court.

Held, that as the plaintiff had by his own act rendered it impossible for the defendant to obstruct the new windows, or the unprivileged portions of the old windows without also obstructing the privileged portions, the action was not maintainable, and the defendant was entitled to a verdict upon a plea traversing the right.

This was an action on the case by the reversioner for the obstruction of ancient lights, which was tried at Nottingham during the last Summer Assizes, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the following case.

The premises in the occupation of the plaintiff's tenants, mentioned in the declaration adjoining to each other, and the windows in question, open into a court or passage leading out of the high pavement in the town and county of Nottingham.

The defendant was the owner of premises very near and in parts adjoining the plaintiff's premises, and situate on the opposite side of the said court or passage. The defendant rebuilt, enlarged, and raised the premises shortly before the action was brought, and thereby darkened and obstructed the windows on the ground-floor, first-floor, and second-floor of the premises in the occupation of the plaintiff's tenants; and the only question in dispute is, as to the right to the windows in question. The premises in the occupation of plaintiff's tenants had been rebuilt about eighteen or nineteen years before the rebuilding of the defendant's premises, and none of the identical windows in respect of which the action was brought had existed for twenty years before the obstruction complained of. In the premises which previously occupied the site of the plaintiff's present premises there were the same number of stories as in the present premises, and there were windows on the ground floor, first floor, and second floor, which had existed for a period considerably exceeding twenty years; but on rebuilding the plaintiff's premises some of the windows were enlarged, and the situations of others were changed, and no one of the present windows was in all respects identical in point of size and situation with any one of the previously existing old windows. The defendant contended that by these alterations, the nature of which is hereafter specified, the ancient rights had been lost, and that no new rights had been acquired, in consequence of the period of enjoyment of the present windows falling short of twenty years, and that, therefore, he was entitled to a verdict upon the second plea, which denied the rights alleged in the declaration, and this is the point for consideration of the Court. The plan which accompanies this case, and which it is agreed may be referred to by the Court, represents the premises in the occupation of the plaintiff's tenants, and the windows in question which look into the court or passage before mentioned. The windows to which the evidence of the trial was directed, and to which it is material to direct the attention of the Court, were those numbered in the plan from one to seven inclusive, all of which are in the premises occupied by Mr. Booth Eddison; and also the windows, eight to twelve inclusive, which light the warehouse, counting-house, and premises in the occupation of Mr. George Shelton, and all of which were in a greater or less degree darkened and obstructed by the rebuilding and alteration of the defendant's premises. The windows, Nos. 1, 4, and 5, look up the yard towards the north; the windows, Nos. 11 and 12, look down the yard towards the south; all the other windows look into the yard towards the east. When the premises occupied by Mr. Booth Eddison were rebuilt, the new building was made nine or ten feet higher than the old one, and height of the rooms of all the floors was raised, and, as a consequence of this alteration, the windows in all the floors were all made and placed somewhat higher than they were in the old premises, and other changes were made as hereinafter particularly mentioned. On the ground-floor the window No. 1 was in the same situation as an old window previously existing there, except that the new window was made about four inches narrower and about one foot higher than the old one, it being from the same elevation as the old window. With respect to the window No. 2, the wall in which it was made stood in the same situation as the present wall; but there were two windows previously lighting the room now lighted by No. 2. These old windows were narrower windows than the present window, and were separated from each other by about eighteen inches of wall; the present window occupies the situation of this intervening piece of wall, and a part of the situation of each of the old windows; but the outer sides of the old windows extended farther towards the north and south respectively than the present window. The cill of the present window is at the same elevation from the ground as the cills of the former windows, but the top of the present window is about a foot higher than the top of the old windows. The room which is lighted by No. 2, is now a breakfast parlour and library. In the old building it was used as a counting-house. With respect to the window No. 3, the wall on which it is placed stands in the same situation as the old wall, and the present window, to the extent of about one-third of its dimensions, occupies the same situation as part of an ancient window in the premises building; the cill is at the same elevation, but the top of the present window has been raised so as to be about a foot higher than the top of the old window in that situation, the space occupied by the remaining two-thirds of the present window was occupied by part of a brick wall in the old building. The room now lighted by this window is used as a surgery. In the old premises there were two rooms in the same situation—a backing room and a pantry, each lighted by a separate window, and at the time of the alteration one of these old windows was stopped up. With respect to the windows Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7, they occupy nearly the same positions as four ancient windows previously existing in the former premises, but in consequence of the raising of the floors of the present building, the cills and tops of the present first floor windows are higher than those of the previous windows, but the greater portion of each of the present windows is in the same situation as the corresponding old windows, and the use made of the rooms and places lighted by these windows is substantially the same in the new as it was in the old premises. With respect to the windows to the plaintiff's warehouse and premises, in the occupation of Mr. George Shelton, the windows Nos. 8, 9, and 10 occupy nearly the same situations as three ancient windows previously existing in the former premises, except that in consequence of the floors having been raised in height the cills and the tops of the present windows are higher than the cills and tops of the old windows, but the greater portion of each of the present windows is in the same situation as the corresponding old windows on the second floor, and the rooms lighted by the present and former windows were used for the same purposes. With respect to the remaining windows, Nos. 11 and 12, which look down the yard towards the south, the wall and building in which these two windows are placed, was, at the time of the rebuilding of the premises, raised and brought forwards towards the south wall. The windows 11 and 12 were placed in the new wall so brought forward as aforesaid, in pretty nearly the same situation which previously lighted the staircase of the old building, but in consequence of the wall and building on which the staircase stands having been so brought forward, no part of the present windows occupies any part of the situation of the old staircase windows. And in consequence of this part of the building having been brought forward, the windows of the warehouse and counting-house, Nos. 8, 9, and 10, and also the windows of Mr. Eddison's surgery and bed-room over it, Nos. 3 and 7, were deprived of some of the light which had previously been enjoyed by the windows that formerly stood in similar situations in the old premises.

The rebuilding of the plaintiff's premises was completed in or shortly after the month of October, 1831, and the several lights had been enjoyed in their altered state without interruption until about the months of August and September, 1850, when the defendant's obstructions took place.

The question for the consideration of the Court is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages in the present action in respect of the obstruction of all or any, and which of the windows in question, and the verdict is to be entered accordingly. The Court to have the power of determining any question of fact arising from the case, and which (but for this power) they might consider proper to be submitted to a jury.

The pleadings in the action to be referred to, if necessary, as a part of the case.

The case was argued on Jan. 27 and 28 by Hayes (Macaulay with him) for the plaintiff.

Mellor (Humfrey with him) for the defendant.

The argument for the plaintiff in substance was, that at least so far as the existing windows were identical with the old windows the right of the plaintiff remained the same, and that he was entitled to succeed if that right had been obstructed. The argument for the defendant was that the alteration of the plaintiff's house had increased the burden upon the servient tenement by depriving it of the privacy which it previously enjoyed; and that as the plaintiff's encroachment had been so made, that the defendant could not obstruct the excess without also obstructing the privileged parts of the windows, the plaintiff must take the consequence. It was argued in reply that if the defendant could legally set up such an excuse, it ought to have been specially pleaded.

The following authorities were cited: Blanchard v. Bridges, 4 Ad. & Ell. 176; Luttrell's case, 4 Rep. 87 a; Dougal v. Wilson (dict. per Wilmot, C.J.), 2 Saund. 175, n; Cotterell v. Griffiths, 4 Esp. 69; Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 322; Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 80; Garritt v. Sharp, 3 Ad. & Ell. 325; Thomas v. Thomas, 5 Tyr. 804; Gale on Easements, 373; Perk. Cur. adv. vult.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—We are of opinion that this action is not maintainable; but we do not proceed upon the ground that the plaintiff, by the alteration in his windows, had entirely lost the right which he had before enjoyed of having light and air through such portions of the present windows as formed portions of the ancient windows before the alteration; and we must be understood as not meaning to overturn any of the cases on which the plaintiff's counsel have relied. But the plaintiff has acquired nothing more in addition to that former right; and if by the alterations which he has made he has exceeded the limits of that right, and has put himself in such a position, that the excess cannot be obstructed by the defendant in the exercise of his lawful rights on his own land, without at the same time obstructing the former right of the plaintiff, he has only himself to blame for the existence of such state of things, and must be considered to lose the former right which he had, at all events until he shall, by himself doing away with the excess and restoring his windows to their former state, throw upon the defendant the necessity of so arranging his buildings as not to interfere with the admitted right. The material facts proved appear to be, that the plaintiff and defendant have houses on opposite sides of the same court, which is the private property and in the exclusive occupation of the plaintiff; that the plaintiff, about eighteen or nineteen years ago, rebuilt his house, the outward wall being on the old foundation; that he raised it a story higher, putting windows into the new story and altering the dimensions of all the windows in the lower stories, although they still embraced portions of the space occupied by the old windows; that the defendant, in the year 1850, rebuilt his house, and raised it a story, to about the same elevation as the plaintiff's; that thereby he obstructed the new windows in the upper story of the plaintiff's house; that without building a wall similar to that of the wall of the defendant's new house, the defendant could not have prevented the plaintiff from enjoying the free use of the new windows in the upper story of the plaintiff's new house, and that this wall so raised to its present height darkened and obstructed all the windows in the lower stories of the plaintiff's house. The defendant clearly had the same right to raise his house in 1850 as he would have had immediately after the plaintiff's house was raised, although he would have had no such right after the plaintiff's new windows in his new story had enjoyed the free access to light and air for twenty years. Would not the defendant have been justified, upon the raising of the plaintiff's house, in raising a wall on his own foundation to obstruct these new windows? Confessedly, the defendant could not have maintained any action for placing the windows there, whereby his house was overlooked and his privacy was encroached upon, and after an uninterrupted enjoyment of twenty years, the plaintiff would have had the same easement for these new windows as he had for the old, upon the supposition (it is said), that after such an enjoyment, the law would presume a grant from the defendant; but there seems to be no doubt that the defendant, if he did not commit any trespass, was at liberty so to interrupt the enjoyment as to rebut such a presumption. This appears to have been all that the defendant did in the year 1850, and this is the alleged grievance for which the present action is brought. The consequence is, that the windows in the lower story of the plaintiff's house are darkened, but the primary cause of this misfortune is the plaintiff's own act in raising his house and opening new windows in it which have acquired no privilege. Can he then complain of the natural consequences of his own act? We by no means say, that where the owner of a house alters the dimensions of an ancient window in it, he may in no case maintain an action for that which is an obstruction to the window in its new state, and would have been an obstruction to it in its former state. This would be contrary to a long series of decisions, beginning with Luttrell's case, reported by Lord Coke. If the wall in which the window is be on the extremity of the owner's land, and the window is enlarged at the lower part of it, the owner of the adjoining land could easily obstruct the unprivileged part of the window, and would not be justified in building a wall which would obstruct the whole. But there was no mode of merely obstructing the new and unprivileged windows, and the unprivileged portions of the windows in the lower stories in this case, and the obstruction of the privileged portions of these windows is a necessary consequence of the obstruction of the unprivileged portions of them and of the new windows in the additional story. It has been suggested that this argument is not open to the defendant, either under the plea of not guilty, or the plea traversing the alleged right, and that supposing it to be a good defence, the defendant ought to have confessed and avoided, admitting the obstruction, and excusing or justifying it by reason of the new windows opened by the plaintiff. The case of Frankum v. Lord Falmouth, 2 A. & E. 452, establishes this, that the plea of not guilty, under the new rules, puts in issue only the facts alleged to have been wrongfully done, and not the wrongfulness of that fact; and though the contention there was that the plea did deny the wrongfulness of the fact complained of, and so incidentally denied the right asserted by the plaintiff, which is not the precise contention made in the present case, yet we are of opinion that the new rules, and that case in effect shew that the plea of not guilty denies only the fact complained of, and not its nature; and as in this case the obstruction was clearly proved to the existing windows, the issue of not guilty must be found for the plaintiff as to the plea traversing the plaintiff's alleged right. We have considered much whether the defendant ought not to have pleaded specially, that though some right did exist, yet that the plaintiff had committed a great excess in the exercise of that right, and that it was impossible to obstruct his excess without at the same time obstructing the admitted right. But we are of opinion that such a plea would after all be no more than an argumentative denial of the alleged right; for, as we have already observed in the outset, the plaintiff has by his own acts of excess at all events suspended, at least for a time, his former right, if he has not actually wholly destroyed it. In holding that the action is not maintainable, we are glad to think that this decision is not likely to lead to any practical injustice or hardship, as it only gives a means of preventing an usurpation from ripening into a right; and when one of two neighbours occupying houses near each other raises his house a story, he empowers the other to do the same at any time within twenty years. We direct the verdict to stand for the plaintiff on the plea of not guilty; and to be entered for the defendant on the plea denying the right.

POWLETT (Earl) v. LEE.

Execution—Fi. fa.—Goods demised.

Furniture let to a tenant cannot be seized under an execution against the lessors.

This was an interpleader, issued to try whether the furniture in the house, 33, Dover-street, was liable to a writ of fi. fa. issued on a judgment obtained by the present defendant against the Earl of Mexborough.

Byles, Serjt. in opening the case for the plaintiff, stated that the house and furniture in question were settled, prior to the marriage of Lord Pollington in 1812, on the Earl of Mexborough for life, remainder to Lord Pollington. Subsequently a person of the name of Berry obtained a judgment against Lord Mexborough, and levied the amount on the furniture, which was then sold by the sheriff, by bill of sale, to Mr. Lightfoot, who bought Lord Mexborough's remaining interest in it also. The Dowager Lady Hardwicke then purchased Lightfoot's interest, and thus became possessed of Lord Mexborough's life interest in the furniture. In February, 1850, an agreement for a lease of the house and furniture for three years, at a rent of 630*l.* a year, was executed by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was occupying under it when the present defendant caused the furniture to be seized.

The plaintiff's lease and occupation only were proved.

Byles, Serjt. contended that whatever might be the title to the property, it was protected from execution by the lease, citing Izod v. Lamb, 1 Cromp. & Jer. 35, as directly in point.

Wilkins, Serjt. and Petersdorff contended that upon this evidence the defendant was entitled to a verdict, as the plaintiff had not shewn any title to the furniture.

JERVIS, C.J.—I can see no difference between the present case and the case cited, and, therefore, upon the authority of that case, I shall direct a verdict for the plaintiff. Verdict for the plaintiff.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by DAVID CATO MACRAE, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, March 4.

(Before Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS.)

Re DANIEL EDWARD FLYNN.

Concealment of property—Rehearing.

An adjudication having been made on false evidence, property having been concealed by the insolvent, the Court will order the adjudication and discharge to be annulled, and make a new adjudication:

Held also, that upon a rehearing the insolvent himself may be examined to disprove his former statement respecting his property.

Cooke, upon affidavit of facts that had transpired since the hearing of this insolvent, which took place on the 4th of November, 1851, when he was remanded under the discretionary clause for six months, obtained the following rule:—"Whereas the adjudication was made in the matter of the said petition on or about the 4th day of November, 1851, and whereas it is represented to the Court by Edward Firth, in the affidavit of the said Edward Firth now read and filed in the court, that the said adjudication was made on false evidence, or otherwise improperly made or fraudulently obtained; it is ordered that the said D. E. Flynn, upon notice of this rule to be given to him, shall, on the 6th day of March instant, peremptorily shew cause why the insolvent debtor should not upon due notice to be given to such persons, and in such manner as the said Court shall direct, be brought up and attend, and the said matter be reheard before the said Court, and all things be done thereupon in pursuance of the provisions of the statute in that behalf."

On the 6th of March the rule was made absolute, and the insolvent ordered to be brought up on the 13th of March, with four days' notice to insolvent.

Saturday, March 13.—Cooke, to-day, appeared to oppose on behalf of Mr. Frith, a creditor, who, after the insolvent's hearing in November last, sought to enforce the judgment of the Court by bringing an action, to which the insolvent put in bail, and thus compelled Mr. Frith to proceed to judgment, which he obtained in December, and thereupon issued a fi. fa. upon enforcing which a large quantity of property was discovered upon the insolvent's premises. Upon this discovery the insolvent procured a creditor to be appointed assignee, who took possession of the property for the general benefit of the estate, and it was in consequence of this concealment of property that the present proceedings were adopted. The facts of the case were admitted by the insolvent, and the only question was the amount of punishment to be awarded for so grievous an offence.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS asked whether the insolvent had been instrumental in the ultimate restitution of the property to his creditors, as in a case where so heavy a charge was made it was desirable to know whether there existed a locus pœnitentiæ for the insolvent.

Cooke replied, that the insolvent had not been at all instrumental in the discovery of the property.

Sargood, for the insolvent, said his instructions were precisely the contrary.

Dennis Quinlan was then called by Cooke.—The witness stated, that he was an apprentice to the insolvent, and that while his master was in prison he moved some goods by his mistress's directions.

A discussion occurred between the learned counsel, which resulted in the removal of the property since discovered being taken as admitted, and the inquiry being directed to other property not found or mentioned by the insolvent.

Quinlan then stated, that he took three large bundles to the insolvent in prison on three several occasions. The bundles contained canvas, waistcoats, cottons, alpaca coats, unmade, &c. of the value he believed of 20*l*. or 30*l*. He also took a couch, a table, and six chairs to a French polisher's in Holborn. He also took three bundles of cord trousers to another place. The value of each of these bundles was about 2*l*. The sheriff was in possession at the suit of Mr. Frith at the time of these removals, which were all made by direction of the insolvent's wife, himself being then in prison. The removals were effected while the sheriff's man was out of the way. Some things were found by the officer under the bed.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS asked how it was that the broker of this court had not found the property if it was on the insolvent's premises?

Cooke said, the property had been removed from Blackfriars-road to a cottage at Wandsworth, and brought back after the insolvent's hearing in this court. The learned counsel was proceeding to examine the insolvent, when Sargood objected, upon the ground that the majority of the Court had decided against such a practice. The insolvent stood in a sufficient predicament without adding to it by seeking to make him convict himself of other offences.

Cooke replied that the practice of not examining an insolvent upon a re-hearing had long been given up, and it was now held that a re-hearing was a perfect re-hearing on all points.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS decided that the creditor was entitled to examine the insolvent.

The insolvent, in reply to Mr. Cooke, said that after he was in prison he made arrangements with his detaining creditor for his discharge, and paid him 12*l*. on that account. He gave bail in Mr. Frith's action, but was only out of prison three days when he was again arrested. All the goods which were brought to him in prison by Quinlan he had left behind him when he went out in charge of a fellow prisoner, from whom they had been obtained by means of a forged order in his (insolvent's) name. The goods that had been seized were at Wandsworth when the broker of this court went to Blackfriars-road, and were brought back afterwards.

Mr. Wilson was called by Sargood.—He stated that he was the assignee appointed by this Court on the 20th of December. He first heard of the execution by Mr. Frith from a neighbour of the insolvent's, and afterwards from the insolvent's attorney, by whose advice witness gave notice to the sheriff not to part with the goods. Since then the insolvent had done all he could to assist the assignees.

In answer to Cooke, the witness said that insolvent had never informed him about the bundles sent to him in prison, nor about the things sent to the French polisher's. The goods which had been seized had been sold by auction for 130*l*. odd.

Cooke then addressed the Court, and submitted this was a most serious proceeding both for the insolvent and for public justice. The insolvent having been remanded by this Court, Mr. Frith wished to give effect to that judgment, and accordingly commenced an action, to which the insolvent put in bail, and thus compelled the creditor to go on to judgment, by which accident alone the discovery of this large amount of secreted property had been made. No credit was due to the insolvent for its restitution to the creditors, and therefore so flagrant a case of fraud and perjury demanded at the hands of the Court a signal punishment.

Sargood admitted that the insolvent was guilty of both fraud and perjury, but whatever might be the opinion of the Court in a moral point of view, the concealment of property was the only matter which it could deal with; as the other offence, that of perjury, was a distinct offence, for which the insolvent might hereafter be liable before another tribunal. The insolvent had latterly done all he could to remedy the wrong originally inflicted, and the only person who now complained was the creditor who alone had suffered by the insolvent's attempt to remedy his wrong. The insolvent could offer no merits except that of remorse, and his case must be left to the merciful consideration of the Court.

Mr. Commissioner PHILLIPS said this was the first case of the kind that had come before him, and he was happy to say such cases were very rare indeed. The facts here were indisputable, and the course taken by the insolvent's counsel was simply one of mitigation, calling upon the Court to interpose its mercy in the remand which he admitted it must pronounce upon the insolvent. He (the learned Commissioner) hoped that not only in this, but in every case that came before him, he should not forget that great and almost divine quality; but he was bound to take care so to guard his own feeling that mercy to an individual might not be injustice to society. In this case he thought the original offence had been greatly aggravated by the perjury employed to conceal it. Substantially, as an offence, this Court would not deal with that perjury, as it was undoubtedly a matter for which the man was liable to indictment elsewhere, although he hoped, after the punishment the insolvent had undergone, and would still undergo from this Court, no creditor would think it necessary to proceed against the insolvent upon that ground. With respect to the case of mitigation that had been set up, it was impossible for the Court to avoid seeing that the motive which actuated the insolvent was rather personal vindictiveness against Mr. Frith than a [illegible] the benefit of the creditors. He had only [illegible] the realisation of the property when it had been discovered and he could no longer conceal it, and up to that very day the assignee, who appeared kindly disposed towards the insolvent, had not been [illegible] by him respecting any of the other property which had been removed from his house. It was true that the insolvent had given some assistance to Mr. Wilson, the assignee, although the motive was doubtful. Taking the case as an original hearing, and dealing with it on account of the concealment of property, the following order was made by the Court, under the 77th section:—"Upon re-hearing the matters of the schedule of the said insolvent debtor, and upon examination made into the same, and upon the said insolvent debtor swearing to the truth of the same, it is ordered, that the adjudication made in the [illegible] said insolvent debtor on the 4th day of November, 1851, and the order made thereupon, shall be, and the same is hereby, annulled. And forasmuch as it appears to the said Commissioner that the said insolvent debtor has fraudulently, with intent to diminish the sum to be divided amongst his creditors, concealed part of his property, it is adjudged and ordered that the said insolvent debtor shall be discharged from custody and entitled to the benefit of the said Act as to the several debts, &c. so soon as the said insolvent debtor shall have been in custody at the suit of one or more of the several persons above mentioned for a period of twelve calendar months, to be calculated from the 18th of September, 1851, being the time of making such vesting order as aforesaid."

The following indorsement was made upon the record (the schedule):—

"13th March, 1852,—The matter of the schedule reheard, and original adjudication and order annulled, and the insolvent remanded back to custody, and adjudged and ordered to be—

"Entitled, so soon as he shall have been in custody at the suit of some one or more of his creditors for the period of twelve calendar months from the date of vesting order, he having fraudulently, with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors, concealed part of his property."

Will Construction—Meaning of word "Appurtenances," and "Appurtenances thereunto belonging."

This was an action to try the right to some plots of ground claimed by the lessor of the plaintiff, as representing the widow and residuary devisee of the testator.

In the will were the following devises, out of the words of which the dispute arose:—"I give and devise to my sister, M. for ever, the following five houses and their appurtenances, situate at Rachub, in the parish of Llanllechid, namely, the houses now occupied by A. B. C. D. E. respectively." and, "I devise to E. the daughter of my late sister Margaret, the house and appurtenances thereunto belonging where she dwells in, and which her husband now occupies under me."

On the part of the lessors of the plaintiff, Welsby, with whom was Wilkin, contended that the plots of ground in question went to the residuary devisee, as not otherwise disposed of in the will of the testator.

Beavan, on the part of the defendant Hughes, and Coxon on the part of defendant Griffiths, contended that the plots of ground in question passed to the devisees of the houses, as included in the word appurtenances.

It appeared on the evidence that the testator had purchased a piece of land, of which these plots were part, subsequently to the time when he became possessed of the land on which the houses stood; that all the houses but one were built at the time of the purchase of the piece of land; that the testator, after the purchase, allotted small plots of this land to the occupiers of the houses already built, and also a plot to a house which he built [illegible]quently. The plots of ground allotted were detached from the houses, with the exception of one which immediately adjoined. No rent appeared to have been paid for these plots before the death of the testator. It was now contended, on the part of the lessors of the plaintiff, that these plots were allotted to the tenants of the houses to be held by them for a short time rent free, on condition that they brought them into cultivation; but afterwards to be held subject to a separate rent, and that they did not, therefore, come within the meaning of the word "appurtenances." On the other side it was contended that they were allotted as gardens going with the houses, and would thus pass under the word "appurtenances" to the devisees of the houses. A verdict was taken for defendants, with leave to move to enter it for the lessors of the plaintiff.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

IN LUNACY.
(Before Lord ST. LEONARD'S.)
Saturday, March 20.
Re BURRIDGE.

An application for the sale of a reversion to which a lunatic was entitled, subject to a life interest, refused, where it appeared that the sale was required for the payment of the costs of the commission, and not for the purpose of benefiting the lunatic.

This was a petition praying for the sale of a reversion to which the lunatic was entitled on the death of a tenant for life, in a sum of 256*l.* a year, for the purpose of paying the costs of the commission and other small sums stated to have been paid on the lunatic's account. It appeared that the only other property of the lunatic consisted of a small freehold cottage, of the annual value of 4*l.* The father of the lunatic was the person who sued out the commission, and asked that the reversion might be sold to pay the costs, and also certain other sums which had been expended by him towards the maintenance of his son. The Master refused to sanction the sale of the reversion. The father became bankrupt, and his creditors refused to prosecute the claim against the lunatic's estate. The costs of the commission amounted to 400*l.* or thereabouts. The lunatic was in the workhouse, with an allowance of 2s. 3d. a day, which was accumulating as a charge upon his estate.

Batten appeared for the petitioner.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I refuse the prayer of the petition, as I will all others where the interest of the lunatic has not been studied. The costs of this commission have been incurred very recklessly, and I am very dissatisfied with the mode in which the commission has been prosecuted. It is quite manifest that the proceedings have not been instituted with any view to the benefit of the unfortunate lunatic, but for the sole purpose of getting his property into the hands of other parties. The enormous sum of 400*l.* has been incurred in costs at a time when it was well known that the whole of the property that the lunatic had in his possession was 4*l.* a-year. The result is, he is allowed to go to the workhouse; and then the Court is asked to sell his reversion in order to pay these costs and a few other trifling sums for maintenance. The only doubt whatever that I entertain is in respect to these sums, which have been advanced by a relative for the maintenance of the lunatic; but, notwithstanding that it is proper that they should be repaid, the Court will not be justified in ordering the sale of the reversion on that account. As to the question of costs, there is nothing whatever to induce the Court to order a sale for their payment. The object of a commission ought to be to protect the lunatic and provide for his sustenance and comfort, but have the present proceedings tended to such an object? The unfortunate lunatic has been sent to the workhouse on an allowance of 2s. 3d. a-day, where he remains in an abject and degraded state, neglected by every one, while an application is made to sell his reversionary property for the payment of 400*l.* costs and a few other debts, leaving a very poor chance of anything being saved from the wreck for his own benefit. I will not sanction any such proceeding, and the party petitioning, if he has any claim for costs, must wait until the reversion falls in, for the Court will not take any step for expediting their payment. The object of the commission was to get hold of this reversion, but I will take care that those views shall be defeated, and in the meantime I will see whether something cannot be done for improving the condition of the lunatic, and at the same time to take care of his property. I will see that inquiries are made to that effect, and will ascertain whether arrangements cannot be effected to remove the lunatic from the workhouse, and place him in a lunatic asylum, where he will receive proper care and nourishment; in the meantime I will make no order on the petition.

Ex parte applications—Strict proof.

In ex parte applications seeking to affect the ownership of property, the strictest proof of title will be required, and the Bar are requested to assist the Court by drawing its attention to any authorities bearing upon the point.

This was a petition praying that a sum of 800*l.* which was standing in the name of a lunatic trustee, might be paid to the petitioner.

On the trustee becoming lunatic, the petitioner paid out of his own moneys 800*l.* and divided it among the cestuis que trust, who executed a release of the trust-fund, and now applied for its transfer from the lunatic to himself. It appeared that some of the cestuis que trust were married women, but there was no evidence to shew that there had not been any settlement of their shares on their marriage.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It behoves me, as guardian of the property of the lunatic, to exercise the greatest care before parting with it. Before making orders affecting the property of lunatics on ex parte applications I shall require to be well satisfied that the interests of the lunatics will not be compromised by them, and therefore shall require in such cases the strictest evidence of title. In these cases I sit to exercise a most important jurisdiction, and that, too, in the absence of the parties whose rights are sought to be affected, and in these cases a grave responsibility rests with counsel as to the truth of the statements in the petitions. I must beg the Bar to understand that they must assist the judge by directing his attention to any authorities that may be in point, and to shew that the parties claiming are strictly entitled to what they ask. The present case is an extraordinary one,—a person has parted with 800*l.* out of his own pocket to pay parties who are entitled to a sum of stock of which the lunatic is trustee, and the Court, before making an order for the transfer of the stock, must look carefully into the circumstances of the case. With that view the petition must stand over.

In such cases I shall expect strict proof. You may amend your petition; but I will make an order that the costs of this day's attendance shall not be allowed.

DALE'S CASE.

Provisional committeeman accepting shares—Contributory—Order for call—Report of Master—Practice.

The usual order for the winding-up of a company provisionally registered, but of which there had been no deed of settlement, having been obtained, the Master, by a report, found, first, that the only contributories consisted of a certain number of persons, members of the provisional and managing committees, who had agreed to take the same number of shares; secondly, that by a call which he had already made, and by other payments, nearly the whole of the expenses had been discharged by the contributories in unequal proportions; and, thirdly, that for the purpose of paying outstanding liabilities, adjusting the claims of the contributories, and for raising the costs of the winding up, a certain sum was necessary to be raised, by means of a call of a certain amount upon each of the contributories then directed to be made, each of the contributories who had already made any payment by way of contribution to the said expenses or otherwise, having credit given to him for the amount so paid by him against such call. And the Master, by an order of the same date as the report, made an order for the call.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the Master was right in making the call, and that it was unimportant whether the liabilities in respect of which the call was made were liquidated or unliquidated. Nor was it a valid objection that if all the contributories had paid the call more money would be raised than what was wanted to pay the sums mentioned in the report.

Held, also, although the Master's order for a call was made on the same day as the report, that as the appellant had on the previous hearing of the motion, which stood over for that purpose, liberty to question the accuracy of the report, which he failed in doing, no valid objection to the call could be raised on that ground.

This motion came on by way of appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, under the following circumstances:—In 1845 the company or association was formed and provisionally registered, but no deed or settlement was ever executed. On the 3rd of November, 1849, the common order to wind up its affairs was obtained. On the 30th July, 1851, the Master made the following report:—"In pursuance of the order of the Court made in this matter, dated the 3rd November, 1849, whereby it was referred to me to wind up the affairs of this company, I have proceeded with the said reference, and have settled on the list of contributories the following persons as contributories, being members of the provisional and managing committees with their own consent, and having agreed to take one or more shares, upon such share or shares being allotted to them according to the provisions of the said company, and to each of whom twenty-five shares were allotted, that is to say (the report here gave the names of forty persons, including Mr. Dale); and on the 12th July, 1850, I made a call of 120*l.* on each of the said contributories so settled on the list as aforesaid, which produced 858*l.* 14s. 9d. of which 79*l.* 16s. were applied to the payment of a claim upon the company; 188*l.* 14s. were applied in payment of Cottle's costs, ordered by the House of Lords to be paid by the official manager; and 556*l.* 2s. 11d. were applied in part payment of expenses of winding up, leaving balance of 34*l.* 1s. 10d. in the hands of the official manager. And I find from the books and papers of the company, and the report of the official manager, that there were expenses incurred and debts contracted by the managing committee in printing, advertising, secretary's and clerks' salaries, stationery, law charges, the preparation of the surveys, plans, and sections, and all other acts necessary to be done in the establishment of this company, and for the purpose of obtaining an Act of Parliament for making the railway, for the formation whereof this company was provisionally registered, to the amount of 11,243*l.* 2s. 5d. the particulars whereof are set forth in the schedule of this my report, with the purposes for which such expenses were incurred; and I find from the books of the said company, and the said report of the official manager, that these expenses have been discharged by contributories in unequal proportions, with the exception of 216*l.* 0s. 8d. still remaining unpaid, as stated in the said report. And I find that there have been costs ordered by the Court to be paid by the official manager, and which are already taxed, amounting to the sum of 237*l.* 6s. 4d. of which the sum of 188*l.* 14s. has been paid by the official manager as aforesaid, leaving 48*l.* 6s. 4d. still remaining unpaid; and that in the winding up of the affairs of this company the official manager has, by himself and his solicitor, expended large sums of money, and properly incurred costs, which, together with the costs so ordered to be paid, I estimate will amount to 1,248*l.* 6s. 4d. and upwards; and the said official manager has proposed to me, that for the purpose of paying outstanding liabilities, and adjusting the claims of the contributories, and for raising the sum of 1,248*l.* 6s. 4d. for the costs of the winding up, a call should be made of 60*l.* on each of the said contributories so settled on the list as aforesaid. And I am of opinion and find, that the sum of 5,227*l.* 3s. being that part of the expenses incurred between the 1st of November, 1845, being the date of the consent to act as provisional committee-men, and take one or more shares, signed by each of the said contributories, as aforesaid; and the 1st of December, 1845, being the day on which the said managing committee decided on suspending all expenses, were expenses necessarily incurred in preparing to launch the common concern, in which the said several contributories had engaged; and I find that each of the said several contributories so settled on the list, as aforesaid, is legally liable to bear and pay his rateable proportion of the said necessary expenses of the committee in preparing to launch the common concern, and also to bear and pay his rateable proportion of the costs incurred in winding up this company; and I am of opinion that it is necessary and proper to raise the said sum of 5,227*l.* 3s. being the amount of the expenses incurred, as aforesaid, between the 1st of November and the 1st of December, 1845, and also the said sum of 1,248*l.* 6s. 4d. for the said costs, by means of a call of 60*l.* upon each of the several before-mentioned contributories—each of the several contributories, who has already made any payment by way of contribution to the said expenses, or otherwise, having credit given him for the amount so paid by him against such call; and I direct an order for the call of 60*l.* to issue against each of such several contributories upon whom notice of the intended call has been served, as appears by the affidavit of William Lowther, clerk to the official manager. Sworn before me on the 30th of July instant." The Master, on the same day (30th of July, 1851) made an order for a call in the following term I, William Brougham, esq. of the High Court of Chancery, charged with the winding up of this company, do peremptorily order that a call of 60*l.* be made on all the contributories of this company, whose names are included in the list of contributories filed by the official manager, and who are settled on such list by me as provisional committeemen duly registered as such with their own consent, and who, having agreed to take one or more shares in the said company, upon such share or shares being allotted to them according to the provisions of the said company. And I do peremptorily order each of such contributories as aforesaid, on the 28th day of August next, &c. to pay to the official manager at, &c. the balance, if any, which will be due to him, after debiting his account in the company's books with such call." On the 16th of December, 1851, a motion was made on behalf of Mr. Dale before Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, that this order for a call might, so far as regarded himself, be discharged or varied, but his Honour refused to grant the motion, on the ground that as the order for the call depended upon the report, and the report not having been either discharged or questioned, and must therefore be assumed to be right, the order for a call which was consequent upon it ought not to be disturbed. (See 18 Law T. Rep. 206.) This motion, by way of appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, was first made before their lordships on the 31st of January, 1852, when it was ordered to stand over, with liberty to Mr. Dale to make such application to the Master as he might be advised, and with liberty to any party to apply. An application accordingly having been made on behalf of Mr. Dale to the Master, the Master refused to alter the report, the correctness of which was then questioned, or in any way to interfere with or modify the order for a call. The motion by way of appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley now came on to be heard before their lordships.

Glasse and Greene, for Mr. Dale, contended that the Master had no power to make what is called a report; that it was a report not to the Court, but to the Master himself. That the appellant had had no opportunity of questioning the report, the order for a call having been made by the Master on the same day as he had made the report. That the amount of debts and costs to which the appellant was found liable by the report was not shewn to be the proper amount, and that the Master ought not therefore to have ordered a call to be made upon the appellant. They cited Upfill's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 395; Hunter's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 435.

Bethell and Roxburgh, for the official manager, contended that the Master had full power to make the report and the order founded upon it. Moreover, as the appellant had not impeached the report, as he might have done, either by leave of the Court under the 99th section of the Winding-up Act of 1848, or before the Master, under the liberty given by the order of the 31st of January, 1852, he must be bound by such report if (as was the case) his liability appeared upon the face of it. That although the call, together with the previous call of 120*l.* would, in case all the contributories should pay, be more than sufficient to discharge the sums mentioned in the report, nevertheless the Master had not exceeded the powers conferred upon him by the 83rd section of the Winding-up Act of 1848, and the 28th section of the Winding-up Act of 1849, by which sections the Master was authorised to take into consideration, in fixing the amount of the call, the probability that some of the contributories might not pay it. That the Master had not, by his proceedings, come into conflict with Upfill's case or Hunter's case.

Glasse, in reply, said, that an order similar to that made in Ex parte Hall, re The North of England Banking Company, 1 Mac. & Gord. 307, ought to be made.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—We are both of opinion that the decision of the Master is perfectly right. The Master's order proceeds upon a preceding report of even date, and no doubt some anomaly and difficulty might exist in dealing with that in point of form, because what Mr. Roxburgh says is perfectly true:—"If the parties object to the order because the foundation of the order had proceeded upon an error in point of fact, on the supposition that the parties were liable to something for which they were not liable, that which ought to be objected to would be the foundation, and not the order"—the report, and not the order; and the report being in this case concurrent with the order of the same date, and being, therefore, in all probability, a document to which the parties affected by the order never had access, there is, in point of form some difficulty, or there might have been. But I repeat what I have said more than once in the course of the argument, that is a difficulty which this Court would not listen to for one moment, if the party was damnified by an order proceeding upon a report which he had no practical opportunity of questioning. The circumstance that he made his complaint to the form of the order itself, and complained against the order instead of the report, is a matter that this Court certainly would not have listened to—at least, to the extent of affecting him permanently by that error in point of form. We should have given him an opportunity of questioning the report in some way or other—of letting the substantial merits be decided. We did so—at least, we thought we had done so—by giving the party an opportunity of going before the Master to make any application he might be advised to make; and if he had any means of questioning the accuracy of that which the Master calls, and probably accurately calls, his report—if he had the means of questioning that, by shewing that it was inaccurate, no doubt he would have done so. Not having done so, I think we are bound to assume that that report is substantially accurate as to the demands that are existing against this association or company, or by whatever other name it is to be designated. Then, taking that to be so, what the Master finds, in substance is this,—that the contributories of this company consist now only of forty persons, and that every one of these forty persons is liable to the same amount, each having been liable, because they, on the 1st November, 1845, all agreed, being members of the provisional committee, to take shares, and so rendered themselves liable to the expenses of forming the company thereafter to be incurred. Mr. Dale was one of those parties, and appeared to be—so it was stated, but I do not go on that much—a leading member of the committee. Expenses were incurred between that day and the 1st December following, to the extent of five thousand and odd pounds. The Master finds all that; and therefore, carrying into execution the principle laid down in the House of Lords in Upfill's case (Hutton v. Upfill, 2 H. L. C. 674; 14 Jur. 843), and followed by me—at least, in this sense followed by me in Upfill's case (1 Sim. N.S. 395), that I did not at all question what the House of Lords had done, but shewed only, or attempted to shew, to what extent it did apply, the Master follows out these views, by saying. "What the House of Lords has directed, followed by what the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor has directed, is this,—that I am to ascertain to what extent each and every of the contributories are liable. Having done that, I am to make a call to meet that liability. I do ascertain what is the extent to which the contributories are all equally liable; they are liable to the extent of five thousand and odd pounds, in respect of liabilities incurred at a given period. They are liable to that; they are liable also to the costs of winding up the concern, which is their concern, and their concern exclusively; there is no other contributory, no other liability to be at all wound up." Well, the Master, therefore, says, "As a call must be made to meet these 5,000*l.* together with the costs, I now will do, with regard to the costs, the best that the nature of the thing enables me to do. I cannot tell to a shilling what it will be, but I estimate and make the best account I can; and having made out that account, which is made out with practical accuracy, I find that the whole amount is the sum of 5,000*l.* together with another sum of 1,200*l.*; therefore, to that 5,000*l.* plus the 1,200*l.* the forty are to contribute. Almost all of it has been paid, that is, by means of another call, and, I suppose, payments before any call was made; large sums have been paid on account; but, in order to equalise all this, and to do justice, I now, having made a call of 120*l.* before this time, make a call which, in my judgment and the judgment of the official manager, will meet the case with practical accuracy, a further call of 60*l.*" I think that is all the Master can do, or ought to do. He has no possibility of arriving at a conclusion as to what absolutely, to the fraction of a farthing, these persons will have to pay. This section of the Act clearly shews that the Act did not mean to impose a practical impossibility in point of figures. That is not what he is to do. Having ascertained all the data on which he is to proceed, having ascertained that the parties before him are all equally liable to these outstanding liabilities, so far as there are any outstanding, they are to equalise them among themselves, so far as they are to be liquidated, and are to contribute to the costs. "I make that which, on the best estimate I can come to, will raise the sum which will be necessary." That, I think, is all the Master can do. He seems to me not only not to have come in conflict with my decision in Upfill's case, as was argued by Mr. Glasse, but to have carried into effect the principle I laid down there, and which, until I am set right, I believe to be the correct principle. Neither does he come in conflict with Hunter's case, which simply was this, that the Master has no right, because a man is a contributory, which may mean nothing but that he is liable to 5*l.* to say, "I now rate you, with all the rest of the contributories, to 5,000*l.* costs." That was the principle I laid down in Hunter's case, but which does not touch the present case; for here the Master proceeds upon the data, on which he has come to the conclusion in respect of the liabilities to third persons; whether liquidated or unliquidated is unimportant; because, if liquidated, they have been liquidated in unequal proportions. "The parties liable to this are the forty; the parties liable to the winding up are the forty. The gross sum necessary for liquidating the two will be met by the call, and this call I make." I think the Master was quite right in making it,—that is, the language he has used I think quite correct.

Motion refused, with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 16 and 17, 1851, and Feb. 17, 1852.

SMITH v. MULES.

Partnership—Dissolution.

Three solicitors entered into partnership, each agreeing to give his whole time and attention to the business; each was to communicate to the others on request all instructions relating to the practice: one was to attend to the duties of certain public offices, and take their emoluments in lieu of any other share in the partnership. If either should fail faithfully to observe the articles, or if two of them or either of these two should unduly absent themselves, the others or other might give notice dissolving the partnership. One of the partners absconded, and one of the others gave a notice of dissolution to the other, and served it at the absconding partner's last place of residence: but the notice so served was in the name of one only, and not of the two. The partner who gave the notice filed a bill for a dissolution, and for taking the partnership accounts, and the same was decreed; but the Court considered the notice was deficient as not being by the two: that for the purpose of dissolution the neglect of the partner who had the public offices to attend to must be shewn in that respect: that the neglect to communicate instructions was no cause for a dissolution unless a request had been previously made; but that although informal, the notice was sufficient for a general dissolution of the partnership.

This was a bill filed for the dissolution of a partnership. The plaintiff was Mr. John Bridgman Smith, and the defendants Mr. Philip Mules and Mr. Horace Vibart Mules. The facts undisputed were that in and before January, 1847, Mr. Philip Mules carried on business as a solicitor at Honiton, which had been formerly carried on by the partnership firm of Flood and Mules. The defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, assisted his father, Mr. Philip Mules, in the business, but not as a partner. In the spring of 1847, the plaintiff, Mr. John Bridgman Smith, who had been admitted as an attorney and solicitor in 1846, and was desirous of obtaining an entrance into business as a partner in some established concern, entered into negotiations for a partnership with Mr. Philip Mules. In the course of those negotiations Mr. Philip Mules represented his business as being worth, on an average, 1,500*l.* per annum, in which estimate were included certain offices held by him, and the total income of which amounted to 421*l.* per annum. The offices were those of clerk to the Honiton Turnpike Trust, clerk to the Honiton and Sidmouth Trust, clerk and registrar to the Poor-law Union (which three offices amounted together to 205*l.*), clerk to the Commissioners of Taxes, and several other smaller offices, stewardships, &c. making up the remainder of the 421*l.* Mr. Philip Mules also represented that he was at the time entirely free from any pecuniary embarrassment, and not exposed to any pecuniary liabilities that could affect his credit. The termination of the negotiation was, that in consideration of 2,300*l.* Mr. Smith was admitted to be an equal partner with Mr. Philip Mules in the business, as from the 22nd June, 1847. The defendant, Mr. Horace Vibart Mules was also to be a partner; but, in lieu of any share of the profits of the business, he was to have, so long as all three continued partners, the emoluments arising from the three offices firstly above mentioned. Articles of partnership were drawn up accordingly of that date, by which it was provided that the plaintiff and the defendants were to be partners during the lives of them, and of any two of them. By clause 2, each was to employ all his time in the business of the partnership, and to communicate to the others or other of them, upon request, all instructions and information in any wise relating to the said partnership practice. Clause 5, that Philip Mules was to use his best endeavours to obtain the grant of the three offices above referred to, to be made to the partnership firm; that in the meantime the defendant Horace Vibart Mules should perform all the duties of such three offices at the place of business of the firm, and that such three offices should be partnership property, the defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, to take to himself the emoluments of them for and in lieu of his share of the profits of the partnership business; and so soon as Philip Mules should retire or die, the salaries of the three offices were to be divisible equally. Clause 6 provided that all other offices should be obtained, if possible, in the name of the firm, and that all the emoluments of such offices should belong to the partnership equally. By clause 7 the plaintiff and the defendant, Philip Mules, were to be entitled to the profits in equal shares, after defraying the payments and expenses, &c. aforesaid. By clause 10, each partner, immediately on receiving any moneys, notes, &c. was to make entries duly thereof, and hand them over to the plaintiff as the cashier, who was to make entries in the general cash book, and pay them to the bankers of the concern. By clause 11, the plaintiff was to be cashier, and keep all proper books. By clause 13, it was provided that the said Philip Mules was to be at liberty to assign his share in the partnership to the said Horace Vibart Mules, who, during the continuance of Philip Mules therein, should be considered as a sub-partner merely; and that on the retirement or decease of Philip Mules, the emoluments of the said offices were not to go exclusively to Horace Vibart Mules, but form part of the general partnership profits; and that such partnership profits should then be divided equally between the plaintiff and Horace Vibart Mules. By clause 14, Philip Mules was not to retire for three years, nor then without six months' notice. The plaintiff and Horace Vibart Mules needed only to give three months' notice. By clause 15, in the case of the retirement of Philip or Horace Vibart Mules, or of the death of any of the three partners, the share of the partner so dying or retiring was to accrue to the surviving or continuing partners or partner. If Philip or Horace Vibart Mules retired, they were to give their best endeavours to secure to the continuing partners all the partnership practice, offices, &c.; and in case of such retirement, the retiring partner should not for twenty years thereafter practise as a solicitor or attorney within thirty miles of Honiton. By clause 16, if, contrary to the provisoes and stipulations therein contained, either of the partners should not (not being prevented by illness or unavoidable accident) diligently and faithfully employ himself in carrying out the said partnership practice, or enter into contracts not compatible with the business, or give credit unduly, or release debts, or should knowingly commit or permit any act, &c. whereby the said partnership moneys might be taken into execution, &c. or should not, so often as he receive money, bills, notes, &c. immediately thereupon cause due entries thereof to be made in the proper books of accounts; and should and knowingly and wilfully make such omission, or if the plaintiff or Horace Vibart Mules unduly absented themselves from business, the other partners or partner might leave or give a notice, declaring the partnership to be dissolved, and the partnership should thereupon be dissolved from the day of giving such notice, in the same manner and with the same consequences as if the partnership had been determined by the voluntary retirement of the offending partner. The partnership then commenced under the provisions of the deed. Mr. Philip Mules banked with Messrs. Flood and Lott, who stopped payment in November 1847, and at that time he owed them 5,000*l.* on his private account, besides being liable to 30,000*l.* due to the bankers on the account of the former partnership of Flood and Mules. The assignees having sued for the money due, Mr. Philip Mules absconded in January 1849, and remained ever since abroad. After a time employed in endeavours to effect some arrangement, Mr. Smith, on the 16th of May, 1849, served a notice under clause 16 of the Articles of Partnership on Mr. Horace Vibart Mules, and a copy of the same was left at the late residence of Mr. Philip Mules. The bill was filed on the 12th of June following, and after stating that the plaintiff had faithfully observed the stipulations of the deed on his part, but that neither of the defendants had done so, and in particular that they did not introduce him to the clients of the firm, nor give him information on the subject of the business done, and that both of them transacted business at their private abode; that the defendants received various sums of money on account of the partnership without accounting for the same, or entering them in the books of the firm; that the defendant Horace Vibart Mules had procured some of the offices to be granted to him in his own name, and that he and the other defendant had procured others of the offices to be granted to them in their joint names, but that none of the offices were ever granted in the names of the three partners, and that no part of the money for either of the offices was ever received by the plaintiff; it was prayed that the Court would declare that the partnership subsisting, as in the bill mentioned, between the plaintiff and the defendants was dissolved, as from the 14th of May, 1849; and that the usual partnership accounts might be taken; and that the defendants might be decreed to resign the several offices, which ought, according to the articles of partnership, to be considered as belonging to the partnership; and that the defendants might be restrained from acting as solicitors or attorneys for twenty years from the said 14th of May, 1849, within a distance of thirty miles from Honiton; and that they might be restrained from removing the books of the partnership. The bill was taken pro confesso against the defendant Philip Mules. Horace Vibart Mules by his answer, swore that he had no knowledge of the particulars of the negociation for the partnership, the same having been conducted entirely between the plaintiff and the other defendant: that he never promised to introduce the plaintiff to the clients of the partnership, nor assist him in carrying on the business, save as implied by his having executed the articles of partnership, in which he had joined on the request of his father, a request with which, owing to the peculiar circumstances in which the father was placed, he, the son, was bound to comply; that he had invariably accounted for all moneys received by him to Smith, the plaintiff, whose duty it was to enter them in the partnership books of account; that he, the defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, had not obtained any grant of offices to be made out in his own name, though he had procured, or assisted in procuring, some to be made out in the joint names of his father and himself; that this was because it was impossible to get the plaintiff's name joined in the grant; that he, the defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, was only interested as a sub-partner, and had nothing to do with the partnership business as a principal; that he had tried all means of obtaining an amicable arrangement with the plaintiff; he had had nothing to do with the negotiations previous to the articles, and had received no part of the consideration-money, and therefore he insisted he was not liable to the plaintiff in this suit; he also insisted that as the plaintiff had dissolved the partnership without any sufficient reason as against him, the plaintiff must abide by the consequences of that act. The evidence in the cause was conflicting; that on the part of the plaintiff shewed the grant of some of the offices to the father and son, and one only of an inferior description to the plaintiff; that the son had not attended regularly at the place of business, where he ought to have been; that he had received moneys without accounting for the same, and that he had not introduced the plaintiff to the clients. The cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, and the evidence for the defendant proved that all moneys were entered in the diary at the office, with one exception, and that the plaintiff was, in fact, introduced to, but refused to see, the clients of the firm.

Tuesday, Feb. 17.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—No repayment of the 2,300*l.* the consideration money for the partnership purchase is asked; and the only question is, what are the rights of the parties? Three branches of relief, without impugning the articles of partnership, are sought by this bill: first, a dissolution as from the 14th May, 1849, the date of the notice of dissolution, with the consequent accounts; secondly, an injunction to restrain the defendants, or either of them, from practising within the limits before mentioned; and, thirdly, relief as to the offices. As against the defendant, Philip Mules, a sufficient case for a dissolution, under the 16th clause, is proved to have existed; but it does not follow that because the plaintiff is entitled to dissolve partnership as against Philip he is therefore entitled to dissolve as against Horace. I think the plaintiff is bound to shew a sufficient case against him also, under clause 16. There are several events in which the plaintiff had a right to dissolve the partnership, but there are only two material to be considered; viz. whether the defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, has not diligently and faithfully employed himself, &c. (being the first cause for a dissolution under clause 16); or whether he has or not received moneys without making due entries. I think the first of these branches applies only to the business carried on by the individual partner complained of; and there is no evidence at all shewing any breach of this engagement as regards the offices, the duties of which were performed by Horace Vibart Mules. It was argued for the plaintiff, that he could not be held to have worked diligently and faithfully if he made no communications; but referring to the 2nd clause of the articles, I am of opinion he was not bound to make any communications unless requested to do so by his partners. At all events, a request would be necessary to call this part of the dissolution clause into effect; and there is no evidence of any such request having been made. Neither is the case as to this defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, within the other branch of the dissolution clause, which refers to the receiving moneys without duly entering the same. To come within this branch, it must be shewn not only that there was an omission on the part of the defendant, but that it was an omission knowingly and wilfully deceitful. This, I think, the plaintiff has not sufficiently done. On the contrary, all the sums received by the defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, are, with one exception, entered in his diary; and there is an allegation that any such entries were made at any other time than when it professes to have been made. The excepted item is small in amount, and it would be going too far to stand on it for the purpose of declaring a dissolution. One of the witnesses proves the omission, but he says nothing as to the amount, or the fraudulent intention. I am further of opinion that the partnership was not well dissolved by the notice under clause 16. Whatever might be the effect of such a notice, if the breach complained of in it were established against both the defendants, it clearly was not competent to the plaintiff alone to give such a notice without joining the other partner with himself. It cannot, however, be said that because the partnership has not been properly dissolved under clause 16; it is therefore still subsisting. The defendant, Horace Vibart Mules, has adopted this notice, and treated the dissolution as complete, and the plaintiff cannot go back from his own instrument; there must, therefore, be considered to have been a dissolution as from the 14th of May, 1849, but without the consequences mentioned in clause 16 to follow a dissolution. It remains to decide what is to be done with the offices. Under clause 5 these offices were to belong to the partnership, though the defendant Horace was to receive the emoluments as his share so long as Philip remained in the firm; and on his retirement, or death, they were to belong to the partners equally. If they had been obtained in the joint names of all three of the partners, the plaintiff would now have had a chance of possessing them, or, at any rate, would have had a joint interest in them; but Philip never used any endeavours for this purpose, and the defendants alone are now jointly interested in them. Clause 5 is sufficient to constitute these offices partnership assets; and, under the circumstances, the defendants cannot be allowed to retain them to their joint and exclusive use. The proper relief is, to charge the defendants with the value of them in the partnership accounts. This only extends to the three offices mentioned in clause 5, and not to the other offices held by the defendants, or either of them, since these are not expressly mentioned in clause 5; and this is not the case of the retirement or death of Philip Mules, nor, in my opinion, of a dissolution within clauses 15 and 16. I shall therefore declare the partnership dissolved as from the 14th May, 1849, and direct the usual partnership accounts to be taken; there will be a reference to the Master as to the value (at the time of this decree) of the three offices mentioned in clause 5 of the articles of partnership, after making a reasonable allowance for the trouble and expense of conducting and carrying on the business of the same; the defendants will be charged in the partnership account with that value. An account will then be taken of the profits of the same three offices since the dissolution, making those reasonable allowances, and the defendants must account to the plaintiff for his share of such profits. As to the rest of the relief prayed, I shall dismiss the bill without costs, and shall reserve the costs of so much of the bill as is not dismissed. That will be the decree.

BUSHELL v. NIXON.

Will—Construction—Period of vesting.

Thomas Bushell, by his will, dated the 28th of August, 1808, devised to Thomas Eden, George Day, and Francis Woodward, all and singular his freehold estates, lands, hereditaments, and premises, with their appurtenances, situate and being in the hamlets, parishes, or townships of Hill and Moor, and Charlton, in the county of Worcester, or elsewhere in England, upon trust for his, the testator's wife, Susannah Bushell, for her use during her natural life, and from and after her decease, in trust, that his said trustees, or the survivor of them and his heirs, should, in case his, the said testator's said wife, should die before his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one years, receive and take the rents, issues, and profits of the said freehold estates, and pay and apply the same for and towards the clothing, maintaining, educating, and bringing up of all and every his said children, until the youngest of them should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, then in trust, that they, the said trustees, and the survivor of them, should sell the said freehold estates, either publicly or privately, and should, by and out of the moneys to arise by such sales as aforesaid, in the first place, pay all the costs and expenses attending such sales, and then pay and divide the residue of such money unto and amongst all and every his, the testator's, sons and daughters that should then be living, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants. All the testator's children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of Susannah Bushell, the testator's widow, who died on the 24th of November, 1850, and the question raised on this claim was, whether the proceeds of the sale of the testator's estates were divisible amongst the representatives of the four children, who died in the lifetime of Susannah Bushell, but were living when the youngest child attained twenty-one, together with those living at the death of S. Bushell, or whether those children who survived S. Bushell were alone entitled to the proceeds.

Bacon and J. Barber appeared for the plaintiff.

Malins and Rogers for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought that the class of children entitled to the shares were those living when the youngest child for the time being attained the age of twenty-one years. The testator gave a life interest to his wife, and from and after the decease of his wife the fund was given upon trusts, which, according to the natural meaning of the words, were all governed by the clause, "in case his wife should die before his youngest child should attain the age of twenty-one years, receive and take the rents, issues, and profits, and pay and apply the same for and towards the clothing, maintaining, educating, and bringing up of all and every his said children until the youngest of them should arrive at the age of twenty-one years then in trust." By the word "then" the testator plainly meant when the youngest child attained twenty-one. It appeared to his Honour that the trust for sale here was an absolute and not a contingent trust, and that was arrived at not by doing violence to the words of the will, but by the obvious meaning, which the testator had, however, not expressed. The testator meant the time when the youngest child attained twenty-one as the time to pay the proceeds among all the children then living.

Ex parte THE BISHOP OF HEREFORD.

Copyhold Enfranchisement Act—Costs—Service of petition for investment.

Where a tenant for life of a manor, in which lands are enfranchised under the above Act, applies for the investment of the fund paid into Court for the enfranchisement, it is proper to serve the copyhold commissioners with the petition, and the Court will order their costs to be paid by the petitioner, such costs to be added to his own, and with them deducted out of the fund.

This was a petition presented under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, for the investment of moneys, part of a larger fund standing to the credit of the copyhold commissioners.

By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 56, for the commutation of manorial rights, lords of manors, whatever be their interest therein, are empowered to enfranchise any of the lands holden of the manors in consideration of such sum or sums of money payable either forthwith, or at a future time as shall be agreed to be paid by the tenant, whose lands are to be enfranchised. By the 58th section of the Act, the expenses of every agreement for enfranchisement are to be borne by the lord and tenants in such proportions as they may agree, or in default of agreement, as the commissioners may direct, provided always that the expenses payable by lords of manors, having particular interests, or being trustees, shall, with any other expenses they may reasonably incur in or about any such agreement, the amount of such last-mentioned expenses being subject to the approval of the commissioners, be paid out of the first moneys to be received out of the enfranchisement to be effected under the Act. By the 69th section, lords of manors having particular interests, or being trustees, may, with the consent of the commissioners, charge the costs and expenses paid by them in respect of the commutation or enfranchisement on the manor. The 73rd section enacts, that all moneys to be paid for enfranchisement shall be paid to the lord of the manor, his heirs or assigns, where he shall be absolutely seised as tenant in fee-simple in possession of the manor, or where, as trustee for sale or otherwise, he has power to give an effectual discharge for such moneys, and where the lord shall be only entitled for a limited estate or interest, or shall be under any legal disability, such money shall, if it exceed 200*l.* be paid into the Bank in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Exchequer, there to remain until the same shall, by order of that Court made upon the petition of the party who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the manor had no such enfranchisement been made, be applied in the discharge of incumbrances affecting the manor, or in the purchase of lands, to be settled to the like uses, and in the meantime the same money may, by order of the said Court, upon application thereto, be invested by the said Accountant-General in his name in the purchase of Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities or Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, the dividends, in the meantime, to be paid to the person who would have been entitled to the rents and profits of the manor, if no enfranchisement had been made.

The Copyhold Commissioners were served with the petition in the present case, and claimed their costs of appearance in court. In the first instance these costs were allowed without observation; but the registrars having stopped the order on the ground that the commissioners ought not to have been served, and that the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, when Vice-Chancellor, had so held. The matter having been again brought before the Court by

Willcock, who appeared for the petitioner.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had communicated with Lord Justice Knight Bruce, and that he was prepared to decide that service of the petition on the Commissioners was necessary, and gave them a right to appear on the hearing. As to costs, the question was one of more difficulty, and but for a decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce (Ex parte the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1 Coll. 154), who granted the costs of the petitioner out of the fund, his Honour should have doubted his jurisdiction to make any order as to the costs of either the petitioner or the commissioners. He would, however, follow that precedent; and as the commissioners had a right to appear at the hearing of the petition, he thought that the proper order on the present occasion would be, that the petitioner should pay the costs of the commissioners, and add them to their own, and take such costs out of the fund.

Ex parte THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

Ex parte THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ST. PAUL'S.

Ex parte THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

These were similar petitions to that presented in the last case; and Wigram appeared for the petitioners in the first two petitions.

Kent, for the Bishop of London.

Prendergast, for the copyhold commissioners, applied for costs, and referred to the case of Ex parte the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1 Coll. 154, and contended that the costs might be paid out of the fund paid into court for the enfranchisement, as expenses reasonably incurred in and about the agreement, under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 58.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR directed that the costs of the commissioners should be paid by the petitioners, and that they should take their costs so incurred out of the fund paid into court for enfranchisement.

MACKENZIE v. MACKENZIE.

Practice—Writ of attachment.

An order was made in a cause, and in the matter of the Trustee Act, 1850, by which A. B. was ordered to transfer a sum of stock. In the affidavit of service of this order, the order was described as entitled in the cause only. Upon this affidavit a writ of attachment for disobedience to the order was issued against A. B. but it was discharged for irregularity, on the ground of the difference between the title of the order and the description of the title in the affidavit.

This was a motion to discharge a writ of attachment which had been issued against Mr. Duncan Mackenzie, for disobedience to an order of the Court. The application was made on the ground, among others, of the irregularity in the affidavit of service of the order. The case has already been reported upon another point, ante, vol. 18, p. 205. On the 22nd of January last, an order was made on the motion of Robert Mayne, that the order of the 8th of August, 1851, mentioned in the former report, should be discharged, and that Duncan Mackenzie should concur with Robert Mayne in making a transfer of the stock into court. This order was entitled:—

"Between E. F. Mackenzie, plaintiff; and D. Mackenzie, R. Mayne, and P. S. Keir, defendants; and between E. F. Simpson, an infant, by her next friend, plaintiff; and C. R. Simpson, defendant; and in the matter of the Trustee Act, 1850."

The affidavit of the service of this order on D. Mackenzie, and upon which affidavit the writ of attachment issued, was entitled thus:—

"Between E. F. Mackenzie, plaintiff; and D. Mackenzie, R. Mayne, and P. S. Keir, defendants; and between E. F. Simpson, late an infant, by her next friend, plaintiff; and C. R. Simpson, defendant."

The only difference then between these titles was that in the latter the word "late" was inserted before "an infant," and there was no mention of the Trustee Act, 1850. In the affidavit, the deponent stated "that he did personally serve the said D. Mackenzie with an order made in this cause." Mr. D. Mackenzie being in custody upon the attachment, Toller now moved the discharge of the writ.

Tennant opposed the motion.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (after conferring with Mr. Berrey) said that it was Mr. Berrey's opinion, that if the title in the affidavit had followed the title of the order, the affidavit would have been regular, although the title of the order might not have been correct; and further, that as the title in the affidavit did not follow the title of the order, the Trustee Act, 1850, being mentioned in one but not in the other, the affidavit was irregular. His Honour thought that the opinion of the officers of the Court in such matters was deserving of great consideration, and he should follow it in this case. There was the possibility that there might have been a service of some other order. The writ of attachment must be discharged.

Toller applied for the costs, contending that in such a matter, the Court had no discretion as to the costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought differently, and refused to give Mackenzie any costs.

Settlement—Construction—Exclusive Appointment.

By a marriage settlement an estate was conveyed to trustees upon trust for the husband for life, and afterwards for the wife for life; and after the decease of the survivor, to pay and apply the rents towards the maintenance and education of all and every the child or children of the marriage, until such child or children should attain twenty-one, and when and as such child or children respectively (if more than one) should attain twenty-one, then to convey the same premises unto such child or children in such manner, shares, and proportions for such uses, estate, and estates as the husband and wife jointly or the survivor of them alone should appoint; and in default of appointment, to convey the premises unto and amongst such children equally, share and share alike, to hold as tenants in common and not as joint tenants; and if there should be but one such child who should live to attain twenty-one, to convey the same premises to such only child and his or her heirs for ever:

Held, that the power of appointment did not permit the exclusion of any of the children of the marriage, and that in default of appointment, all the children of the marriage, whether attaining twenty-one, or dying in their parent's lifetime, or not took equal vested interests in the estate in fee.

By an indenture of settlement, dated the 13th of April, 1784, made on the marriage between John Strutt and Sarah Susannah Strutt (then S. S. Freeman), the said Sarah Susannah Strutt, with the privity and approbation of John Strutt, conveyed to Henry Mayo, Joel Oseland, and Nathaniel Taylor, and their heirs, certain real estates of which she was then seised in fee, to hold the same unto the said Henry Mayo, Joel Oseland, and Nathaniel Taylor, their heirs and assigns, upon trust that they, and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs of the survivor of them, should stand seised of the said hereditaments and premises, to the use of the said Sarah Susannah Strutt, and her heirs, until the solemnisation of the said then intended marriage and immediately thereafter, upon trust for the said John Strutt and his assigns, during his natural life, as therein mentioned, and after the decease of the said John Strutt, then upon trust for the said Sarah Susannah Strutt, and her assigns, during her natural life, as therein mentioned; and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of them, the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah Strutt, upon trust to pay and apply the rents, issues, and profits of the same premises towards the maintenance and education of all and every the child or children of the said John Strutt on the body of the said Sarah Susannah lawfully to be begotten until such child or children should attain his, her, or their age or ages of twenty-one years; and when and as such child or children respectively (if more than one) should attain the said age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to release and convey the same premises unto such child or children in such manner, shares, and proportions, for such uses, estate, and estates, as they, the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah should jointly in their lifetime, or which the survivor them the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah should alone by any deed or instrument to be by them jointly executed or executed by the survivor of them in the presence of three or more credible witnesses or by the last will of the survivor of them the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah, or any deed or writing purporting to be, or in the nature of, a last will and testament, to be executed and attested in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, give, devise, direct, limit, or appoint; and for want of, and in default of, any such deed, will, disposition, direction, or appointment, then upon trust to release and convey all the same premises, with the appurtenances, unto and amongst such children equally, share and share alike, to hold as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; and if there should be but one such child who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to release and convey all the same premises, with the appurtenances, unto such only child, and his or her heirs for ever; provided that in case it should happen there should be no such lawful issue of the said then intended marriage, or being any, all such issue should happen to die without having any lawful issue, in the life-time of both the said John Strutt, and Sarah Susannah Strutt, or after her decease, and in the lifetime of the said John Strutt, then and in either of such cases, the said trustees, and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor should stand seised of and convey the same premises to such uses as the said Sarah Susannah should by any deed or will to be executed, published, and attested as therein mentioned, and notwithstanding her coverture, direct or appoint to take effect from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of them, the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah his then intended wife, or their issue under the age of twenty-one years; and without issue as aforesaid, and in default of and subject to any such last-mentioned direction or appointment, upon trust to convey the premises to the right heirs of the said Sarah Susannah. There were eight children and no more of this marriage, viz. William Freeman, Joseph Henry, and Eliza Susannah (all since deceased), Sarah and Maria, George (since deceased), Louisa the wife of Geo. M. Braithwaite, and Matilda. Of the three trustees, Nathaniel Taylor was the survivor, and he died intestate as to the legal estate in the trust property, and it was not known who was his heir. William F. Strutt died in July 1799, under twenty-one, and unmarried, leaving his brother, Joseph Henry Strutt, his heir-at-law. By a settlement, dated the 2nd of May, 1827, made on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Braithwaite, Mrs. Braithwaite's interest under the settlement of the 13th of April, 1784, was covenanted to be conveyed to Joseph Henry Strutt, Joseph Lythgoe, and Richard Mott, in fee, upon trust for Mrs. Braithwaite and the children of the marriage. George Strutt died in April, 1832, intestate, having attained twenty-one, but never having been married, leaving Joseph Henry Strutt his heir-at-law. Eliza Susannah Strutt died in June, 1834, intestate, having attained twenty-one, but never having been married, leaving her father, John Strutt, her heir-at-law. Sarah Susannah Strutt died in July, 1830. She and her husband not having exercised the joint power of appointment given by the settlement of 1784. By an indenture dated the 12th of January, 1835, John Strutt, in exercise of the power given by the settlement of the 13th of April, 1784, appointed that the hereditaments and premises comprised in the said settlement should, subject to his life-estate, go, remain, and be to the use of the said Joseph Henry, Sarah, Maria, and Matilda Strutt equally, as tenants in common, and their respective heirs and assigns; and directed that the trustees of the settlement should immediately after his death convey and assure the said hereditaments and premises accordingly. Joseph Henry Strutt died in 1848, after having attained twenty-one, intestate as to his real estate, and leaving George Henry Strutt his eldest son and heir-at-law. John Strutt, the father, died on the 19th of May, 1850, having, by his will, dated the 21st of June, 1848, given all his real estate to his said four daughters, in equal shares, as tenants in common, and their respective heirs and assigns. The present suit was instituted by the three unmarried daughters, and the will prayed that the appointment of the 12th of January, 1835, might be declared a valid appointment, or, if not, that the Court should declare the rights of the several parties, and that, under the Trustee Act, 1850, the Court would vest the same trust estates in the persons severally entitled thereto.

Bacon and Mott appeared for the plaintiffs; and Sergeant for all the defendants, excepting G. H. Strutt.

C. Hall and E. F. Smith for the defendant, G. H. Strutt.

Bacon, in reply.

The following cases were cited:—Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. 771; Gordon v. Hope, 13 Jur. 382; Kenworthy v. Bate, 6 Ves. 793; Boraston's case, 3 Co. Rep. 19; Doe v. Lea, 3 Term. R. 41; Cohen v. Waley, 15 Sim. 318; and Skey v. Barnes, 3 Mer. 335.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this was a very obscure settlement, and no one in construing it could feel sure what was the construction which the parties contemplated at the time. As to the validity of the appointment by Mr. Strutt, the surviving husband, that was an appointment to some only of the objects of the power, and that raised the question whether the power did or did not authorise an exclusive appointment. That question turned entirely, as it appeared to him, on the grammatical force to be attributed to the word "such," in the clause giving the power to appoint "unto such child or children in such manner, shares, and proportions, and for such uses, estate, and estates, as they, the said John Strutt and Sarah Susannah should, jointly in their livestime, the survivor of them" should appoint. If "such" meant such as they should choose to appoint, there could be no doubt that the power authorised an exclusive appointment. If "such" was to be taken in the sense of "the said," the power did not authorise an exclusive appointment. The question was, whether the meaning of the word "such" was throughout the same, or whether "such" was used in the sense of "the said." In the first place, his Honour found a trust to "pay and apply the rents, issues, and profits of the premises towards the maintenance and education of all and every the child;" that was the only place in which the word "the" was used—"or children of the said John Strutt on the body of the said Sarah Susannah lawfully begotten, until such child or children"—that must mean all, not excluding any,—"should attain his, her, or their age or ages of twenty-one years, and when and as such child or children respectively, if more than one, should attain the said age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to release and convey the same premises unto such child or children;" that must mean the said child or children, following the previous description. The next place where his Honour found it introduced seemed to him to remove all doubt whatever, "and in default of any such deed, will, disposition, direction, or appointment, then upon trust, to release and convey all the same premises, with the appurtenances, unto and amongst such children equally, share and share alike," and the word "such" must there have the same grammatical force as it had, where the parents were empowered to appoint—"and if there should be but one such child who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, then upon trust to release and convey all the same premises, with the appurtenances, unto such only child, and his or their heirs for ever." It appeared to him, on the language, that "such" was used there in the place of the definite article, and if it was read otherwise, it must be seen that it was not the sense in which it was meant to be used. His Honour thought, therefore, that the power did not warrant an exclusive appointment, and therefore the appointment by Mr. Strutt was bad, and there must be a declaration to that effect. Then, who were the parties to take in default of appointment? Three constructions were contended for. It was first said that those children only were to take who survived the surviving parent. His Honour could not think that there was any ground for that construction. This was a marriage settlement. The Court always endeavoured to construe marriage settlements so as not to make the interest of the children depend on their surviving their parents; and in the case referred to by Mr. Hall (Gordon v. Hope) there was a trust to pay to and among all and every the children and issue of the marriage to be paid to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, after the death of the parents, and it was held that the fund vested in the children as they came of age, though they died in the lifetime of the parents. There could be no doubt that in this case the children attaining twenty-one took vested interests, though they died in the lifetime of their parents. The next question was, whether the children who died under twenty-one, took any interest; and as to that his Honour must say that he did not see his way on legal principles of construction to exclude any child who died under twenty-one from taking a share in the property. It was on those words of gift in default of appointment that the argument "upon trust to release and convey all the same premises, with the appurtenances, unto and amongst such children equally, share and share alike, to hold as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; and if there should be but one such child who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years," &c. That, it was contended, was like a clear gift to all of them at twenty-one, for thereby that word "such" was meant such as should attain twenty-one; and if there should be but one such child who should live to attain twenty-one, it could not there mean one child only, but all the children. It was not safe, on an instrument so framed as this, to depart a single step from the literal meaning of the words. If to attain twenty-one was to be the condition of vesting, what became of the share of a daughter marrying under twenty-one, and dying before that age? There was not to be a gift over in case of one dying leaving lawful issue during the parent's existence. A daughter therefore dying under twenty-one, leaving a child would prevent that gift over taking effect, though she took no share, which would be incongruous. His Honour thought there was no principle on which he could say that any of the children were to be excluded. The next question was, what estates did they take in default of appointment? He thought there was no doubt they took estates in fee. The conveyance to the trustees was in fee, upon trust, after saying they were to convey to such children as the parents should appoint, in default of appointment to the children as tenants in common, and if only one, then all to such one, his heirs and assigns. In a marriage settlement which was for the benefit of the children, a direction to convey must mean to convey to the children in fee. There must be a declaration that the appointment was bad, and the property was divisible into eighths, of which Joseph Henry Strutt took three-eighths; the devisees of the heir of Eliza one-eighth; Mrs. Braithwaite's trustees, one-eighth; and the three plaintiff's each one-eighth: and as one trustee of the original settlement was dead, and the other could not be found, there must be an order vesting the estate in the person entitled according to the declaration.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Bankrupt certificate.

A company became bankrupt in May 1848, and was subsequently ordered to be wound up. A. B. a shareholder in the company, became bankrupt in November 1848, and obtained his certificate in January 1849. The Master placed A. B.'s name on the list of contributories; but it was Held, that A. B.'s certificate was a bar to his liabilities, and that his name was improperly placed on the list of contributories.

This was a motion on behalf of John Cramer Chappell, that the decision of Sir William Horne, dated the 3rd of December, 1851, placing Mr. Chappell's name on the list of contributories as a shareholder who had executed the company's deed of settlement in respect of 100 shares, might be discharged or varied by placing the names of his assignees under his bankruptcy on the list in his place. The company was provisionally registered on the 18th of September, 1845. The business of the company was discontinued in the Autumn of 1847, and on the 8th of May, 1848, was declared bankrupt. The circumstances of the company are stated in the report of the case. (Ex parte Lord Talbot, 18 Law T. Rep. 328.) On the 6th of November, 1848, Mr. Chappell, who was the holder of 100 shares in the company, was declared bankrupt, and he obtained his certificate of conformity on the 11th of January, 1849.

Bacon and Hoare, in support of the motion, referred to the 88th section of the Winding-up Act of 1848, and the 30th section of the Amendment Act of 1849, and cited Kuper's Assignee's case, 3 De G. & Sma. 113.

Roxburgh and Morris, for the official manager, cited The South Staffordshire Railway Company v. Burnside, 20 L. J. 120, N. S. Ex. 120.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered Mr. Chappell [illegible] The company became bankrupt in M. 1848. Before that time the company had incurred liabilities, and for those no doubt Mr. Chappell had been liable to contribute; but they appear to have been clearly barred by his certificate. If, after his certificate had been obtained, a suit had been instituted against him and the other shareholders to enforce their liabilities, he could have pleaded his certificate in bar of the suit. The Winding-up Act only appointed another mode of enforcing the liabilities; and the calls Mr. Chappell was now required to pay were in respect of a contribution really payable by or due from him before the period of his bankruptcy. His certificate was a bar not to these calls, quâ calls, but to the liabilities to satisfy which they were made. His Honour therefore thought that Mr. Chappell's name ought to be removed from the list of contributories, and that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the estate.

Ex parte* YELLAND, re THE PORT OF LONDON SHIPOWNERS' LOAN AND ASSURANCE COMPANY.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts — Contributory.

A company was completely registered, and A. B. applied for shares, and two were allotted to him. A. B. paid the deposit upon the shares, and his name was returned to the registry office as a shareholder, but he never executed the company's deed of settlement. That deed of settlement expressly provided that the liabilities and privileges of shareholders should commence upon their execution of the deed. The company was ordered to be wound up, and it was Held, that A. B. was a contributory in respect of two shares.

This was a motion on behalf of Robert Easton Yelland, that the decision of Master Tinney, of the 21st of November, 1851, whereby the name of the said R. E. Yelland was placed on the list of contributories in the second-class of the above-named company in respect of two shares might be reversed, and that the name of the said R. E. Yelland might be struck out of the list of contributories. The Port of London Shipowners' Loan and Assurance Company was provisionally registered on the 24th of February, 1847 - the capital to consist of 50,000*l.* in 500 shares of 100*l.* each - and the deed of settlement of the company was dated the 8th of April, 1847. The 83rd section of that deed was as follows:—"That immediately upon the execution of the deed of settlement of the company, or such deed of accession thereto in the manner aforesaid, the person executing the same being a person duly entitled by original subscription, or by transfer, election, nomination, or otherwise, in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, shall be forthwith entered on the register of shareholders, and duly returned to the joint-stock registry office, under the provisions of the Registration Act, and shall thenceforth, but not before, assume the liabilities and privileges of a shareholder, and if such person be entitled in any of the representative capacities as aforesaid, as the nominee of any party so entitled, the dividends accruing on the share or shares to which such party or the nominee of such party shall have been so entitled after the event on which such title shall have accrued, and before the execution of the deed of settlement or the deed of accession thereto, shall, unless forfeited under the 39th clause of these presents, be accumulated for and paid to the person so executing at the time of such execution, whose receipt then given, and no other, shall be a valid and sufficient discharge for the same; but in all cases of transfer the former holder of the share in respect of which such execution is made, shall, until such execution and registration as aforesaid, be entitled to the dividends up to or before that time paid on any such share, and to all other the privileges, and be subjected to all the liabilities of a shareholder in respect of the same share." The company was completely registered on the 22nd of April, 1847. Mr. R. E. Yelland having applied for shares in the company, the following letter was sent to him:-

"London, 29, St. Helen's-place, Bishopsgate, July 20, 1848.

"No. 1,117.

"SIR,—In compliance with your application for shares in the Port of London Ship Owners' Loan and Assurance Company, I beg to inform you that two shares have been allotted to you.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"AUGUSTUS COLLINGRIDGE,
"Managing Director.

"N.B. A certificate will be given in exchange for this letter, on executing the deed."

On the 22nd of July, 1848, the following letter was forwarded to Mr. Yelland:-

"R. E. Yelland, esq. Bideford.

"22nd July, 1848.

"DEAR SIR,—The 31st of this month being the day appointed by the 7 & 8 Vict. for the return to be made to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, I beg to inform you that you will be furnished immediately after that date with a printed list of upwards of 200 proprietors who, during the past half-year, have executed the registered deed of settlement of this company. It may be as well to add further, that the aim of the directors having avowedly been directed throughout to the distribution of the shares in the hands of as many parties as possible, the actual number of shareholders at this moment exceeds 960, whose attested signatures will be obtained as early as the different localities in which parties reside will admit of.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

"AUG. COLLINGRIDGE,
"Registered Officer."

On the 24th of July, 1848, Mr. Yelland paid 10*l.* the deposit on the two shares allotted to him, and received an acknowledgment of the same, but he never executed the deed. Mr. Yelland's name was returned to the Registrar Office as a shareholder on the 1st of August, 1848, and the return was duly registered; but Mr. Yelland's name was therein stated to be Robert Eastern Yelland. In 1850, the company was ordered to be wound up. (11 Law T. 391.) The Master placed Mr. Yelland's name on the list of contributories in respect of two shares.

Willcock and Terrell appeared in support of the motion of appeal from the Master's decision.

Roxburgh and Morris appeared for the official manager.

[illegible] following [illegible] cited:- Hutton v. Thompson, 3 House of Lord Cases, 191; Ex parte Hall, 1 Hall & Twells, 581 and Carrick's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 505.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered the Master had rightly placed Mr Yelland's name on the list of contributories. The company appeared to have been completely registered; and Mr Yelland, having applied for shares, received a letter from the managing director, stating that, in compliance with his application, two shares had been allotted to him. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Yelland sent to the company's office 10*l.* by way of deposit on the two shares, and the secretary forwarded to him an acknowledgment of the receipt of the deposit of 10*l.* The contract between Mr. Yelland and the company was thus rendered complete. All that remained to be done was the execution of the deed by Yelland. By the 83rd section of the company's deed of settlement it was provided that immediately upon its execution the person executing it being a person duly entitled by original subscription or otherwise as therein mentioned, should be forthwith entered on the register of shareholders and duly returned to the Joint Stock Registry-office under the provisions of the Registration Act, and should thenceforth, but not before, assume the liabilities and privileges of a shareholder. Here the company had inserted Mr Yelland's name on the register of shareholders, and had returned his name to the Registry-office without his having executed the deed of settlement. But his Honour said, it appeared to him that as Yelland had agreed to take shares and had accepted them, he had authorised the company to put his name on the register without his execution of the deed. The misnomer of Mr. Yelland was of no moment, and his Honour thought that the Master had come to a right conclusion in placing Mr. Yelland's name upon the list of contributories. The costs of the official manager of this application must come out of the estate.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Thursday, Jan. 15.

HAMBROOK v. SMITH.

Discovery — Title deeds — Forfeiture — Practice.

Deeds which were in a defendant's possession formed the evidence of title of both parties to the estate in question. On a bill seeking for a discovery (inter alia) of what had become of the same, and in whose possession, custody, or power they were Held, that the defendant must discover by his answers as to those deeds; although he may incur a forfeiture, and although, in the event of the Court deciding at the hearing on one point against the plaintiff, he might not be entitled to a discovery.

If a discovery may be useful for obtaining any relief which the plaintiff may obtain, the plaintiff is entitled to a discovery.

An exception to one interrogatory, as numbered in the bill, will not be overruled, although part of that interrogatory may have been answered.

This cause came on by way of exceptions to the defendant's answer in the two particulars more immediately referred to in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Goodere, in support of the exceptions.

Chandless and Surrage, contrà, contended that the exceptions were bad in point of form, extending, as they said, over more than one interrogatory, and they relied upon the well-known rule, that if a defendant would lay himself open to a forfeiture by his answer, he was not bound to make such discovery. They cited the following cases: Wrottesley v. Bendish, 3 P. Wms. 235; Chancey v. Fenhoulet, 2 Ves. sen. 625; Atkins v. Wright, 14 Ves. 211; and Wigram on Discov. 2nd Edit. 199, s. 285; Hare on Discov. 222; Short v. Mercier, 3 M'N. & G. 205; Adams v. Fisher, 3 My. & Cr. 526; The Attorney General v. Thompson, 8 Hare, 1[illegible]; The Attorney-General v. Strutt, 3 Beav. 396; Bute v. The Glamorganshire Canal Company, 1 Phil. 681; Glover v. Hall, 2 Phill. 484.

Goodere, in reply, said, by the General Orders the interrogatories in the bill, were directed to be numbered, and each interrogatory should have an exception to the whole of the answer to it; and that the latter portion of the interrogatory would be unintelligible, if it alone formed the exception. That a defendant, if he answers at all, must answer fully. That both parties had a common interest in most of those title deeds. He relied on Ovey v. Layton, 2 Sim. & S. 251; Duncombe v. Davis, 1 Hare, 184; Lord Portarlington v. Soulby, 7 Sim. 28; Mitf. on Pleading, 193, 4th edit.

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The first question raised upon these exceptions is, whether they are good in form. It is contended, on the part of the defendant, that they are bad in form in this respect, that such exceptions embrace more than one interrogatory; and that inasmuch as one of the interrogatories embraced in the exception has been sufficiently answered, even if another has not been sufficiently answered, the exceptions ought to be altogether overruled. Now, as to the effect of such exceptions, embracing more than one interrogatory, as to the first exception, in one sense, there are two questions, but properly embraced in one interrogatory, because it is all an interrogatory as to in whose possession the documents are. It appears to me that there is no impropriety in embracing the whole of that in one interrogatory, and no impropriety in embracing it in one exception, though a portion has been answered. The same observation applies to the second exception, and therefore there is no objection in form. The next question is this—that having the discovery sought here would not in any way assist the plaintiff in obtaining a decree when the cause comes on to a hearing, and for that reason, besides the other, the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to compel the defendant to answer. Now the matter has been argued as if the discovery sought was what deeds are the scheduled deeds. But the discovery is not what the deeds were, for that has been answered, and the schedule has been set out, but the discovery is, in whose possession are these documents now, and in what right? Now it is said, and said very truly, that inasmuch as the defendant claiming under the will of the testator's wife is entitled to this property if the will is valid, and if that question is decided against the plaintiff, the plaintiff will have no relief whatever at the hearing. But I need not say that I cannot now determine whether the question will be decided in favour of the plaintiff or the defendant. It is enough that there is such a question. But supposing it should be determined in favour of the plaintiff that the will is invalid; then is there not relief which the plaintiff would be entitled to at the hearing, for the purpose of obtaining which the discovery here sought is or may be material? The plaintiff asks that the estate may be given up to him, and that the deeds may be delivered to him in order to found a claim. Now the facts of the case are these:—By indenture of the 29th and 30th of November, 1832, being a voluntary settlement made by Samuel Smith, the husband of Elizabeth Smith, certain real estate was conveyed to a trustee upon trusts for the benefit of Elizabeth Smith, during her life, and after her death to such use as she should appoint by her will; and, in default of such appointment, in trust for Mary Hambrook, her heirs and assigns for ever. In the year 1815, Samuel Smith prevailed upon the trustee to reconvey the estate to him, his heirs, and assigns. In April 1848, Elizabeth Smith died, having by her will appointed that all the hereditaments comprised in the said indentures of 1832, should remain and be to the use of her husband during his natural life, or until he should be found or declared a bankrupt, or should take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or convey or assign or incumber his aforesaid life estate or interest, or any part thereof, by way of anticipation, and after the decease of her said husband, or other sooner determination of his aforesaid estate or interest, then to other persons mentioned in the will. Mary Hambrook died in 1846, leaving Samuel Smith Hambrook her heir, who filed his bill on the 22nd of March, 1851, against Samuel Smith and others, alleging that the will of Elizabeth

Smith was invalid, and that he was therefore entitled to the hereditaments under the indentures of 1832, as in default of appointment, and also alleging that immediately upon the death of his wife Samuel Smith obtained possession of the deeds of 1832, and still retained possession of them, and praying a conveyance of the estate and delivery up of the deeds. Now the bill contained the following interrogatories: "9. Whether the said Samuel Smith did not at the time of the death of his said wife, or at some other time, and when he obtained possession of the said indentures of settlement of November, 1832, and the other title-deeds hereinbefore in that behalf mentioned, or of some, and which, of the same respectively, and whether he does not not now retain such possession either by himself or by his solicitors, or agents, or some or one of them or otherwise, or in whose possession are the same now and in what right." "19. And that the said Samuel Smith may set forth a list and schedule of the title-deeds and muniments of title relating to the hereditaments the subjects of the said settlement of 1832, and if he shall allege himself to have parted with the possession of the same, or any of them, then that he may state what hath become of such of the same, the possession of which he shall have parted with, and in whose possession, custody, or power the same now are and under what title respectively." The defendant, Samuel Smith, by his answer admits that at the time of, or very shortly after, the death of his said wife he did obtain possession of the indentures of 1832, and he sets forth a schedule of the deeds in his possession, and says that he had at one time in his possession some other title deeds and muniments of title relating to the said hereditaments, and that before the institution of this suit he parted with them." He then submits and insists that he ought not to be compelled to state what had become of the same, or in whose possession, custody, or power they were, inasmuch as he is advised and believes that having regard to the terms of the trust in the defendant's favour contained in the said will, such discovery would or might subject him to forfeiture and loss of his interest in the said hereditaments under the said will. Now when the cause comes on to be heard the Court will first have to determine the question as to the validity of the appointment: if it determines that it is invalid the plaintiff's bill will have to be dismissed; but if the will is held to be valid and the Court is of opinion that the plaintiff is right, what will the Court have to decree? Why a conveyance and delivery over of the deeds to the plaintiff. Now upon the exceptions it is no protection against answering to say, "In one event of the decision of the Court you will be entitled to no discovery at all." If a discovery may be useful for obtaining any relief which the plaintiff may obtain, I apprehend in that case the plaintiff is entitled to a discovery, and here it may be most material to the plaintiff to have a discovery of the hands in which the deeds now are. It may be material even before the cause comes to a hearing, because it may be necessary to make the person in whose hands the deeds are a party; and if it were not for the question that arises as to forfeiture, I should have considered it a clear case, and that the defendant was bound to answer in whose custody the deeds are. In fact, these deeds were the common property of both parties, and are the foundation of the title of both parties—the deed of settlement, for instance. These would be no doubt subject to the question of forfeiture, but that the defendant would be bound to set out all the deeds, and that the plaintiff would be entitled to production. It is not necessary to determine that; and, indeed, the defendant has set out a schedule of the deeds in his possession. If he, having got the legal estate from the trustees, has parted with the deeds, then is he not compelled to state to whom he has parted with the deeds? All the cases cited by the defendant are cases relating to production, except the case of Stainton v. Chadwick, 15 Jur. 1139. Now, the principle on which the Court proceeds as to compelling a party to set out deeds, and also as to applications for production, is this,—if the plaintiff's title is positively disputed, and the documents in question could not in any way assist the plaintiff in any relief he is to ask for at the hearing, the Court may not only not compel production, but may not compel a schedule of them to the answer. But if the documents may assist the plaintiff in obtaining any portion of the relief which, in one event of the decision upon the given point, he may become entitled to, there the party is entitled to discovery by having the deeds set out, and also to production, subject only to this, that if the Court sees upon motion for production that there is a point to be determined, upon which the title of the plaintiff depends, and which the documents will not help, then the Court may say in this stage of the cause the Court will not compel production. Now, as to that case cited from the Jurist, I conceive that the dictum of the Lord Chancellor must have reference to documents not necessary to a decree at the hearing, but which will become necessary for a reference to the Master or some consequential proceeding. I am of opinion that really, if there were not this question arising as to forfeiture and loss which the defendant may sustain, there could be no reasonable doubt as to the right of the plaintiff to have the discovery; and that brings me to the question as to forfeiture. Now that stands thus:—the defendant says this will of the wife (which he has a right to assume for this purpose will be, or at least may be, a valid testamentary appointment) has made the defendant's life estate depend upon his not alienating; that is to say, has made his estate cease upon alienation, and go over to other persons; and he says: "If I disclose to the plaintiff the hands in which I have placed these deeds, I shall forfeit this estate, because it may shew or tend to shew that I have done an act which will determine my estate." Now Monnins v. Monnins, 2 Ch. Rep. 68, no doubt, seems to have decided this, that where an estate is given to a woman durante viduitate, and therefore was only to endure so long as she remained a widow, she might protect herself from answering as to the fact of whether she had contracted a new marriage. On the other hand, there are other cases referred to. The case before Lord Talbot (cited in 2 Atk. 393) and other cases, which go to shew distinctly this, that the Court can distinguish between two classes of cases; or if a certain estate is given to an individual, with a condition annexed, or that upon the happening of a certain event, forfeiture of the estate so given; the other, that an estate is so limited, as only to endure till a certain event occurs, and then to go over. No doubt in many cases this is so, and the distinction is fine, but well established, not only as to discovery, but as to many other questions. The latter is called a conditional limitation. I doubt the correctness of that; but it means that the estate is limited to endure till a certain event happens, and then to go over; that is clearly the meaning of the term. Now, in this case, according to the terms in the will of Samuel Smith's wife, the estate is given to him absolutely for life, with a certain condition annexed, so that upon the happening of the condition, that is to say, upon alienation, it is given over to other persons. Now, it would be very difficult, in a Court of Equity, to maintain the proposition that a man has a right to say, "Although I am in possession of an estate which was only to endure till the happening of a certain event, I can, in equity and moral justice, refuse to disclose whether the event has happened, upon the happening of which my estate is to determine." If there were no decision upon the point, I should have found it very difficult to say that he could protect himself from giving such discovery, when the refusal is, in effect, saying this, "Although my estate has determined, and although I am most wrongly in possession, I have a right to refuse to disclose whether it has determined." I should find it extremely difficult to hold this: but the decisions clearly establish that this is not a case of forfeiture to which the rule applies, though the defendant is not compelled to set out that which would create a forfeiture, any more than that which would subject him to a penalty. Now, the cases cited, except that of Monnins v. Monnins, which appears overruled by subsequent cases, seem to have determined that there is a distinction between the case of estates to endure for life, but to go over in case of a particular act being done, and the case of an estate to endure until the happening of a certain event; and that if an estate was given to a man for life, unimpeachable for waste, so that if he commits waste he may forfeit, he is not compelled to disclose an act which might cause forfeiture. I am of opinion, therefore, that the objection to discovery on the ground that it might subject the defendant to what he calls forfeiture, is not good. I think, therefore, that I am bound to overrule these exceptions.

Exceptions overruled.

ERROR FROM THE EXCHEQUER.

Dec. 1, 1851, and Feb. 6, 1852.

Jones v. Johnson and Another.

Replevin against Magistrates - 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 92--55 Geo. 3, c. 51 - 1 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 18 - Construction of—Borough rate need not be made in public—Rate for expenses already incurred - Warrant—Receipt and date of -Extension of time—Distress on overseers after the expiration of their term of office—Warrant signed by mayor in his capacity of mayor and as justice—Jurisdiction.

The council of a borough made an estimate pursuant to the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 92) in which they included a certain sum for compensation awarded to a former town-clerk, and for legal expenses, a part of which had been already paid, and a rate was accordingly made.

At a meeting to which the public were not admitted, but at which the reporters for the press were present, the council proceeded to make an order directed to the overseers of certain parishes to pay the proportions of the said rate assessed upon their parishes out of the poor-rates; and they then issued a warrant to their treasurer commanding him, within 100 days from the date thereof to demand the same from the said overseers. The treasurer, by his precept, required the overseers within 100 days "after the receipt hereof," to pay the said sum out of the poor-rates.

The plaintiff, one of the overseers, having made default in payment, a warrant was issued by the defendants, being the mayor and justices. The warrant did not aver that the justices were acting within their jurisdiction, but it had a venue in the margin, and after directing a certain sum to be levied by distress of plaintiff's goods, concluded thus:—"Given under our hand and seal, and under the corporate seal of the said borough city. T. J. (L.S.), M. B. M. (L.S.), justices of the said borough and city (corporation seal), T. J. mayor." The defendant Johnson was not stated in the body of the warrant to be mayor of the borough, but he had executed it in his double capacity of mayor and justice of the borough. The plaintiff's term of office as overseer had expired at the time the distress was made:

Held—1. That borough justices may make a rate at an ordinary meeting of the town council, and that they are not required, like county justices, to make their rates at a public meeting.

2. That the rate being good upon the face of it, the fact of such legal expenses being included, did not make it void. [The authority of the case of Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777, doubted.]

3. That the variance in the warrant to the treasurer, and in that to the overseers, was immaterial, inasmuch as the time allowed for payment of the sum was not thereby abridged.

That the distress was properly made on the goods of the plaintiff.

That the warrant was not the less the act of the mayor because he had also signed it as justice, but that he might act in both characters.

This was an action of replevin for taking certain goods. The declaration was in the ordinary form. Plea—Not guilty (by statute). The first avowry by both the defendants stated that Lichfield was an ancient borough, having a body corporate; that the borough fund was insufficient for the purposes of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76 (the Municipal Corporation Act); that the council of the borough made an estimate of what would be sufficient, and ordered a borough-rate in the nature of a county-rate, and appointed one J. W. Proffitt, the collector, and ordered that the sum of 666*l.* 16s. 1½d. then payable by St. Mary's parish should be paid by the overseers of the said parish to the said J. W. Proffitt out of the poor-rates made and collected, or to be made and collected, for the said parish. The avowry then went on to state the nonpayment by the overseers of the sum of 77*l.* 16s. 1½d. balance of the said sum of 666*l.* 16s. 1½d. and that a distress warrant was issued, and the goods seized, in pursuance thereof. The second avowry was immaterial. Replication—De injuria.

The cause was tried at the Stafford Summer Assizes 1850, when a special verdict was taken, finding the following facts:—That Lichfield was a borough corporate; that the plaintiff, at the time of the making of the borough-rate thereinafter mentioned, was one of the overseers of the poor of the parish of St. Mary, in the said borough of Lichfield; that the defendants were two justices of the peace of the said borough; that the borough being included in Schedule A of the Municipal Corporations Act, and the borough fund not being sufficient for the purposes of the Act of 1 Vict. c. 81, on the 19th July, 1817, a meeting of the council of the borough was held, according to the 69th and 92nd sections of the first-mentioned Act, but which meeting was not a public meeting, the members of the town council and the reporters of the press only being allowed to be present, and the meeting not having been advertized in any newspaper, there being no newspaper published at Lichfield · at such meeting the said council made the rate in question, carried resolutions, and entered the minutes of the proceedings under the corporate seal of the borough, duly signed by the mayor. The order in council was then set forth. It ordered a borough-rate to be made, by which the parishes of St. Michael, St. Mary, and four other parishes and places being within the borough were assessed at certain sums. It then ordered that the churchwardens and overseers of the above-mentioned parishes and places should pay the amount of their proportions "out of the poor-rates made and collected;" that Henry Hitchins should be appointed collector of the rates, to act as overseer, &c.; and that J. W. Proffitt, treasurer of the borough, should make demand in writing on behalf of the said council, of the said churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the respective sums assessed on the said parishes, &c. and which sums the churchwardens, &c. were required to levy and pay to the treasurer within 100 days after demand; and in case the said churchwardens, &c. should neglect to levy and pay the said sums within 100 days after demand, the treasurer was to levy the same by distress of the goods of such churchwardens and overseers. An estimate of expenditure and assets made at the meeting of the council was then set out. It contained, amongst others, the following items: —"Compensation to the late town clerk three years and a half, 105*l*. 11s. 10*d*.; law expenses, 800*l*." The first of these items was introduced under the following circumstances:—a Mr. Simpson had been town clerk of Lichfield before and at the time of the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, when he was dismissed from his office by the town council. He, therefore, claimed compensation, and being refused, obtained a mandamus, on which he recovered against the town council 467*l*. for damages and costs. Subsequently an annuity of 30*l*. a-year was awarded to him for compensation; being dissatisfied with that, he appealed to the Treasury; and whilst that appeal was pending, the sum of 105*l*. 11s. 10d. being the arrears of the annuity, was included in the estimate. The other sum was introduced under the following circumstances:—A. Eggington, the town clerk of the borough and attorney for the council, in defending them in the matter of the mandamus, paid to the said Mr. Simpson, the sum of 467*l*. the amount of damages and costs. This was a voluntary payment to save the corporation from expense, he intending to charge it to the council as a disbursement. He had not delivered a signed bill to the council on the 19th July, 1847. Under these circumstances the item of 800*l*. was introduced into the estimate as a sum that would be required to pay Mr. Eggington his bill of costs for that and other suits, then unascertained, including the before mentioned payment of 467*l*. The proportions of the rate were according to the fair annual value of the rateable property, and on the 19th of July, 1847, a precept or warrant, signed by the mayor of the borough, and sealed with the corporate seal, was, by order of the council, issued to J. H. Proffitt, the treasurer, whereby he was commanded, within 100 days from the date thereof, to demand from the said churchwardens the sums assessed upon the said parishes; and if the said churchwardens, &c. should refuse or neglect to pay the same within 100 days after demand and notice, then to give information thereof to the said council. Accordingly, on the said 19th July, Proffitt made his precept to the churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary (the plaintiff being one), in which, after reciting the order, and the warrant of the council, he required that "within 100 days next after the receipt" thereof by them, they should pay to him, "out of the poor-rates made and collected, or to be made and collected," the sum of 666*l*. 16s. 1½d. On the 29th July, 1847, a copy of this precept was left at the house of the plaintiff. The plaintiff inspected the rate, and gave notice of appeal, and the rate was confirmed. The churchwardens and overseers of St. Mary afterwards paid to J. W. Proffitt three several instalments on account of the rate, amounting altogether to 513*l*. leaving the balance due on the 30th March, 1848, when the plaintiff went out of office and ceased to be overseer. A successor was appointed to the office, and on the 11th July, 1848, after the expiration of the 100 days, and after the plaintiff had ceased to be overseer, the two persons who still then continued churchwardens, and the plaintiff and James Gilbert were by J. W. Proffitt summoned to appear before the defendant Thomas Johnson, he then being mayor of the said borough, and the other defendant Major Butler Morgan, then being a justice of the peace of the said borough, in respect of the nonpayment of the balance of the sum assessed on the parish of St. Mary. On the 13th July, 1848, the plaintiff attended before the defendants, and the hearing was adjourned until the 25th, and from thence till the 3rd August following, the plaintiff promising to pay the residue, and, in fact, before the last-named day, paying a further sum of 76*l*. on account of the balance of 153*l*. 16s. 1½d. The plaintiff did not attend on the 3rd August, and the defendants upon the application of the attorney for the council of the borough, decided that a distress warrant should issue, and such warrant was, on the 10th of August, 1848, prepared, signed, sealed, and delivered to the said attorney, who was then town-clerk of the borough, for the purpose of having the corporate seal affixed thereto, it being his duty to attend when the corporate seal was affixed to documents; he, however, altered the date from the 10th to the 14th of August, but with the assent and direction of the defendants, who re-signed and re-sealed it, and the corporate common seal was then affixed by the defendant, the mayor, who then signed it. On the 4th of July the council duly resolved at a meeting, that this amount be enforced, and that the mayor do sign and affix the common seal to all necessary documents in reference thereto. On the 14th of August the corporate seal was duly affixed to the warrant, and it was delivered to Mr. Proffitt, who took the goods and chattels of the defendant, described in the declaration, and kept possession of them until they were replevied. No notice of action was given to the defendants, or either of them, before the commencement of the suit. On the 19th of July, 1847, there were two high constables for the borough. Proffitt never had been one. The warrant, under which the distress was made, commenced thus:— "Borough and city of Lichfield." It was directed to Mr. Proffitt and others, and commanded them to levy 77*l*. 16s. 1½d. by distress of the goods of the plaintiff and others; and proceeded, "and if within the space of five days next, after such distress by you taken, the sum of 77*l*. 16s. 1½d. shall not be paid, that then you do sell the said goods," &c. and concluded, "Given under our hands and seals, and under the corporate seal of the said borough and city, this 14th day of August, A.D. 1848. T. Johnson (L.S.); M. B. Morgan (L.S.), justices of the said borough and city. Thomas Johnson, Mayor. (Corporate Seal.)"

The case was argued on the 2nd November, 1850, when judgment was given for the defendants, against which decision the plaintiff now brought his writ of error.

J. Gray, for the plaintiff, after going fully through the pleadings and the facts, as found by the special verdict. First, this rate was bad. By the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 92, "The borough justices are to order a borough-rate, in the nature of a county-rate, to be made within their borough, and for that purpose the council of such borough shall have within their borough all the powers which any justices of the peace assembled at the General or Quarter Sessions have," under the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 1, "or as near thereto as the nature of the case will admit." Now the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 1, authorises county justices "assembled at their General or Quarter Sessions," to make county-rates, to make them in public. Nothing turns upon the exception in the 92nd section of the Municipal Corporation Act; but I do not rely solely upon this; the subsequent Act is a declaratory Act; the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48, recites that doubts existed whether the business of making county-rates should be transacted publicly and in open court, and then goes on to declare and enact, all such business shall, after the passing of that Act, be transacted "publicly and in open court." This being a declaratory Act, shews the construction that ought to be put upon the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, the word "declare" throws a light on the previous Act, and leaves no doubt of the intention of the Legislature. The Municipal Corporation Act was passed after the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48; and in mentioning the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, it must be taken to refer to it as it is required to be read by the subsequent Act. The true meaning of the Act is declared by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48, and the reading of it is settled by that Act. The 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 81, after reciting the Municipal Corporation Act, enacts that the overseers to be appointed shall have the same powers vested in them, and shall be subject to the same regulations, &c. for levying and collecting such rate, as if they had been appointed by any law now in force. This further explains the true reading of the Act, and shews that the subsequent statute, 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48, adds nothing to the law, but only declares its true meaning. Now, what power had the county justices to make a rate? Why, to make it "in public and open court." [MAULE, J.— There is nothing requiring the council to hold the court in public generally.] Whatever may be the case with respect to other matters, in all matters incidental to making rates, the county justices are empowered to make such rates in public; and the same power is to be exercised, "or as near thereto as the nature of the case will admit," by the council. The law provides no means of making the proceedings public afterwards That which is applicable to county justices at Quarter Sessions, is equally applicable here; and there is as much reason for requiring that the proceedings in both cases should be public. The Court below said that the council was not a Court, neither is the Quarter Sessions a Court of Justice when engaged in the business of rates, and that surely was not a satisfactory reason for deciding the case as they did. The rate ought to have been made in public, and as it was not so made, it is bad. Secondly, the rate is retrospective: it is not made to pay expenses to be incurred, but to repay expenses and disbursements already owing. [PATTESON, J.—In this respect the rate is good upon the face of it; if that be so, is it competent for you to take this objection in an action against persons acting under it?] Yes; it often occurs that a man is rated for property he does not possess; the rate may be good upon the face of it, and the justices may have been ignorant of the fact. Yet he is liable in trespass for the error. (Rex v. The Justices of Kent, 10 B. & C. 477.) [COLERIDGE, J.—The rate is not retrospective. MAULE, J.—Is a rate wholly void if only partially retrospective, or is it only subject to appeal?] The 92nd section of the Municipal Corporation Act says, "and in case the borough fund shall not be sufficient for the purposes aforesaid, the council of the borough is hereby authorised and required from time to time to estimate as correctly as may be what amount in addition to such fund will be sufficient for the payment of the expenses to be incurred." [MAULE, J.—You are to pay a number of things out of the borough fund, and if that is insufficient you may make an estimate of what is requisite. The sums received for the purposes of that estimate to be applicable to the purposes to which the original fund might be applied; the Act particularly provides for some expenses previously incurred, and clearly includes some retrospective matters. Salaries to officers are not paid beforehand, and if the fund be insufficient you may raise money by the means there pointed out for the purpose required. Nothing is said in the Act about the amounts being due; the word retrospective is not used.] In consequence of the case of Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777 (and see the note thereon), the Legislature passed the 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 81. That case decided that under the Municipal Corporation Act the council of a borough have no power to make a retrospective rate. In that case the question for the Court was, whether the council of the borough could by virtue of the Municipal Corporation Act legally order a borough rate in the nature of a county rate to be made within their borough, for the payment of expenses which had before then been incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of that Act; and Lord Abinger, C.B. there said, "If the words of the clause were not so clearly prospective we might perhaps take advantage of the ambiguity to give some latitude to their construction; but they are plainly prospective only." The object, then, of the new Act was to get rid of the inconvenience which had arisen by giving notice to parties of what they must guard against in future, and that they must take care to have money in hand to meet expenses. The Municipal Corporation Act gives them full power to have money in hand, this is to be an estimate of expenses to be incurred, and may be made on a liberal scale; but a calculation or estimate of debts already incurred is unnecessary, inasmuch as it can be accurately ascertained. The inconvenience of the present year's ratepayers paying the expenses incurred last year is evident; here the litigation had been going on for years; the Act says the amount is to be estimated, not ascertained, and the estimate may be made at any time they want the money. [ERLE, J.—Is not the meaning of expenses to be incurred, payments to be made?]. The question is, what is the meaning of the words of the Act, and there is no expression in it equivalent to payments to be made. [MAULE, J.—"Expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of this Act," viz. to be incurred after the Act came into operation, not after the estimate.] The purposes of the Act may require expenses to be incurred after the estimate, the borough-fund may be sufficient for past expenses. The Court of Ex. was right in holding that the words "expenses to be incurred" means to be incurred after the estimate. He cited Reg. v. The Justices of Flintshire, 5 B. & Ald. 761; Rex v. The Chapelwardens of Haworth, 12 East, 556; and Cortes v. The Kent Waterworks Company, 7 B. & C. 314. In the last case, Bailey, J. in his judgment, which was delivered after time taken to consider, after fully going into the case, said: "There are two objections to these rates. The first is, that they are retrospective, and have the effect of casting upon the tenants at one period burdens which ought to have fallen on those who were tenants at a preceding period." . . .

"Every one of the gaol rates made by the commissioners under the Woolwich Act was made to pay sums previously paid by them; and the effect of that was to throw the burden of the rate not upon those occupiers who ought to bear it, but upon some other persons who by law were not liable to bear it." . . . . . "These objections to the gaol rates appear to us to be fatal." In that case the rate was good upon the face of it, and no objection was raised on that ground. It is immaterial, however, whether the rate was good on the face of it or not. In that case there was nothing to be done before; here the law requires that an act shall be done, namely, the making an estimate; and if that be not done, the rate is bad. [MAULE, J.—All the Act requires is, that an estimate shall be made, an estimate of such a sum as may be deemed requisite.] The rate is to be made with reference to the sum required by the estimate. The facts of this case shew that damages and costs had been paid to Simpson by the town-clerk of his own accord, and not by their desire; he has no remedy, therefore, against the corporation. The proceedings throughout have been incorrect.

Then the treasurer directs the churchwardens and overseers to pay the sum assessed within hundred days from the receipt of the precept, whereas the warrant of the council requires him to pay it within one hundred days from the date of the warrant to him. The requirements of the Act of Parliament have not been complied with, and the avowry does not shew that the Act of Parliament has been followed; and there is a fatal variance between the avowry and the order in council; if the officer is allowed to depart from the terms of the warrant of the council, he may favour one parish more than another. [Maule, J.—The warrant was served the day and year aforesaid; in that respect, therefore, there was nothing wrong.] It appears by the special verdict that it was not served till the 29th, although dated the same day; but, however it may be, whether the overseers had the full time or not, the Act must be strictly adhered to. The neglect on which the warrant is to issue is the neglect to pay within the time mentioned by the warrant of sessions. The overseers may have no notice of the time, if the high constable or treasurer inserts what date he pleases; the warrant should shew his jurisdiction on the face of it; the proceedings were altogether irregular, and the warrant required by the Act has never issued. [Maule, J.—He only says, "Pay me within a certain time;" you contend that he should have said, "Pay me within a certain time fixed by the Council," so as to give them notice.] Yes; the effect of these proceedings is, that they have had no warrant from Proffitt, and no notice, and that they are, therefore, not liable to a warrant of distress. I pray your Lordship's judgment, on the ground that the avowry is bad, independent of the special verdict. The special verdict sets out the warrant to Proffitt, "within one hundred days," to do certain acts. The Court below said that that might be read as "one hundred days from demand;" but that cannot be so, because if he is to pay the money within one hundred days from the receipt of the warrant, and to receive it within one hundred days from the demand, he would probably be paying it before he received it. The one hundred days mentioned in two places in the mayor's warrant must be read as meaning the same one hundred days. [Coleridge, J.—Would a demand on the 101st be void?] Yes; if the hundred days have elapsed, then the warrant is at an end. Then the overseers are not liable after they are out of office; the distress should be on the overseers in office. A remedy is given by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 12, which, after providing for the distress, provides for the reimbursement of the overseer, which clearly shews that the proceedings should have been against the existing overseers, for those out of office would have no opportunity of reimbursing themselves. The 14th section of that Act gives a right of appeal. Suppose he appeals, and the warrant is running on, and his period of office concludes before the hearing of the appeal; that at the hearing the appeal is decided against him, and a distress issues; in such a case, you make a man pay, without giving him any opportunity of reimbursing himself. [Maule, J.—If the overseer goes out of office after he has paid, his successor "may and shall" make a rate to reimburse him.] There is only one other point which only goes to one avowry. The 7 Wm. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, provides that the warrant shall be under the hand and seal of the mayor or two justices of the peace. Now there is nothing in the body of this warrant to shew that this requirement had been complied with. The corporate seal and the mayor's signature was a nullity—it could not be looked upon as a ministerial act. Having once signed and sealed it there was an end of their authority. At first it might be valid, but any further act might vitiate, but cannot alter, the character of the document.

The Court said there were a great many points in the case, and at present they would not hear Keating and Whitmore for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Friday, Feb. 6.—Patteson, J.—In this case, which was argued last term, the first objection taken was that the borough-rate for which the distress was made, was not made in public. The power to make such a rate is given by the 92nd section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 76, by which it is enacted that "the council shall have all the powers which any justices of the peace assembled at their general or Quarter Sessions in any county in England have within the limits of their commission by virtue of the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, or as near thereto as the nature of the case will admit; and all warrants required by the said Act to be issued under the hands and seals of two or more justices shall in like case be signed by the mayor, and sealed with the seal of the borough." The 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, directs the county-rate to be made by the justices at sessions, but is silent as to its being made in public. It seems that a practice had prevailed, by which the business required to be transacted by the justices at general or quarter sessions was conducted in private, and to remedy this the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48, was passed, and which enacts that all business appertaining to county-rates shall be done and transacted publicly and in open court; and if done otherwise it should not be binding or effectual. This latter statute is not referred to, in terms, by the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 92, and it is contended by counsel for the plaintiff that, as it is a declaratory Act, and has put a construction upon the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, it therefore, on reference to that Act, obliges the town council of any borough to make a borough-rate in public. Now, the town council of a borough are a representative body, but the justices at sessions are not. There is, also, no clause throughout the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, which requires any of the proceedings of the town council to be conducted in public, nor have they any general or open court in which they transact business. It may well be, therefore, that the Legislature purposely omitted any reference to the 4 & 5 Wm. 4 in the 5 & 6 Wm. 4. But the words of the 92nd section are, "as near thereto as the nature of the case will admit," and the nature of the case will not admit of the town council transacting their business publicly in open court, they not having such a court. Whether the acting publicly in open court is part of the power given to justices at sessions, be the true construction or not of the section, we have no provision ordering the making of a borough-rate by the council to be in public. The second objection is, that though the rate in question is good on the face of it, yet that it is void, because the estimate of expenses for defraying which the rate is made, includes some expenses already incurred; and the case of Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777, is cited as a direct authority on this point. The 92nd section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, speaks of borough-funds, and in the early part of it specifies the purposes to which the borough-fund shall be applied, amongst others, in the payment of various expenses incurred under the provisions of the Act. Such expenses must necessarily have been incurred before the application of the borough-fund in payment of them. Therefore that part of the section clearly affords an answer to the question now before us. The section contemplates the borough-fund arising from the ordinary revenues of the borough being more than sufficient for the purposes specified, and provides for the application of the surplus: it then contemplates the borough-fund being insufficient for the purposes specified, and it provides in that case "the council of the borough is hereby authorised and required from time to time to estimate, as correctly as may be, what amount, in addition to such fund, will be sufficient for the payment of the expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect the provisions of this Act," and to raise the amount by a rate; "and all such sums levied in pursuance of such borough-rate shall be paid over to the account of the borough-fund." The Court of Ex. in Woods v. Reed construed those words "to be incurred" in reference to the time of the making of the rate, and by analogy to the cases of poor-rates and church-rates, which cannot be made retrospectively for the payment of charges or expenses, but must be prospective; and they held that a rate made by the town-council for bygone expenses would vitiate a rate otherwise good upon the face of it. The principle recognised in the case of church-rates is, that the rate-payers ought to be liable only for expenses incurred whilst they are rate-payers, and are not to be contributory to those incurred before they become so. This seems applicable to the case of a borough-rate equally with any other; but still it may be that the words "to be incurred" used in this section may have reference, not to the time of the making of the rate, but to the time of the passing of the Act. If this be the true construction, the case of Woods v. Reed cannot be supported. But without decidedly determining that point, we think there are other answers to this objection which render it untenable. In the first place the special verdict does not distinctly shew that the items objected to in the estimate were properly bygone expenses. They appear to be sums paid by way of compensation to the former town-clerk, the amount of which could not be told at the time of the making of the rate, but which were still under litigation; also the expenses of various litigations which were at that time not fully ascertained; part, therefore, would be paid by the town-clerk of his own accord and out of his own funds, and part would come into the estimate of the amount required to be raised. Some latitude must, therefore, be allowed, and particularly in cases of litigation the council may be justified in treating them as expenses not actually incurred before the delivery of the solicitor's bill. It does not clearly appear those sums were bygone expenses. In the next place, the rate being good upon the face of it, and unpaid, the defendants, acting only as justices, and not having made either the rate or the estimate, were justified in issuing their warrant of distress, and the plaintiff cannot say the rate is bad as regards them. It is not said the plaintiff was not a person liable to be rated; and even if the rate be wrong, he cannot raise that question in this action. This point was not taken in Woods v. Reed. If the plaintiff be aggrieved by the rate he may appeal to the recorder of the borough under the 92nd section. The third objection is, that the warrant of the treasurer to the overseers does not fix the same time as the warrant of the mayor to the treasurer, the latter being 100 days after demand, and the former on receipt of the treasurer's warrant; and it is contended that the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 12, requires the same time to be specified in each in a clear and positive manner; and that the treasurer's warrant is altogether void if it does not agree in this respect with that of the mayor. This objection is shaped in two ways. First, with regard to the avowry itself; secondly, with regard to the finding in the special verdict. The avowry states in substance that the council, to wit, on the 19th of July, made a rate and appointed a treasurer to collect it, and ordered the overseers to pay it out of the poor-rates, but does not mention any time; and then it says—"The mayor, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, made a warrant to the treasurer, commanding him, within 100 days, to demand, collect, and receive the money from the overseers;" and thereupon the treasurer made his warrant to the overseers, and thereby demanded that within 100 days next after the receipt thereof they should pay the money; and that afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, a copy of such warrant was left at the house of and received by the plaintiff. It is argued that this avowry can only be supported by treating the day mentioned as immaterial, by which it would appear that both warrants were on the same day. The warrant by the treasurer was received on the day of the date, and so 100 days from that date, or 100 days from the receipt, would embrace precisely the same time. If it did not, the warrant of the treasurer, according to the argument, would be void. But then, if the avowry be so construed, the finding of the special verdict that it was received on the 29th of July, would shew that the avowry was not proved. This argument proceeds on the supposition that the warrant of the treasurer would, if it did not correspond exactly as to the time of payment with that of the mayor, be void under the provisions of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 12. But we are of opinion that the statute is in that respect directory; and whatever might have been the case if the time had been abridged, the warrant is not vitiated by the extension of the time, as no distress could be made till the more extended time mentioned in it. However, this is not strictly material, and whether or not it might be open to special demurrer, it is good after verdict unless there is any variance. We may observe that the mayor's warrant does in truth give the extended time, because it directs the treasurer to apply for a distress-warrant if the money be not paid within 100 days, demand having been first made; the fair meaning of which is, 100 days after demand made. The fourth objection arises on the demurrer to the fifth plea in bar, namely, the plaintiff being out of office at the time of the distress, is not liable to have his goods seized. An answer was given in argument, and acquiesced in by the council for the plaintiff, that the distress is given for the offender's goods, and the plaintiff was the offender, and by the statute the subsequent overseers can make a rate to reimburse him. A fifth objection took place (which is in truth only a question of costs), and it was contended that the avowry was not supported, for the warrant of distress having been signed by the defendant Johnson, as a justice, he could not afterwards sign it as mayor; but we are of opinion that he may act in both characters, and the warrant is not less the warrant of the mayor because it is also that of the justice. On these grounds the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

Reported by David Cato Macrae, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, March 25.

Re John Wolsey.

Effect of the new law of evidence—The costs of a nonsuit may be treated as a debt incurred or contracted by the plaintiff.

This insolvent to day received his adjudication. The history of the case it is unnecessary to give more fully than is indicated in the judgment, and only that portion of the judgment is given which has reference to the legal matter involved.

Mr. Commissioner Law said, the effect of the new law of evidence, by which a party has the option to be his own witness, is beneficial or injurious, according as the testimony admitted by it may be true or false. The other innovation, which requires a man to become his adversary's witness, will commonly be subservient to truth. Those who are ready to gain an unjust end by other means, will sometimes shrink from committing perjury themselves. The case before us furnishes a peculiar instance of the operation of this new law. The invitations to the adversary to come forth and give evidence were mutual. On the one part it was meant to frighten and extort money. On the other part, it was given in the desire to expose a fraud. The result was, that the honest man stood up to the combat; the other ran away. We do not know what sort of evidence the plaintiff would have produced, nor what particular facts he would have related himself, if Mr. Dayrell had withdrawn from the annoyance of an examination, and not answered to the call. On first bringing forward the demand, the plaintiff wrote letters threatening to placard him and expose him at his club, and, still relying on extortion, he had the impudence to subpœna Mr. Dayrell as a witness, and declared that, if the defendant appeared in court, he would give him such an exposure as would disgrace him for life; thus at the same time bullying him with a subpœna, and seeking to deter him from obeying it. But he was defeated with his own weapons: he was himself subpœnaed by the defendant, and the result was as I have stated. In 1846 the insolvent was a petitioner of this Court. His schedule did not contain Mr. Dayrell as a debtor. On that occasion he lodged 100*l*. for 1,700*l*. as a voucher for money which he said was owing to him from some other person. Now he says that he had Mr. Dayrell's 100*l*. in his possession at that time; but never thought of it, and adds that he supposed him to be dead or abroad. One cannot doubt that it has been manufactured since that time. Mr. Dayrell's solicitor swears that it is not in that gentleman's hand-writing; and that his name is wrongly spelt. It is without a date. The insolvent says that he saw him write it in the presence of a dozen persons. What, then, but a consciousness of falsehood, should have prevented him from standing up to swear to it, when the law both entitled him and invited him to do so? It is too late that he should to-day venture to speak in support of his claim: he cannot expect to be believed. This observation arises, that a man who has shrunk from committing perjury . . Westminster-hall, finds himself driven to it here. There he wanted the courage to tell his false tale. Here he wants the better courage to renounce it. He cannot here decline to be a witness; a petitioner for liberty must seek it through his own evidence. In repeating the story which he dared not repeat before a jury, he chooses what he probably thinks to be the least of two evils. It is not the least, though the alternative was undoubtedly a painful one. Mr. Nicholls has very properly pointed to a doubt which may possibly be entertained, whether this debt for costs can be treated as a debt contracted by the insolvent. I remember the same question to have been made many years ago on the meaning of the expression "debts incurred." At that time the law disabled a man from receiving a discharge within five years after a prior insolvency or bankruptcy, unless he could shew that his new debts . . necessarily incurred, &c. But it was urged that a plaintiff who, failing in his action, was adjudged to pay costs, had not incurred that debt, because those costs . . against him without his wish or assent—and that it was therefore not a debt whose necessity he was called upon to shew. It seemed to me, and seems so still, that a man who has become indebted through a transaction, in which he not only acted with his own free will, but of which he was the sole originator, must be deemed to have incurred and contracted such debt. In that case the insolvent had been resisting his bankruptcy by bringing wanton actions against the assignees, actions justified on no legal . honest principle . . failed, and was in custody for costs: and it was held that he had incurred those debts unnecessarily. So in the present case I consider that the insolvent has contracted the debt for costs unnecessarily, and worse than unnecessarily. The action was brought in the mere spirit of wrong, and this debt is the fruit of an unjust and vicious attempt to obtain money through an abuse of the law: an attempt which, if contrived by two, would have been an indictable conspiracy. Made by one, it is an act of fraud, and by means of this act the large debt for costs has been contracted. Moreover, it was contracted without the prospect or intention of paying it; for among the threats employed was this: that if the plaintiff should not succeed, he would immediately take the benefit of the Insolvent Act. The insolvent will be discharged forthwith as to other creditors; and as to Mr. Dayrell, when he shall have been in custody at his suit for a period of twelve calendar months from the vesting order.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Worcester, March 8.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

REG. v. NEW[ALL].

Perjury—Evidence—Proof of charge before justices, upon the hearing of which perjury is alleged.

The defendant was indicted for perjury alleged to have been committed by him on the hearing before justices of a summons charging him with being the father of an illegitimate child:

Held, that, to support the indictment, it was necessary to give evidence of the charge made by the mother, either by production of the original order made thereon, or by giving secondary evidence of the summons after notice to the defendant to produce it, and that, in the absence of such notice, it was not sufficient to produce the minutes of the proceedings by the clerk to the justices, those minutes being of no greater authority than the notes of a shorthand writer.

The defendant was indicted for perjury. The indictment alleged that "at a Petty Sessions of the Peace holden in and for the borough of Kidderminster, in the said county [of Worcester], on the 6th day of February, A.D. 1852, before William Boycott, the younger, William Nicholls, and Henry Talbot, esquires, justices of our said lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace in and for the said borough, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanours in the said borough committed, Richard Newall appeared in pursuance of a certain summons requiring him to answer any complaint which one Ann Jones should then and there make against him touching her having been delivered of a bastard child, of which she alleged him to be the father, and for the maintenance whereof she had given proof that he did, within twelve calendar months after its birth, pay money; and the said Richard Newall then and there, upon the hearing of the said complaint, offered himself as a witness for and on behalf of himself, the said Richard Ne[wall], and was then and there duly sworn," &c. The indictment then proceeded to allege, that upon the said hearing certain questions therein specified became and were material; that the defendant swore in the negative of those questions, and proceeding in the usual manner to affirm the truth of the propositions, negativing what the defendant had sworn.

On the part of the prosecution, the magistrates' clerk was called as a witness. He produced a book containing the minutes made by him of the examination of the witnesses before the magistrates. The entry was headed

"Ann Jones
v. } Affiliation."
Richard Newall,

The evidence was then set out.

"Ann Jones, sworn," &c. "I first became acquainted," &c. "Richard Newall, the defendant, sworn, says:—I know the complainant," &c.

It being admitted that there was no other evidence forthcoming of the proceedings before the justices, Huddleston, for the defendant, submitted that the original summons must be produced, or notice to produce it served on the defendant.

[Pow]ell, for the prosecution, submitted that that was not necessary, and cited Reg. v. Newman, 21 L. J. 75, M.C.; where, on an indictment for perjury at the Central Criminal Court, charging the prisoner with having committed the perjury on the trial of one D. on a previous indictment for a misdemeanour in the same Court, it was held that the minutes and entries of the trial of D. made by the officer of the Court, and produced by him on the trial of the indictment for perjury, were good evidence to prove that D. had been so tried, as alleged, and that it was not necessary to produce any record or certificate of the trial of D. In the present case, moreover, the Court would take judicial notice of the statute giving justices the power to hear the complaint of the mothers of illegitimate children, and to make orders upon the putative fathers for their maintenance.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The statute provides that, upon complaint by the mother, the justice shall have power to summon the putative father before him, and, upon the appearance of the person so summoned, or upon proof of the service of such summons, to hear and adjudicate upon the case. A summons is therefore necessary to give the magistrate jurisdiction, and to prove that they had jurisdiction in this case you must prove that the defendant was duly summoned either by production of the summons or by secondary evidence after notice to the defendant to produce it. The minutes of examination in this case are no more than the minutes of a short-hand writer, and only answer the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness.

The witness, in answer to questions put to him by the learned judge, said that the magistrates made an order on the defendant. There were three original orders. One original order was deposited with the clerk of the peace, another was served on the defendant, and the third was kept by the person serving him. No notice to produce had been given to the defendant of either the summons or order, and neither of the other orders were in court.

WIGHTMAN, J.—What evidence is there of the charge? If you could shew the woman's charge, then the witness might state what the defendant said. But here you have neither the woman's charge, the summons, nor any notice to produce, nor the order, but a mere note of the evidence.

Powell applied to have the trial postponed, in order that the necessary evidence might be procured, but

WIGHTMAN, J. refused the application, the defendant being in charge. (To the jury.)—It is to be regretted that the ends of justice may be defeated in this case, but the evidence is deficient for want of a notice to the defendant to produce.

The defendant was accordingly acquitted.

TIMMINS and WIFE v. GIBBINS, P.O.

Assumpsit—Money lent—Liability of trustee on deposit accounts, where amount paid in promissory notes of a bank dishonoured on presentment.

Where money was deposited in a bank, and the bankers agreed to pay 3 per cent. interest, and gave the depositor a deposit receipt, with a memorandum at the foot, "with 3 per cent. at 14 days' notice:"

Held, that this did not support an allegation in a plea that the money was to be repaid to the depositor on request.

The money so deposited by the plaintiff consisted of notes of R. and Co.'s bank, and payable at S. or in London, and the notes were presented in London on the following day, and dishonoured; but would have been paid if presented at S. (a short distance from the bank into which they were paid by the plaintiff) on the same day.

Quære, whether the bankers could set up the presentation and dishonour in London in answer to an action for money lent.

This was an action of assumpsit, brought to recover the sum of 80*l*.

The declaration was for money lent by Mary, the wife of the plaintiff, while sole and unmarried, to the Birmingham and Dudley Banking Company, with a count for interest, and on an account stated. The defendant pleaded, except as to 15*l*. (which was paid into court), non assumpsit, and also a special plea that the 65*l*. were deposited by Mary Timmins, when single, in the bank on a deposit account, to be repaid on request with three per cent. interest, and that the amount was paid in notes of Rufford and Co.'s Stourbridge Bank, which were made payable on demand at Glyn and Co.'s, London; that the defendant duly presented the notes at Glyn and Co.'s, and they were dishonoured, of which the plaintiff had notice.

Keating, Q.C. and Gray for the plaintiffs.

Alexander, Q.C. and Chance for the defendant.

The plaintiffs proved(a) the payment of the money in notes to the Dudley branch of the bank, and produced the banker's receipt, in the following form:—"Received of Mary Weale, 80*l*. for which we are accountable;" with a memorandum at the foot, "with three per cent. at fourteen days' notice." The money was paid in about eleven o'clock in the forenoon of the 26th of June, 1851. On the 13th of January, 1852, the plaintiffs gave fourteen days' notice, and on the 29th made a formal demand of the money. The defendant had previously offered the notes to the plaintiffs, but refused to pay the amount in money, on the ground that they had been presented at Messrs. Glyn and Co.'s and payment refused by them. It was admitted by the defendant that the notes of Rufford's bank were paid at Stourbridge, distant seven miles from Dudley, throughout the whole of the 26th of June, the bank there not stopping payment until the 27th.

Alexander, in addressing the jury, said the question in this case was one rather of law than of fact. 65*l*. of the 80*l*. paid by the plaintiff were in notes of Rufford and Co.'s bank, payable at Stourbridge, or at Glyn and Co.'s, London. He should prove that the notes were sent up to London immediately, and presented on the morning of the 27th at Glyn and Co.'s, and payment refused. Notice of that fact was given to the defendant, and the notes offered to be returned. Under these circumstances, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict. This was not a new point, but had been decided by Sir Vicary Gibbs, in the case of Beeching v. Gower, Holt's N.P. Cas. 313. That was an action for money had and received, and it appeared that a note of a country bank, payable in the country and in London was given, while the bank continued open, but subsequently failed. Sir Vicary Gibbs held that the notes might be presented at either place, if done in due time. So in this case he submitted that the defendant had the option of sending the notes either to the country bank at Stourbridge, or to Glynn and Co.'s, London, and that having been presented without laches, and dishonoured at the latter place, the defendant was entitled to the verdict.

Witnesses were called to prove the special plea. Mr. Richard Henry Smith, the manager of the Dudley branch of the Birmingham and Dudley Banking Company, proved that 65*l.* of the money paid in by the plaintiff, Mary, was in 5*l.* notes of Rufford and Co.'s bank, the remaining 15*l.* being in Bank of England notes. The witness sent these notes of Rufford's bank by the same night's post to Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co. the London agents of the Birmingham and Dudley Bank, to be presented at Messrs. Glyn and Co.'s. On the 28th the notes were received back dishonoured, and notice of dishonour given to the plaintiff, Mary, by letter. The notes were subsequently tendered to her.

On cross-examination, the witness said the receipt given for the money was a deposit receipt, and the notice in the corner signified that fourteen days' notice must be given, in the ordinary course of business, before it could be withdrawn. Two other notes of Rufford's bank were sent up to London with those in question, being the whole of the notes of that bank received at Dudley on the 26th of June. A clerk of Messrs. Lloyd and Co. proved the presentment and dishonour of the notes at Messrs. Glyn and Co.'s on the 27th, and their return to the Birmingham and Dudley Bank.

This being the defendant's case,

Keating objected that the defendant's plea was not made out. The plea stated that the notes were deposited and kept to be paid to the plaintiff on request. The proof was that fourteen days' notice was necessary before the money could be demanded.

[WIGHTMAN, J.—Payment on fourteen days' notice is certainly not an agreement to pay on request.]

Alexander applied to have the plea amended.

Keating and Gray resisted. Issue was taken on this very averment in the plea. If the plea had stated, in accordance with the facts, that the money was payable at fourteen days' notice, the plaintiff would have demurred to the plea. With respect to the liability of the defendants the law was laid down in Camidge v. Allenby, 6 Barn. & Cress. Rep. 373, that if a pre-existing debt was paid under the circumstances of this case, the creditor might set up the dishonour of the notes; but only in that particular case, and not in other cases, as where the parties stood in the relation of borrower and lender.(a)

[WIGHTMAN, J.—That point arises equally whether the money was to be repaid with or without fourteen days' notice.] Since the case of Camidge v. Allenby, other cases had occurred which rendered the distinction important between a loan for a fixed period and where the amount is payable at call.

WIGHTMAN, J. intimated his opinion that as there were no laches on the part of the defendants in endeavouring to obtain money for the notes by presenting them, and they were dishonoured, and the notes were originally received on the belief by all parties that they would be paid, there was a failure of consideration for the defendant's promise to pay with fourteen days notice, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

[It was ultimately arranged that the jury should be discharged from giving a verdict on the special plea, and that a verdict should be taken for the defendant on the plea of non-assumpsit, with liberty to the plaintiffs to move to enter a verdict for them on that issue.]

Gloucester, March 29.
(Before Mr. Baron PLATT.)
REG. v. DAY.

Evidence—Depositions—Admissibility of depositions in the absence of the witness under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17.

Before a deposition of a person who is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, can be read on the trial, under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, it must be proved affirmatively on the part of the prosecution that the deposition was taken in the presence of the accused person, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness.

To give the accused a full opportunity within the meaning of the statute, the examination must be taken, question by question, in his presence, and in the presence of the magistrate, and it is not sufficient to read over the statement of the witness, previously taken and committed to writing, in the absence of the magistrate.

The accused must also be asked whether he has any question to put with reference to the statement of the individual witness.

To render the deposition of an absent person admissible it is not necessary that he should be absolutely unable to travel, it is sufficient if his attendance would place his life in jeopardy.

The prisoner was indicted for larceny as a servant. Her mistress, Keturah Cornhill, the prosecutrix, was alleged to be unable to attend in consequence of illness, and in order to allow of her deposition taken before the committing magistrate, being read as evidence on the trial under the provisions of the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, a medical witness was called, who stated that he visited the prosecutrix the previous afternoon at her house, a distance of several miles from Gloucester, and found her suffering from bronchitis. She was sitting up in a chair, supported by pillows. The witness examined her, and remained about half an hour, and he was of opinion that her life would be endangered if she was brought into court. On cross-examination he stated that he was not her ordinary medical attendant, but visited her for the purpose of ascertaining whether she was in a fit state to attend and give her evidence.

A relative, a great nephew of the prosecutrix, corroborated this evidence. He said his aunt was about sixty years of age, and had been an invalid for some years. She was confined to her bed the day before the visit of the medical witness, but was rather better the next day. She was wrapped in flannel, but he did not hear her cough. Her usual medical attendant had seen her on the day she was confined to her bed, but he was unable to attend at Gloucester to give evidence, being in daily attendance on Lord Dynevor. The witness thought his relative was quite unable to attend as a witness.

W. H. Cooke, for the prisoner, submitted that the evidence was insufficient. The statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, s. 17, required the proof to be that the witness "so ill as not to be able to travel." The evidence amounted to nothing more than that it would be imprudent for the prosecutrix to attend, or at most that she was unfit to travel, and not such a total inability as the statute required. This was a new provision, and ought to be applied with great care and strict-

PLATT, B. It is sworn that the attendance of the witness would endanger her life. Each case must of course be governed by its own circumstances. Here enough has been shewn to render the deposition admissible.

Huddleston then applied to have it read by the officer of the court, but PLATT, B.—Something further is necessary. You must shew that the deposition was taken conformably with the statute.

The magistrate's clerk was called. He stated that the prisoner was present with her father when the deposition of the prosecutrix was taken. The magistrate asked the prisoner whether she had any questions to put; but there was a little uncertainty in the evidence of this witness whether she was so asked with reference to the particular examination of the prosecutrix, or whether it was a general question at the end of the examination of another witness.

A police officer was then examined. He was a witness on the same occasion. He could not recollect whether the prisoner was asked if she had any questions to put to the prosecutrix; but he disclosed the fact that the examinations of the witnesses were taken and committed to writing by the clerk previously to the arrival of the magistrate, that they were then read over in the presence and hearing of all parties, and that it was then, if at all, that the prisoner was asked if she had any questions to put to the prosecutrix.

PLATT, B. expressed his opinion that the deposition was inadmissible.

Huddleston submitted that the statute had been sufficiently complied with, if the deposition appeared on the face of it to be regularly taken. The statute provides that "If such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that that the magistrate did his duty properly. The onus of shewing that she had not an opportunity lay on the prisoner, and there was nothing in the facts proved inconsistent with her having that full opportunity.

PLATT, B.—How could it suggest itself to the prisoner that she had a right to put questions? It was the duty of the magistrate to ask her, and it must be proved that he did so, and did so with reference to the examination of the particular witness. The words of the statute are—"If upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid it shall be proved, by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, and if also it be proved that such deposition was taken in the presence of the person so accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, then if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition," &c. Until the question was asked her, I am of opinion she had no opportunity of cross-examination within the meaning of the statute, and the evidence is not satisfactory on that point. But on another ground the prisoner had not a full opportunity of cross-examination. The examination of the witness being taken and put into writing before the arrival of the magistrate, the reading it over in his presence could not give the prisoner a proper opportunity of cross-examination. She had a right to hear the evidence given step by step, and so to have time to consider what questions to put. I cannot allow the deposition to be read.

There not being sufficient evidence without the deposition of the prosecutrix, the prisoner was acquitted.

Cambridge, March 12.
(Before Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. and a Special Jury.)
REG. v. CROSS.

Quo warranto—Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63—Construction of—Election for local Board—Chairman—Nature of office—Evidence.

The defendant in a quo warranto is a competent witness to prove his qualification.

The office of the chairman or returning officer at an election under the Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 93, is judicial and not merely ministerial. The result of the poll as certified by him under the Act is final and conclusive, precluding all future scrutiny.

Query, whether, in the absence of the chairman, the appointment of a substitute or returning officer ought not to be under the seal of the local board and signature of five members of the body.

Semble, that this irregularity appointed by a minute signed by the chairman alone, it will be sufficient to prove that the person so appointed acted as returning officer at the election.

This was a quo warranto calling on the defendant to shew by what authority he claimed to exercise the office of a member of the local board of health for the city of Ely. The defendant pleaded that he was duly elected to such office.

Prendergast, Q.C. and Worlledge appeared for the relators, Mr. John Haylock.

Byles, Serjt. (with him O'Malley, Q.C. and Wells) was counsel for the defendant, and as the affirmative of the issue raised was on the defendant, the learned serjeant stated the facts of the case, which would ultimately raise some new and important points for the consideration of the Court. In 1848 the Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, passed, and in accordance with the forms therein prescribed, its provisions were applied to the city of Ely in the same year. By one of the sections of that Act, one third of the local board go out of office every year, and accordingly, in 1851, an election was held to make good five vacancies so created, the outgoing members being re-eligible. By the 13th the electors for non-corporate districts, such as Ely, are "owners of property" therein, and the ratepayers. Among the five members then elected, Mr. Cross, the defendant, stood the lowest, the relator, Mr. Haylock having polled only five below him. That gentleman being anxious to defeat the election of Mr. Cross, applied to the Court of Q. B. for this rule, which was made absolute without argument on the last day of the Term at eleven o'clock at night. It was apprehended that the election was conducted in a strictly legal manner, so that the relator could not impeach it in law; and it was submitted that it was not open to him to enter upon a scrutiny of the votes here as the certificate of the chairman or returning officer of the number of votes ascertained by him for each candidate was final and conclusive, his office being not merely ministerial, but judicial. If that be the proper view of the Act, then the defendant would be entitled to a verdict on this issue. The question thus raised is new and important, turning on the construction to be placed on several sections of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. Of these the first is the 21st section, which enacts that "at every election of owners of property and ratepayers, the chairman of the local board of health . . . . shall have the powers and perform the duties vested in or imposed upon the said chairman by this Act in relation to any such election, and shall perform all other duties which it may be requisite for him to perform in conducting and completing elections under this Act, and in case the office of chairman shall be vacant at the time when any such power or duty must be executed or performed; or in case the chairman, ... from illness or other sufficient cause, shall be unable to exercise or discharge such powers or duties, or shall be absent, or shall refuse to act, some other person who shall be appointed . . . . by the local board of health shall exercise or perform such of the said powers and duties as then remain to be exercised or performed under this section." Dr. Peacock, the chairman, being ill, Mr. Marshall, the clerk of the local board, was appointed by the board to act as returning officer at the election of 1851. The question is, what were the powers of Mr. Marshall? The defendant contends that they were of a judicial nature, and he so contends, on the 27th section, which clearly indicates that the decision of that officer on the validity of the votes is meant to be final and conclusive. By this section it is enacted, that "the chairman shall, on the day immediately following the day of election, and on as many days immediately succeeding as may be necessary, attend at the office of the local board of health, and ascertain the validity of the votes by an examination of the rate-books and such other books and documents as he may think necessary, and by examining such persons as he may see fit, and he shall cast up such of the votes as he shall find to be valid, and to have been duly given, collected, or received, and ascertain the number of such votes for each candidate, and the candidates, to the number to be elected, who being duly qualified, shall have obtained the greatest number of votes shall be deemed to be elected, and shall be certified as such by the said chairman under his hand, and to each person so elected the chairman shall send or deliver notice of such election; and the said chairman shall also cause to be made a list containing the names of the candidates, together with, in case of a contest, the number of votes given for each, and the names of the persons elected, and shall sign and certify the same, and shall deliver such list, together with the nomination and voting paper which he shall have received, to the Local Board of Health at their first or next meeting, as the case may be, who shall cause the same to be deposited in their office, and the same shall, during office hours thereat, be kept open to public inspection, together with all other document relating to the election, for six months after the election shall have taken place, without fee or reward; and the said chairman shall cause such list to be printed, and copies thereof to be affixed at the usual places for affixing notices of parochial business within the parts for which the election shall have been made." It will be seen that the duties cast upon the returning officer are of a strictly judicial character. He is to examine the voting papers, and ascertain such of the votes as he shall find to be valid, and then to certify the result. With such duties it is impossible that the Legislature can possibly have meant to give to the unsuccessful candidates a power of ripping open the election and of entering upon a fresh scrutiny. Yet this the relators now seek to do.

(a) In Camidge v. Allenby, the vendee of goods delivered to the vendor bank notes as and for payment. At the time of the sale of the goods, the bank had not stopped, but it had stopped at the time of the delivery of the notes, but neither party was aware of it. The plaintiff not having presented the notes in due time (although if he had done so he would not have obtained cash), it was held that he could not recover the price. It was not the decision in this case so much as the opinion expressed in the judgment of the Court that the plaintiff's counsel in the case in the text relied upon. Bayley, J. said, "If the notes had been given to the plaintiff at the time when the corn was sold, he could have had no remedy upon them against the defendant. The plaintiff might have insisted upon payment in money; but if he consented to receive the notes as money, they would have been taken by him at his peril. If, indeed, he could shew fraud or knowledge of the maker's insolvency in the payer, then it would be wholly immaterial whether they were taken at the time of sale or afterwards. Here the notes were given to him in payment subsequently, and the question is, whether they operate as a discharge of the debt due to the plaintiff in respect of the corn. The rule as to all negotiable instruments is, that if they are taken in payment of a pre-existing debt, they operate as a discharge of that debt unless the party who holds the instrument does all that the law requires to be done in order to obtain payment of them." Holroyd, J. went further, and intimated his opinion that although the notes were not given at the time of the sale, they were taken as money:—"The notes were paid by the defendant and received by the plaintiff as money, and having been paid and received as money, and both parties being innocent, and the notes being what they imported to be, it seems to me that they must operate as payment."

Mr. Marshall, the clerk of the Local Board of Health at Ely, was then called, and deposed as follows:—I am a solicitor. In 1848 the Health of Towns Act was applied to the city of Ely, and in March, 1851, there was an election of five members of the local board. Dr. Peacock, the dean, was the chairman at first, but he being ill, it became necessary that a person should be appointed in his place as returning officer to conduct the election. I was appointed to that office by a minute of the board. This is the minute of my appointment. It is signed by the chairman alone, and is not under the seal of the body.

Prendergast then objected that this was an illegal mode of appointment. The 149th section required that the appointment should be "under the seal of the local board, and should be signed by five members of the board." The 35th section enacts that "the local board in the case of a new corporate district (which this was), should cause to be made a seal for the use of such board in the execution of this Act." The 21st section, already referred to, treats of the appointment of deputy-chairman for an election by the local board of health. Now the question is, how that appointment is to be made. It is submitted that it falls within the 149th section, and ought to be under the seal of the board. That section enacts that "Whenever the consent, sanction, or approval, or authority of the local board of health is required by the provisions of the Act, the same shall, in the case of a non-corporate district, be under their seal and the hands of five or more of them." Mr. Marshall seems to have been appointed by a minute of the board, signed at a meeting by the chairman, which was wholly insufficient and unwarranted by the Act.

Byles, Serjt.—If the objection is persisted in, I shall withdraw the formal appointment, and content myself with proving that Mr. Marshall acted in the office. Evidence withdrawn.

Mr. Marshall continued.—Dr. Peacock being too ill to attend, I acted as returning officer in his place, at the election of March 1851. I caused voting papers to be distributed and to be collected; I examined them on the same day as the election, and on the following days, and ascertained the validity of the votes given for each candidate. Having done so, I signed this certificate. I came to a decision on the validity of the votes on all sides. I ascertained the number of valid votes for each candidate. I then gave notice to the elected candidates, and made out a list of all the candidates, and the number of votes each had, which I published. At the first meeting after the election I returned the examination papers and the voting papers to the Board.

Cross-examined by Prendergast.—The votes were cast up in my office, as the Board has not any fixed office; yet, though they usually meet in the hall, as I was clerk, and had all the papers in my possession, the Board met at office as a matter of convenience.

Mr. Cross, the defendant, was then called as a witness, but Prendergast objected to his reception.—This was not a case to which the new Evidence Act was applicable.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. Mr. Cross is clearly a competent witness. He comes within the enacting clause of the section, and does not fall within the exceptionary clauses. He may be examined, therefore, as a witness in this case.

Mr. Cross then proved his qualification, and the signature to the declaration required by the Act. This being the ca for the defendant, Prendergast, Q.C. submitted that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the defendant had been duly elected. The proceedings were altogether irregular. There had not been sufficient notice of the election, as required by the 23rd and 24th sections of the Act; nor was there any evidence of the nomination of the candidates, nor was the appointment of Mr. Marshall proved, as required by the Act.

Byles, Serjt. submitted that these objections were not open to the relator, as they were not made in the rule nisi in which this rule absolute proceeded; and, by the general rule of the Courts, it is provided that the party objecting in such proceedings shall be confined to the objections taken in his rule nisi.

Worlledge, for the relator.—The rule only extended to the pleadings, and does not limit the objections on the evidence. These objections are all founded on the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the issue "duly elected or not."

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I was at first inclined to agreed with my brother Byles, and to restrain the relator, but I think the suggestion now thrown out is entitled to consideration, and removes him from his ground. Without, however, giving any definite opinion on the construction of this rule, which is very doubtful, I think it would be better if we were to discuss and decide the main question in the case, namely, whether the certificate of Mr. Marshall is final.

Prendergast, Q.C.—There was one other objection, and that was to the place of meeting. The Act directs the board to meet for the election at its office, but it seems that the election took place in the private room of Mr Marshall.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The clause is merely directory. The local board must meet somewhere, and if they have no regular office, there is no reason why they should not meet at that of the clerk. You had better go to the question on the certificate.

Prendergast and Worlledge then proceeded to submit that the decision of Mr. Marshall, admitting him to be properly the "returning officer," was not final and conclusive. There are provisions in the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 35, similar to those in the Health of Towns Act, and under those it had been held, that the decision of the mayor and assessors was not conclusive; but that the duty of the returning officer was merely ministerial. They cited R. v Ledgard, 8 Ad. & Ell. 545, and argued that, supposing for the sake of argument that Mr. Marshall was duly appointed, his certificate is not final and conclusive. He could only examine those voters who were willing to be examined by him, and had no power to compel attendance or the production of documents. The Act says, that parties claiming to vote as owners of property shall send in their claim fourteen days before the election; but the returning officer has no power authentically to prove or disprove such claims. He cannot compel them to verify their votes before him, or to produce their title-deeds. His certificate may, therefore, proceed on the most superficial examination of the votes. If his certificate was meant to be final, there would be no necessity or reason for the clause in the 27th section, which requires the board to preserve the voting papers for six months after the election.

Byles, Serjt. contrà, was not called on.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am clearly of opinion that the certificate of Mr. Marshall is conclusive, as far as the validity of the votes is concerned. I quite concur with R. v. Ledgard; but the two Acts are dissimilar. The 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, is so framed expressly as to make the duty of the mayor as returning officer merely ministerial. The Legislature observed the inconvenience of that enactment, and seems to have cautiously worded the section in the Health of Towns Act, so as to make the office of returning officer not merely ministerial, but also judicial. And I am at a loss to see what words could have been employed better calculated to convey that intention. According to the decision in R. v. Ledgard, even this certificate must be held final as regards the validity of the votes; though it may be otherwise if corruption be charged (of which there is not a pretence here), or any error in casting up the votes. It was, indeed, pressed in argument that this could not be final, because the returning officer had no power to examine the voters on oath; but the recent decision of the Court of Q. B. in Mr. Ramshay's case is clear on the point, that though there is no express power given to any officer to examine on oath, yet, if the examination be taken not on oath, and an express decision be given on that evidence, such decision is final and binding. Under these circumstances, I shall direct a verdict for the defendant; but, as the point is both novel and important, I shall be glad to afford an opportunity to have my opinion reversed. The relator may move accordingly, and if the Court above should be of opinion that the certificate is not conclusive, then there will be a new trial; but I should advise an agreement between the parties which would provide for the going into the scrutiny before a legal arbitrator, a much more fit tribunal than a jury for such a purpose.

This suggestion was at first acceded to, but a difficulty arising, it was abandoned, and the case left to take the ordinary course.

BLENNERHASSET v. MONSELL.

Judgment creditor of wife—Right of assignee of wife—Right of husband surviving.

A feme sole indebted by judgment married, being at the time of her marriage entitled to a chose in action. She assigned it to a volunteer. The chose in action was not reduced into possession during the coverture, and the husband surviving the wife, took administration to her:

Held, that the husband, as the assignee of the wife, could take nothing but the surplus of the chose in action, after the payment of the debts of the latter:

Held, also, that the statute of voluntary conveyances applied to the case of a conveyance to evade the creditors of a third person, as well as a conveyance to evade the creditors of the debtor himself.

This was a bill by a judgment creditor to raise a judgment of the year 1831, and to set aside a deed of the year 1833 as fraudulent and void.

The bill stated that Richard Camarique Ponsonby being entitled to a sum of 4,000*l.* by indenture of settlement bearing date the 29th of June, 1799, vested that sum in trustees for himself for life; remainder, as to 2,000*l.* to his wife, Letitia Lindsay, for life; remainder, as to that sum to his children of that marriage; and as to the residue of the 4,000*l.* to his children absolutely, on their attaining the age of twenty-one. There were two daughters, Louisa and Mary. Richard C. Ponsonby died in the year 1811, leaving surviving him Letitia Ponsonby, his wife, and his two daughters. Letitia Ponsonby, shortly after her husband's death, married William Lindsay. Louisa Ponsonby sold her interest in the 1,000*l.* which she took absolutely.

The plaintiff, in the year 1831, recovered judgment in the sum of 263*l.* 7s. 10d. against Louisa Ponsonby, who, on the 14th day of June, 1833, married William Rumley Monsell. The judgment of 1831 was revived in 1834 against the defendant. By deed, bearing date the 23rd day of October, 1833, Louisa Monsell conveyed her reversionary interest in the 1,000*l.* to trustees in trust for her three stepbrothers in equal shares, or as she should by deed or will appoint; and in December, 1833, she by will appointed to her husband her interest in the money she was entitled to by her father's marriage settlement; she died in August, 1836, and her husband took out administration. The defendant, Jeffers claimed as the assignee of a third party the 1,000*l.* from one of Mrs. Monsell's stepbrothers, and the defendant, Barrington, as a trustee of the deed of 1833.

Monday, Jan. 26.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case stood over for consideration, the question raised being one not disposed of by any authority that I have been able to find. [His lordship stated the facts]. If the case rested here it might have been sent into the Master's office; but it being admitted that this fund was the only assets of Mrs. Monsell, it was thought better to dispose of it here. The rights of property in matters of this nature are, to a certain point, well established, and the husband could not, after the death of the wife, by virtue of any marital right, take the chose in action of the wife, unless it were reduced into possession by him during the life of the wife. During the life of the tenant for life, the money in question here could not be reduced into possession; it therefore would have continued to be the property of Mrs. Monsell, if she had lived, and upon her death the husband would only take as her administrator, and in that capacity Mr. Monsell now claims. That the general assignees will take property of this nature has been decided in the case of assignees in bankruptcy (Harper v. Ravenhill, Tam. 114); and so will the particular assignee, as against all but the wife surviving. (White v. St. Barbe, 1 Ves. & Bea. 405.) That is the only authority on this part of the case. So far, then, as the rights of the husband and his assignees are in question, the latter can take; but it is equally well settled that during the life of the wife, the fund cannot be disposed of by the husband. (Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 14 Jur. 115; 8 Com. B. 592.) This being a title derived through the administration taken by the husband to the wife, he must take the fund subject to the debts of the wife, that is expressly stated in Squib v. Wyn, 1 P. W. 380. The last question in this case is, whether the assignee of the wife can stand in a better position than the husband himself, and can claim anything but the surplus after the payment of the debts of the wife? That has not been expressly decided, but the dictum of Sir W. Grant, in White v. St. Barbe, has been relied upon to shew that the payment of the debts of the wife cannot be avoided. In the case of Harper v. Barnhill, Tam. 114, where an account was directed, there appear to have been no debts of the wife. I have now to consider what has been conveyed by the deed of 1833. It was clearly a voluntary assignment. The assignee was the assignee of but a chose in action. It is very clearly explained in the case of Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1, that the assignee cannot stand in a better position than the husband surviving. Considering the positions laid down in these cases, I cannot see what right the assignee here can claim under the assignment. The assignee can acquire no higher rights than the person assigning. The decisions which settle the rights of the husband with respect to the property of his wife must rule this case. Then as to the case of Mr. Jeffers, he is in no better plight than the voluntary assignee; if I am right in saying that the voluntary assignee cannot take, the particular assignee cannot be in a better position; the case, in fact, comes to the same thing, though the difficulty is of a stronger nature, and I am of opinion that the particular assignee can not take more than the surplus after the payment of the debts of the wife, and that is shewn by the case of George v. Milbank, 9 Ves. 196: that case distinguishes the case of a particular assignee, and establishes this proposition, that the particular assignee cannot take except subject to the debts of the wife. It was argued upon the construction of the Statute of Voluntary Conveyances, that it was not a case within that statute, as it was not an assignment to defeat the creditors of husband, but the creditors of wife. In my opinion, this is a conveyance within the meaning of the statute, and I declare this money to be a part of the assets of the wife, and liable to her debts.

Assignment of wife's reversionary chose in action—Equity for a settlement—Petition—Stop order.

A married woman, being entitled upon the death of an annuitant to a share of a sum of stock invested for payment of the annuity, joined her husband in assigning such reversionary interest in the stock, and the assignee obtained a stop order on the fund. The husband afterwards became insolvent. The assignee was not a party to the administration suit in which the fund had been set apart. On the death of the annuitant, the married woman petitioned for a settlement, and she was Held entitled to have the order made on petition, and, under the circumstances to have the whole fund settled for the benefit of herself and children.

This was an appeal against the order of the late Vice-Chancellor, made on the petition of Sarah A. Spashett, which prayed a reference to approve a settlement out of a fund to which she was entitled under the will of Thomas Upton.

Lee and Walford supported the appeal petition.

Russell and Giffard objected that the order pray could not be made on petition, but was the subject of a bill.

Lee in reply.

The cases referred to in the argument were, Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 1; Brett v. Greenwell, 3 You. & Coll. 239; Napier v. Napier, 1 Dru & W. 467; Greedy v. Lavender, 14 Jur. 608; Earl of Salisbury v. Newton, 1 Eden, 370; Macaulay v. Phillips, 4 Ves. 19; Wright v. Morley, 11 Ves. 161; Elliott v. Cordell, 5 Mad. 156; Gardner v. Marshall, 14 Sim. 587; Lady Elibank v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737; Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. sen. 560; Pentland v. Quarrington, 3 Myl & Cr. 249; Sanford v. Morrice, 11 Cl. & Fin. 667; Rock v. Cook, 2 Phil. 691.

The material facts are fully stated in the Lord Chancellor's

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord TRURO).—This is an appeal by Sarah Ann Spashett, the wife of John Spashett, against the Vice-Chancellor of England dismissing a petition presented for a reference to the Master to approve of a proper settlement under the will of Thomas Upton. The appellant was entitled to a share in a part of his residuary estate; and by an order of the 15th November, 1829, in a suit for administering the estate of Thomas Upton, it was ordered, on the consent of the appellant given in court, that the share amounting to 306*l.* 6s. 8d. Three per Cent. Bank Annuities, and 383*l.* 11s. 5d. Reduced Annuities, should be paid to her husband. Under the same will the appellant and her husband were entitled to a share in a fund set apart for the payment of an annuity payable upon the termination of an annuity. By an indenture of the 25th of October, 1831, which was in the lifetime of the annuitant, the appellant and her husband, in consideration of 140*l.* assigned to William Harding the respective shares in the annuity fund. In 1833 the appellant's husband took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, and his estate became vested in Thomas Allen, as the assignee under the insolvency. The interest of William Harding and Thomas Allen afterwards became vested the respondents, the trustees of a reversionary interest society, who, in 1837, procured a stop order on the shares of the appellant and her husband in the fund reserved for the annuity. The appellant, Mrs. Spashett, has four infant children; no settlement was ever made on her and her children. Her husband has already received, in her right, under the same will, a sum equal to double the amount of that which is the subject of the petition. In Hilary Term 1850, the appellant presented a petition praying for a reference to the Master to approve of a proper settlement on herself and her children of 346*l.* 13s. 4d. being her share of the annuity fund which was then distributable in consequence of the death of the annuitant. The Reversionary Society, the respondents, appeared and opposed the petition, and the late Vice-Chancellor of England, by an order dated the 22nd February, 1850, dismissed the petition, and, as I understand, on the ground that as the respondents claimed to be entitled to the funds, that the wife's right to a settlement of that fund, or any part of it, can only be set up by a bill bringing the respondents before the Court. I am of opinion that the petition ought not to have been dismissed upon this ground; but that upon principle and the petitioner was entitled to the relief sh[illegible] by the petition, and I see no reason or advant[illegible] putting the parties to the more expensive liti[illegible] by bill. There can be no question between the parties which cannot be discussed upon the petition equally as well as in a new suit, and only defect of which would be additional delay and expense, exhausting a very small fund. The reasons for driving the parties to that other remedy ought to be very clear and decisive to induce the Court to adopt them; in my opinion nothing short of clear proof that justice cannot be properly administered upon the present petition ought to induce the Court to abstain from deciding upon the right claimed by the petitioner, and no such case has been made out by the respondents. No authority that has been cited is inconsistent with the opinion which I have formed. In Greedy v. Lavender, 19 L. J. 491, Ch. a married woman and her husband had assigned her reversionary interest in a trust fund, and the assignee deposited the deed of assignment as a security with Richard Kirkman Lane. The interest ceased to be reversionary in the lifetime of the husband and wife. The wife then presented a petition for a settlement, and Lord Langdale directed it should be made. The suit had not been instituted at all in connection with any question relating to the wife's right, as claimed by the petition; and it also appears from the report of this case on another point, in 18 L. J. 62, Ch. that the married woman and Richard Kirkman Lane were co-defendants, and yet no objection was made by the counsel for the latter, or by the Court, that the petitioner ought to have proceeded by bill. I have inquired of the registrar, and I am told that it is the constant practice of the Court in such cases to proceed by petition. If the respondents had been parties to the present suit as defendants, I see no reason why the question of the equity to the settlement should not have been decided on petition; and neither do I perceive any reason why it should not now be decided on petition. In my opinion the respondents, although neither plaintiffs nor defendants, have, by obtaining a stop order, brought themselves before the Court sufficiently to enable it to deal with the case. The effect of the stop order is that the fund cannot be paid out without notice to them. It has not the effect of varying the mode of proceeding by the parties entitled to the fund; it only entitles the respondents to notice so as to give them a power of opposing the payment of the money out of court. They have availed themselves of that notice, and have opposed such payment, and have brought themselves before the Court so as to enable it to decide if there should be any just cause why the Court should not deal with the fund according to the rights of the parties, unless they can shew that the question cannot be decided without the machinery of a distinct suit. But they have not shewn this, and I therefore think it is the duty of the Court to adjudicate on the question between them and the appellant. Upon the general question of the wife's right to a settlement out of her absolute equitable choses in action, whether against her husband or against his assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency, or against a particular assignee for valuable consideration, I think no doubt can be entertained in the present day, and it would be a waste of time to refer to the authorities. As respects the husband himself, the wife's claim to a settlement is considered as a clear equity, and as respects those claiming under him the rule applies that the assignee must take, subject to the equities of his assignor. Doubts were formerly entertained as to the wife's equity to a settlement as against a particular assignee for valuable consideration, and it was decided by Lord Northington, in the case of The Earl of Salisbury v. Newton, 1 Eden, 370, that a wife has an equity for a settlement, even against a particular assignee, for valuable consideration. In Macaulay v. Phillips, 4 Ves. 161, Sir William Grant, who was quite familiar with the question, expressed the reason why the wife's equity should prevail even as against a purchaser. If the husband has lost the right of reducing the wife's interest in the possession, how can he, for valuable consideration or otherwise, convey more than he has. If the assignee requires a right different from that which the husband had, the husband parts with something different from what he has. In Elliot v. Cordell, 5 Madd. 156, Sir John Leach said when an absolute equitable interest is given to the wife the Court will not part with the fund in favour of the husband, without making provision for the wife or with her express consent, and all who claim under the husband must take his interest, subject to the same equity. The amount which is to be settled is discretionary, and depends on the particular circumstances of each case. In Brett v. Greenwell, 3 Y.

&C. 230, Alderson, B. said, "It appears to me the insolvent's wife and her children are entitled to the whole fund; and if I am bound by the practice of the Court to take away any portion of it, I will take away a shilling. In Gardner v. Marshall, 14 Sim. 587, the whole was settled on the wife for her separate use, in consequence of the large sums the husband had received—about double the amount of this fund—under the order of the 15th November, 1829, and no settlement has ever been made on the wife or her children. I have the less hesitation in directing the whole to be settled as the assignee only paid 140*l.* for the two shares of the husband and wife. Appeal allowed; and it must be referred to the Master to approve of a proper settlement of the fund mentioned in the petition.

Lee submitted that a reference was unnecessary, and that this fund ought to be paid to trustees for the wife.

Giffard agreed to this for the purpose of saving expense, and it was ordered accordingly.

Re CUMMING. (a)

Right to traverse inquisition in lunacy affirmed—Judicial discretion—Costs—The opinions of Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow on the one side, and Lord Rosslyn and Lord Eldon on the other, considered.

An inquisition of lunacy is traversable as a matter of right, if upon the examination of the alleged lunatic the Court should be of opinion that he has understanding enough to comprehend the application, and can exercise volition upon it.

This was an application on the part of Mrs. Cumming for leave to traverse the inquisition under which she had recently been found to be of unsound mind.

The question was, whether a person found lunatic by inquisition could traverse as of right.

Bethell opened the case for the alleged lunatic, and said that the point had recently come under the consideration of Lord Cottenham, who found the antecedent authorities somewhat at variance with each other, and his lordship considered them as being balanced, the opinions of Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow being that an application to traverse was not a matter of right, and the opinion of Lord Rosslyn and the frequently expressed opinion of Lord Eldon, that it was. Lord Cottenham examined the matter with reference to the earlier statutes and with reference also to considerations of general expediency, and arrived at the conclusion that if the party making the application were proved to have understanding enough to comprehend the application and to exercise free will about it, the application was one which the Court was not at liberty to refuse. By the Common Law of England the Crown was entitled to the custody of the lands of lunatics; and that principle was embodied in the statute 17 Edw. 2, c. 10. It was laid down by Lord Coke, that on inquest taken under the authority of that statute, a lunatic was not entitled, as a matter of right, to traverse that inquest, but that the party must be put to the ordinary remedy of petition of right. This led to the passing of the statute 36 Edw. 3, c. 13, which gave the right to traverse ex debito justitiæ; such right, it was not at first considered, extended to what were denominated commissions or inquests of lunacy, but by the statutes of 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 18, such right was so extended. Such being the state of the statute law, the inquiry naturally suggested itself, why traverses were always granted as matters of practice and procedure upon an application to the Lord Chancellor for leave to traverse. Leave to sue out the writ was not made to the Chancellor by virtue of his jurisdiction over lunatics, but it was made to him in Chancery—the officina brevium,—and that the Chancellor, as a matter of prudence and caution only, had adopted the practice of not permitting the writ to issue as of course upon an application in the name of the lunatic, without first taking precautionary steps to ascertain that that application was really and truly made by the alleged lunatic; and this course had been adopted in order to avoid the abuses which would arise, could any one come in the name of one found lunatic, and for the asking, as a matter of course, sue out the writ. Petitions for leave to traverse were introduced in order that the Chancellor might not be imposed upon, and that he might not in his capacity of the issuer of writs grant a writ to traverse to a party who was not in reality the lunatic, and who might make a bad use of the name of the lunatic for the purpose of obtaining the traverse. Such was the state of the law from the statutes, and it would follow, as a matter of course, that an application like the present was such an one as the Chancellor was bound to grant, when he had satisfied himself that the alleged lunatic was a person competent to make it. The earliest reported decision was before Lord Hardwicke. In the case of Ex parte Roberts, his lordship thought that an application for a traverse was not a matter of right, but that the Court was invested with a discretion as to whether the writ should issue or not. In that case the question did not arise, and Lord Cottenham seemed to have founded an opinion that Lord Thurlow had followed Lord Hardwicke in that view from a case imperfectly and incorrectly reported. In the case of Barnsley, the application was not made by the lunatic himself, and it was not contended that the Court had not a discretion where the petition was that of a stranger. All, therefore, that Lord Hardwicke's authority would extend to shew was, that where, as in the case of a lunatic, he considered the right to traverse as of course; in the case of another person claiming only an interest in his estate, he refused the application. The case of Ex parte Southcot was not an application for leave to traverse, but an application for a commission of lunacy against Mr. Southcot, who was resident abroad, and the principal difficulty seemed to have been, whether such a commission could issue, and how it was to be executed. From the report the true state of the law appeared to be, that a lunatic, or any person interested, might apply for a traverse to supersede the commission, that if he appeared to be examined coram rege in concilio, and if the holder of the Great Seal was satisfied that the application was in truth the act of volition of the party, it was granted as a matter of course. In Ex parte Fust, Lord Thurlow, who was professing simply to follow Lord Hardwicke, refused leave to traverse as of right. In Ex parte Wragg, Lord Rosslyn decided that to traverse an inquisition finding a person lunatic was a matter of right, and not one of favour; and the same case was again considered and so decided in Ex parte Ferne, by Lord Loughborough. The matter was frequently discussed before Lord Eldon, and his lordship's opinion was very clearly expressed in the case of Sherwood v. Sanderson, Lord Eldon's decision was acted on, and the right to traverse taken as a matter of course, and the application treated de jure, until the subject came before Lord Cottenham, in the case of Bridge, although an opinion was there ascribed to Lord Hardwicke, at variance to what was the state of the law, his lordship followed the decision of Lord Eldon, so far as it regarded the application for leave to traverse as a matter of right when applied for by the alleged lunatic. Such was the principle of the statutes and the authorities, and it might justly be considered as inconvenient and opposed to the interests of justice that the Lord Chancellor should be subject to the obligation of examining the evidence for the purpose of determining whether he should grant a further inquiry or not. On every consideration, and according to every legal analogy, it ought to be the right of the subject to traverse such a commission; it was the ordinary common law right of the subject; such right did not formerly exist, but the Legislature advanced the rights of lunatics to the condition of those of all other subjects; they were enabled by the statutes of the Edwards to exercise the rights which had been previously conceded to other subjects. Those Acts of Parliament had been made, as it were, the basis upon which the cases had been decided, and which had brought about the law as it was now established and there were no considerations of public justice or of public utility, that should induce the Court to depart from that course, or establish any exception. Subject, therefore, to the ordinary condition that the Court should be satisfied that that was really the application of the person in whose name it was made, and consequently, as a matter resulting therefrom, that the individual making the application was of sufficient understanding perfectly to comprehend its nature, object, and consequences, he submitted that the application ought to be granted.

Roundell Palmer followed on the same side, and said that the foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court laid in the statutes which had been referred to. It would be difficult to decide whether it was a jurisdiction in lunacy or at common law; but looking at the statutes there was no reasonable ground for doubting that a traverse was a strict matter of right upon those statutes. The question might arise whether the person presenting the petition for leave to traverse was a party aggrieved or not; and that at once suggested a distinction which might account for the apparent discrepancy in the authorities; for in Barnsley's case, and in the case of Fust, before Lord Rosslyn, the petitioner was not the lunatic himself, but a person only alleging himself to be aggrieved by reason of some collateral interest. The statute of the 34 Edward 3, c. 14, gave a right of traverse "in all cases of land and tenements seised by an escheator," &c. and such right was subsequently conferred upon lunatics. By the 2 & 3 Edw. 6, "any person untruly found lunatic, idiot, &c. should have the same remedy and advantage as in other cases of traverse upon untrue inquisitions or offices founden." In Coke upon Littleton that statute is spoken of as a remedial statute, and in his first and second Institutes he considers that the object of those statutes was to deliver the subject in the most beneficial manner from encroachments of the prerogative by offices untruly found. A remedy of right was created and given, and that being a beneficial statute ought to be construed most beneficially for the subject. There were two points upon which the Chancellor should satisfy himself in every case. The one that the party be aggrieved within the meaning of the statute; the other that the application be truly the application of the lunatic, and that an improper use had not been made of his name without the exercise of volition on his part. No case could be referred to in which the application being made by the lunatic, or by any one who was undeniably or incontestably the person aggrieved within the statute, had been refused except in Saumarez case, cited by Lord Cottenham in Re Bridge; in that case Lord Eldon refused the application, though on what ground did not appear. If the Lord Chancellor should see the alleged lunatic, examine her, and find what Lord Cottenham found in Bridge's case, that for that purpose at all events there was volition, and that there was understanding and sufficient capacity to desire the remedy and to assert the right, the remedy should go, and as a matter of right, a positive right given to her by the law. [Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—You say the law has given a positive right. What do you mean by a positive right? Do you contend that if it is refused the Court of Q. B. would grant a mandamus, or that an action would lie? Would the Chancellor be liable to be impeached for malversation of office?] He was not aware of any instances in which the Court of Q. B. had ever granted a mandamus to the Lord Chancellor to issue any writ; but he thought it was impossible to hold the language which Lord Cottenham and Lord Eldon held without coming to that conclusion. If one verdict were to create such a presumption of general incompetency that no act of an alleged lunatic, even for the purpose of relieving himself from the verdict, was to be taken as the act of a competent person, or as his own act, until the finding was got rid of, he would be driven to travel in a circle which would deprive him altogether of the benefit of those enactments which had been referred to, and to nullify the principles to be extracted from Lord Eldon and Lord Rosslyn's decisions, that an alleged lunatic was not to be considered a lunatic if he asserted within due time his right to traverse, and that if he did assert that right, he could not be considered as a lunatic until that right had been exercised. In that light Lord Cottenham had viewed those decisions, and Lord Truro, in Loveday's case, seemed to have been of the same opinion. There was nothing in opposition to them, but two cases, in which Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow declined to recognise the application as a matter of right, when it was made by a person, not the lunatic, but by a person claiming in respect of some collateral interest.

Southgate followed.

The Attorney-General opened the case on the other side, and said the point was restricted as to whether a party had an absolute and unconditional right to traverse an inquisition of lunacy, or whether there was a discretion in the Court either to grant or refuse it. It had been argued that there was an absolute right, subject merely to the necessity on the part of the Lord Chancellor of ascertaining whether the person had an independent volition, or whether, in point of fact, the traverse was one which the party himself was desirous to take place. It would be a very illusory check upon improvident traverses that such should be a matter of right, for in the great majority of instances of persons who were inmates of lunatic asylums, they were under a strong impression that they were improperly restrained, and an instance could hardly be imagined in which a party being possessed with the notions that a proceeding was for his benefit, and to relieve him from restraint would not have understanding enough to adopt that proceeding, and to say that it was entirely with his will that it took place. A more striking instance, he thought, of that could hardly be furnished than by the case of Ex parte Bridge, to which reference had been made: it was absurd to call such a proceeding an act of volition by a lunatic, and it was as great an anomaly to permit a verdict of nineteen jurymen to be set aside by one of twelve, which would be the number to try a traverse of the inquisition. He felt the weight of the authority in Ex parte Bridge, but he was bound to say that neither in that case nor in any other to which his attention had been directed, had circumstances been taken into consideration which were most essential to decide so important a question. A traverse was entirely a creature of the statute law, and a party seeking to avail himself of its advantages must take with it all the conditions which were imposed by the statutes. There was no traverse at common law as appeared by Sadler's case. The traverse was first given by the statute 34 Edw. 3, which applied only to particular cases. The principles of that statute were extended by that of 36 Edw. 3, to all offices found for the king, and a person applying for a writ of traverse was required to shew by evidence his ancient right and good title, and after that it remained with the discretion of the Chancellor whether it should be granted or not. The next statute was that of 8 Hen. 6, which provided that a party had no right to traverse unless he complied with the conditions prescribed by the Act, and proved this traverse to be true. The 1 Hen. 8, extended the time within which a person could traverse to three months, and the law remained in that state until the passing of the statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6. By that Act a person "untruly" found a lunatic could traverse the inquisition. The words were not that every person found so could traverse, so that it must be found out; what was the meaning of that word "untruly?" It must mean that the supposed lunatic was to satisfy the Court that the verdict he was desirous to traverse was untrue; or, in other words, he must lay evidence before the Court to enable it to decide whether it was a proper case to allow a traverse. That word was introduced for the purpose of leaving to the holder of the Great Seal the right to consider and to have evidence adduced whether there was good ground for supposing that the party was improperly found lunatic. The cases that had been decided, especially those of Sir John Cutts and Scowrefields', shewed it was a matter of discretion in the Court whether the writ should issue or not. With respect to the right of the Crown, after office and inquisition found, the king was not entitled to a writ of melius inquirendum, absolutely and of right, but he must shew good cause why that proceeding should take place; it was clear that it would not issue, except on pregnant matter, to shew that the former finding was erroneous. In Buller's Nisi Prius, the practice had always been for the party to petition the Lord Chancellor for leave to traverse, and then the Chancellor would upon proper grounds give such leave, and suspend the grant of the custody in the mean time. All the decisions which had taken place prior to Ex parte Bridge were decisions under the statutes. In an anonymous case in Mosely's Reports, Lord King, in granting leave to traverse, imposed certain conditions. Now, if the writ were a matter of right, there would be no necessity to apply for leave to the Chancellor, and still less would the Chancellor have any authority to impose conditions upon the issuing of the writ. Passing from the conflict of decisions between Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow on the one side, and Lord Rosslyn and Lord Eldon on the other, he came to the case of Ex parte Bridge, in which Lord Cottenham had held that the writ was a matter of right. It did not, however, appear in any of the cases that the old statutes had been referred to, or that, in fact, the question had been properly argued. In the latest case (Sherwood v. Sanderson) before Lord Eldon that question was not raised; that case related to the costs of the commission, and what was there stated by his lordship must be taken to have been incidentally stated, and not as necessarily applicable to the judgment to be given. In Ludlam's case, he imposed certain conditions on the issuing of the writ as to the time within which it was to be executed. The utmost that could be made of the decisions was, that they were very doubtful, and Lord Cottenham's decision in Bridge was not very decisive, and in Ex parte Saumarez (mentioned in the latter case, but not adverted to in the judgment) Lord Eldon dismissed a petition for leave to traverse presented, not by third parties, but by the husband and wife. Before the passing of the statute, 6 Geo. 4, it was doubtful whether a traverse was a matter of right; that statute concluded the question, for it enacted that the Lord Chancellor, was thereby "directed and required to hear and determine such petitions of traverse." That statute embodied the statutes of Edward 6. and, by directing the Chancellor to hear and determine the petitions. vested in him, as a matter of course, a discretion as to the granting of the writ; otherwise, there would be nothing to determine. There was no common law right to traverse an inquisition, and, being entirely under the statutes, everything must be done in conformity with their provision. What was indefinite under the old statutes of Edward 3, as to the right to traverse was made plain by the Act of Geo. 4, which gave a discretion to the Court; and if, after seeing the alleged lunatic, the Court should have a doubt as to the sanity or insanity of the person, it would be a case for the exercise of its discretion. If a traverse should be granted, and the jury then find her sane, the probability is that the parties will come to this Court, with an application for a new trial. The determination of the question depended entirely upon the statute law; it rested upon the provisions of certain Acts, which it was impossible to construe consistently with the argument, which had been urged by the other side, and it was impossible not to say, that under them there was a discretion to be exercised, which depended upon the view that was taken of the actual state of mind of the party, at the time the inquisition took place.

(a) A report of the proceedings in this case will be found 18 Law T. Rep 191; as the point involved in this application is of great public interest, as well to the Profession as otherwise, the arguments of the counsel on both sides are reported at greater length than usual.

Sir W. P. Wood followed on the same side, and said that the argument of his opponent must be put as high as this,—they must say that under any circumstances whatever, not only with reference to the lunatic herself, as to whether she be or be not lunatic, that the traverse must issue: and that notwithstanding such traverse was not intended for her benefit; and although he might be in a condition to prove that the application was made for a totally different purpose, and that it was only made a handle of by parties who were desirous of retaining her property in their hands, and of having the traverse tried for the purposes of incurring still further expense and with a view of profiting by it, yet the Court was not able to pay attention to any such circumstances because the traverse was a matter of right. His grounds were, that the traverse would not be for the benefit of the lunatic, as the whole of her property would be wasted. From the statutes which had been cited, it would appear that there must be something beyond the personal inspection of the lunatic in order to arrive at the conclusion of granting the traverse. In Roberts's case, Lord Hardwicke went into the affidavits before granting the writ; and in Barnsley's case the writ was refused on the ground that as there had been several trials it would not be for the benefit of the lunatic that there should be another. [The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Is there any case in which the Great Seal has gone into the whole question of sanity or insanity—whether it has taken three days or thirty days to inquire into it before the Court has granted a right to traverse?] He had not found a case of that description, but he considered that the several cases which had been decided by Lord Hardwicke and Lord Thurlow were very strong authorities upon the question of discretion; and in the case of Ex parte Ward, Lord Eldon did not refuse the traverse the ground that the party applying was a stranger, but he assumed a discretion. It had been admitted on the other side, that if any person besides the lunatic applied for the writ, the Court would exercise a discretion as to its being granted; but the statutes made no such distinction, and therefore, if the Court had any discretion in one case it had the same in all; he had collected several instances from the registrars' books and other sources, in which Lord Eldon had heard and disposed of applications to traverse on the merits of the different cases. So late as the year 1823 that learned judge, as it appeared from the books in the Lunacy-office, had heard a petition in which no less than nineteen affidavits had been filed, a decision which might fairly be placed in opposition to the dicta of his lordship relied upon by the other side, that a traverse was a matter of right. In Ludlam's case, and in that of Saumarez, referred to by Lord Cottenham in the case of Bridge, it was plainly proved that the Court did not consider that a right to traverse an inquisition existed as of course. The state of the authorities was, that Lord Hardwicke, in the cases of Roberts and Barnsley, expressed a clear and decided opinion that the Court had a discretion in granting the writ, for he allowed it to issue in the first instance upon certain conditions, and refused it altogether in the second. His lordship's observations against the existence of any such right were most conclusive when he asked why the parties came to him for leave if the right to traverse was of course, instead of going to the Petty Bag-office and issuing the writ at once. Then followed the decisions of Lord Thurlow and Lord King, who, by imposing conditions on the granting of the writ, evinced an opinion that the Court had a discretion in the matter. In Ex parte Wragg, Lord Eldon, although undoubtedly he stated that the writ was a matter of right, did not overrule Lord Hardwicke, for the question whether the Court had a discretion was not argued. The case of the present petitioner was very curious and difficult to be understood, for it did not claim the writ of traverse as an absolute but as a qualified right, conceding that the Lord Chancellor was authorised to ascertain from the petitioner herself whether she was desirous that the writ should issue, but at the same time contending that if her wish was in the affirmative then that the writ must go as a matter of right. So that the person to decide by volition whether the writ should issue or not, was the very person whose capability of properly exercising a will was the subject of inquiry. It might be that some concealed and sinister motive existed for suing out the writ, and yet the Court could not inquire whether it was for the benefit of the lunatic that it should issue. He had no wish to put the case higher than that of Saumarez, in which Lord Eldon had received affidavits, and inquired whether it would be for the benefit of the lunatic that the writ should be granted. In favour, therefore, of the Court's possessing a discretion were arrayed the opinions of Lord Hardwicke, Lord Thurlow, and Lord King, and even the opposite decision of Lord Rosslyn, in Wragg's case, was unsatisfactory, for the case itself was very shortly and ambiguously reported. Then came the dicta of Lord Eldon, that the writ was a matter of right, and the cases of Ludlam and Saumarez, in which his lordship had exercised a discretion. These brought the question down to the case of Ex parte Bridge, decided by Lord Cottenham, and which was considered by the other side as conclusive on the point that the writ was a matter of right. That decision was based upon the assumption that his lordship was fettered by the expressed opinion of Lord Eldon, and that the statutes gave the subject a right to traverse as of course in all cases where the Crown seized land as escheator or otherwise. On this latter point his lordship had fallen into an error in supposing that the Crown ever seized the property of lunatics to its own use. It might take the property of idiots, but not of lunatics, and therefore the judgment of Lord Cottenham in Bridge must be considered as resting entirely upon the dicta of Lord Eldon. The statute, however, of the 6 Geo. 4, put the question beyond a doubt, for in its preamble it assumed that the Keeper of the Great Seal had all along exercised a discretion in the granting of the writ to traverse, and then proceeded to define that discretion and to limit the issuing of the writ to three months after the finding of the jury. The words in the statute, that the Lord Chancellor was "to hear and determine" the petition to traverse, could only mean that he was to have a discretion in the matter, or how otherwise could there be anything for him "to hear and determine?" Another view of the case as proving that the Court had a discretion in the granting of a traverse was, that the heir-at-law and next of kin of the lunatic were always served with notice of the intended application, which would be altogether unnecessary if the writ was a matter of right, for it could then be obtained ex parte. If the Court should hold that a traverse could be obtained of right, the present was the last case in which counsel would appear in opposition, even if it were to oppose any sinister purpose that the writ was intended to answer; and in future nothing would be required to be gone through except the form of indorsing on the writ, "Let right be done."

Rolt appeared on the same side, but did not address the Court.

Petersdorff (of the Common Law Bar) then followed, and contended that the Courts of Law had repeatedly decided that the right to traverse an inquest was not of course. The mistake had arisen from taking the words of text-writers and judges to mean that to traverse an inquest was a matter of right, whereas all that they inferred was, that it was a right, as contrasted with reviewing a judgment or a record. A coroner's inquest could not be traversed as a matter of right, and some inquests could not be traversed at all; for instance, the Crown could not traverse an inquest declaring a person to have committed suicide in order to obtain a verdict of felo de se. An inquest of a felon down the country, or one against outlawry, could not be traversed as of right, and it therefore became the duty of the parties promoting the present petition to shew that the traverse of an inquest in lunacy was different from other inquests at law, and also point out a remedy in the event of the Lord Chancellor, who would then become only a ministerial officer, refusing the application. It had not, however, been contended that the issuing of the writ was entirely unconditional, but that a certain portion of discretion was vested in the Lord Chancellor to ascertain whether it was the wish of the lunatic that the traverse should issue where the petition was presented in the name of the lunatic, and to see whether the petitioner had an interest when the writ was asked for by a third party. This concession, however, of discretion, destroyed the case on the other side, a none of the statutes pointed out any limit to the discretion of the Chancellor, or specified a different mode of proceeding in cases where the petitioner was a stranger to those in which the lunatic himself petitioned. Even in applying for a habeas corpus, a person must shew to an extent that he was wrongfully in custody, and some error or wrong must also be shewn on a mandamus or quo warranto. There was a great analogy between this case and a motion for a new trial: a mandamus or quo warranto was not granted as of right, but was subject to the sanction or leave of the Court. If this writ was a matter of right, why was a petition presented at all? The only object of the Court's having notice seemed to be that the lunatic might be protected from any abuse being practised in his name. Such an hypothesis made out his case, for,

in order to protect the lunatic, the Court must have the power of exercising a discretion, which meant looking into the evidence. Some mistake or miscarriage in the inquisition ought therefore to be shewn, or such a preponderance of evidence adduced to prove that the person was not insane before the Court granted a traverse, whereas, in the present case, there was not even a suggestion impugning the finding of the jury.

W. Morris, on the same side, said that the question had only come five times before Lord Eldon, the last of which was Turner's case, and which was decided upon a mass of affidavits. The point was not brought at all before Lord Lyndhurst; and Lord Brougham, in Ex parte Tubb, granted the writ on the ground that the solicitor, who was also a trustee, had a direct interest. All the cases, therefore, with the exception of that of Wragg, before Lord Rosslyn, had been decided on their merits.

Bethell, in reply, submitted that there had been much misapprehension as to the meaning of the statutes. By the common law of England, whenever the king's title stood on record on an office found, there was no remedy for the subject but to proceed either by monstrans de troit or by a petition of right—which petition was always presented to the Lord Chancellor to enable his lordship personally to examine the alleged lunatic and to suspend the custody of his person and property pending the inquiry. The statutes 34 and 36 Edward 3 gave the right of traverse; the right, however, was exclusively confined to the case of lands seized to the use of the king. With respect to the language of the statute of Henry 6, it was a mistake to suppose that it was necessary to shew "office untruly found" in applying for a traverse, such words being confined to an application by the traverser to have the lands to farm, which was a matter in the discretion of the Court. There was no statutory right to traverse till the 2 & 3 Edw. 6. The right to traverse an inquisition was given to a supposed lunatic in the plainest terms by that statute the word "unduly" in that statute was only intended to be made use of as a suggestion in applying for a traverse, or otherwise the Court would have first to hear the whole case again to ascertain whether the party asking to traverse had been unduly found a lunatic or not. With respect to Ward's case, which had been relied upon as proving that the Court could exercise a discretion, Lord Eldon had there stated that he was bound to grant a traverse to any party aggrieved, whether the lunatic or his alienee, but not to a stranger. The reason why the application for a traverse in lunacy was upon notice was to enable the Chancellor to suspend the grant of the lunatic's person and property, which could not be done ex parte, and had nothing to do with the right of the lunatic to traverse as of course. With respect to the 6 Geo. 4, it had been asked why, if there was no discretion in the Court, the heir at law and next of kin were served with the petition, applying for leave to traverse? It was not served on them in their character of heir or next of kin, but as parties interested, and that only if they had had the carriage of the inquisition. The latter statute was based on the statute of Edw. 6, and the discretion which it gave was only with the view to limit the time within which traverses should be prosecuted. It had been urged, that because affidavits had been filed in Ludlam's and Saumarez cases, the Court exercised a discretion, but affidavits being filed was no proof that the judgment of the Court had been influenced by them. In Fust's case, the application to traverse was by the husband of the lunatic, and Lord Thurlow, in refusing the petition, assigned as a reason that the petitioner had not a legal interest, and so in Roberts's case Lord Hardwicke observed, that as the petitioner was a stranger he was desirous of including the whole matter in one traverse, by joining in it another person who had an interest. The inquisition in lunacy was ex parte by the Crown, the lunatic himself being no party to it, and not in every case being present at it, and it would be hard indeed if he were to be peremptorily concluded by such a proceeding.

The following statutes and cases were cited during the arguments: 17 Edw. 2, c. 10, 34 Edw. 3, c. 14; 36 Edw. 3, c. 13; 8 Hen. 6, c. 16; 18 Hen. 6, c. 6; 1 Hen. 8, c. 10; 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 8; 6 Geo. 4, c. 53; Co. Turner*, 27 June, 1826; Re Ludlam, 2 Collinson on Lunatics; Buller's Nisi Prius, 216.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The question which has been argued before the full Court, is one of very great importance in a constitutional point of view, but it is a point which lies within a narrow compass. . . . . has a right to traverse the finding of the jury upon a commission against a person who has been found a lunatic, and whether the liberty to traverse is, as the term has been used in all times "as of right." What the true meaning of the expression "as of right" is, I shall postpone until I have considered whether or not it is of right. What the meaning of that term is, is another question, although it is involved necessarily in the first. Now, the whole question depends in the first instance, upon the statute of Edw. 6, and although it is fair to reason by analogy, and although it has been argued upon that ground, yet here we are proceeding on a statute, and must consider ourselves bound by the enactment fairly construed; looking also, as we must do, to what has been the view of other judges in former times, from the period when that ancient statute was passed. Now the 6th section of the statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 8, after providing for other cases, proceeds in this way—"or if any person or persons be or shall be untruly found lunatic, idiot, or dead, it is enacted that every person and persons grieved or to be grieved by any such office or inquisition, shall and may have his or their traverse to the same immediately or after, at his or their pleasure, and proceed to trial therein, and have like remedy," &c. Much reliance has been placed on these words—"and have like remedy and advantage as in other cases of traverse upon untrue inquisitions." Now if, in granting a traverse, the Court is not simply at liberty, but is actually bound to enter into the whole question which was before the jury (if it should be of opinion that there is no absolute right to traverse), it must hear all the evidence which was laid before the jury at the trial before it would be at liberty to make up its mind to grant or refuse the application. Now, in order to found the claim of the party to enter into the whole of the evidence, the case is put upon the ancient statutes regarding escheators, and the proposition of the Attorney-General referring to that statute was, that there could be no issuing of a traverse; that there could be no right to traverse until you had established your title; and having proved that, as he argued, under the early statute of Edw. 3, in regard to escheats generally, he then said that the law which applied to the present case required, according to the words which I have already read, that the party should have the like remedy and advantage as in other cases of traverse upon untrue inquisition; and therefore it was argued, that before the Court could possibly grant a right to traverse, the title must be shewn as under the ancient statute. Now that proceeds altogether on a mistake, because the right to traverse, which was there given in regard to lands and upon ordinary escheats and office found was of this nature—that the party had not only a right to [illegible] given to him by the Act, but had a right to have the lands demised to him for a certain time during the existence of the trial. If you came first, and asserted your right to traverse as against the Crown, you had not only a right to traverse, but if you shewed your title to the satisfaction of the Chancellor, you had a right to the very lands, so as to secure to the Crown a rent if you should turn out to be wrong. I secure to you the possession if you should turn out to be right. Now, this matter is put wholly out of the question by Staunton, who, in his book on Prerogative, explains it very satisfactorily. After stating several of these old statutes, which are relied on so much as governing this case, he says, "Hereupon it is to be noted that the shewing of the evidence is only rehearsed as to the letting of the lands to farm, and not to the traverse, for by this statute he may traverse without shewing any evidence, but not have the lands to farm. Also by these statutes he is not bound to any certain time for taking of his traverse, but only for taking of the lands to farm; for he may tender his traverse when he will, so he desire not the farm of the lands. But if he will have them to farm, he must tender his traverse within the month, as appeareth," and so on. So that in this book, which is always considered a great authority, it clearly appears, what no doubt the statute itself admits, that it is a misapplication of that statute to bring it to bear upon the statute upon which this case really depends. Now, if the point were about to be decided for the first time upon the meaning of the statute of Edward 6, I might say that words could hardly be stronger to give to a party what is called the right to traverse,—it is to be "at his or her pleasure." Can words be stronger? It is to be governed by the usual laws as regards traverses, as far as they are applicable, but that does not take away the right given by those express words. No doubt that is upon an allegation that the party is untruly found a lunatic; for if he were not so found, there would be no ground for the traverse, and, although the Act of Parliament is clear, yet it does not exclude the exercise of a discretion, whether it be an untrue allegation or not. The authorities do not assist us at any early period, for the cases, of which there are some that I have looked into in the Court of Wards, do not bear so fully upon the case as to justify the Court in placing any reliance upon them. We come down, therefore, at once to the time of Lord Hardwicke. Although Lord Hardwicke, in the cases which have been referred to, did put it in some sense as a matter of right; yet it is impossible to deny that he went into the cases and examined the circumstances in order to satisfy his mind that it was a proper case in which to grant a traverse. How did it arise that the Chancellor was applied to? If it be an abstract right, the party may go into the Petty Bag office at once, and lodge his traverse. I shall presently state a case in which a party appears to have taken that step, and although objected to, was not interfered with. I do not desire to say anything which shall touch the question, whether a party might not, behind the back of the Court, and irrespective of the Act of Geo. 4, go into the Petty Bag office and lodge his traverse without the Court interfering at all; but it is very plain how it was that the petitions were presented to this Court, for the traverse cannot of course take place until the party has been found lunatic on a commission issued by the Great Seal. The Great Seal has jurisdiction. The Great Seal grants the custody of the person and of the estate of lunatics. No party would attempt to traverse without the leave of the Great Seal, because, in all cases of traverse there is a question of costs to be considered. If a person goes behind the back of the Court, and exercises his legal right (if he had it), could he come and ask for his costs, as on a proceeding instituted by the authority of the Great Seal? He must depend upon his rights by law, whatever they may be. It can, therefore, be easily discovered why parties come with their petitions to the Court. The Chancellor, among his offices, has the duty of issuing the very writ which is called for in this particular case, and, therefore, it is why the parties come and ask permission to take this step; and from all the cases it appears that the Court has exercised, I will not call it so much as a discretion, as a care and caution in the issuing of the writ. Now, with regard to the authorities, they have all been referred to in the late case of Ex parte Bridge. Lord Hardwicke, I consider, did go to a greater degree in point of evidence than any other judge later than himself would have gone. Lord Thurlow, in Ex parte Fust, following Lord Hardwicke, did enter into the circumstances of the case, and I am not certain that Lord Thurlow was at all wrong in doing so. A man had married, and it was necessary to impeach the marriage. A commission would have enabled the parties to impeach it. He came there to assist the traverse in order that the marriage should not be impeached, and the Chancellor there seeing the indirect and improper purpose for which the traverse was intended to be used, refused the leave. As regards the later cases, it is impossible to entertain any doubt. Every successive Chancellor, from the time of Lord Thurlow down to this moment, has been of opinion that the issuing of the evil is, in some sense or other, a matter of right. Lord Eldon's opinion is perfectly clear upon it. Over and over again he has enunciated the rule of law. He states it without any limit; but he states it over and over again as a matter of right; and even, as regards the question which has been discussed, of the right of a third party, you will find that, in Ex parte Hall, 7 Ves. 263, he states this:—"There are two views in which this case is to be considered: first, as to the right of the petitioner to traverse, it strikes me as extraordinary to say that a person who had become the bonâ fide owner in equity of two advowsons under contract, is not aggrieved by the finding that the party with whom he contracted has been a lunatic ten years. If, however, decisions would exclude him, he would be entitled only to that regard which the Court has been in the habit of giving in lunacy particularly; but the case Ex parte Morley proves that a person under such a contract is a party aggrieved, and I am of opinion, upon that case, he has a right and must be permitted to traverse." He thought, therefore, that the right to traverse extended as well to a third person having an interest as to the case of the alleged lunatic himself; even in Ex parte Ward, he did not decide against the right, but he looked with a jealousy to the application of a mere stranger, not connected with the family, and having no personal interest. I am far from saying that it may not be proper in some cases for a stranger to apply; it may be a proper application, but generally speaking where there is not an interest, the alleged lunatic is supposed to be seen, and if seen who so proper as himself to impeach the commission? In that view he may or may not, according to circumstances, be a party to the traverse, for if the traverse be upon his own application it is difficult to say he is not a party to it: if the traverse be on the application of another person, then he may be the subject of the trial, but may not properly be considered a party to it. As regards the other authorities, the opinion of Lord Rosslyn admits of no doubt; Lord Eldon's opinion is over and over again expressed at different periods and in different cases; Lord Lyndhurst was never called on to express any opinion; Lord Brougham, in a case before him, without deciding the matter, does refer to it. In Re Tubb, in 1831, he makes this observation, "My predecessors seem to have considered it as a matter of right." He meant to do nothing in opposition to that declaration; Lord Cottenham's authority was to the same effect. Lord Truro twice decided the matter upon the decisions of his predecessors. The authorities therefore, as far as they go, are conclusive. I am of opinion that the statute of Geo. 4 does not alter the question. There is an authority which has been found of Gervais Healy, which was in 1748, and there the party seems to have gone to the Petty Bag Office and to have exercised the right, without the intervention of the Court of entering a traverse. The petition was presented by the cousins and co-heirs of the lunatic, and prayed that the traverse might be discharged; it does not appear that any order was made at that time, but the costs of the petition upon which such order was made were reserved until the traverse should be tried, or there should be delay in carrying the same down to trial. Before the traverse could be tried, Gervais Healy died; so that there was a traverse filed in the Petty Bag Office in the name of the lunatic, and, as was said, without his assent; but it was filed as of right, the parties not coming to the Court at all, and Lord Hardwicke left them to try that traverse, without interfering with it. Now, that seems to be a very considerable authority, to shew that at the time not only was it considered as of right, but so much of right that if the party chose to go behind the back of the Lord Chancellor and to file his traverse in the Petty Bag Office he was entitled to do so, and carry the matter down to trial; but in that case the costs were reserved until the traverse should have been tried. In a case from the Lunacy Office it appears that on the 10th Feb. 1825, an order was made by Lord Eldon, reciting a petition presented by the lunatic for a traverse, and also a petition presented by the lunatic's son-in-law, praying to be appointed committee, which directed that an interim manager of the farm and lands should be appointed, and that the lunatic should be produced before his lordship. Now a note was taken by the present Vice-Chancellor Turner of what fell from Lord Eldon. He said, "I will see the person who is the subject of this commission, and learn from him whether it was his real intention to traverse." The decisions have been that the party has a right to traverse, and that if any other person than the party—the object of the commission—has an interest inducing him to apply for liberty to traverse, there can be no objection to his traversing; but there is a right to call upon him to do it within a limited time. "With respect to the party himself," says Lord Eldon, "I am not quite so confident as I have been that there is not a right to limit him as to time." In that case Lord Eldon did not retain the opinion he so often expressed, that not only the party had the right, but even a party having an interest in point of estate. The authorities, therefore, are entitled to the greatest weight; and it would require very great deliberation and judgment, and a very strong feeling in the mind of any judge who should venture to oppose his own opinion to so much authority. I am clearly of opinion that these opinions are authorised in the fullest manner by the true meaning and spirit of the Act of Parliament itself upon which they are founded; and if I had had to decide the case in the first instance, I should have come to the conclusion to which I now arrive, that it is the right of the party to traverse in a case of this nature. Now the traverse being as of right, the question remains to be considered how that right is to be exercised? It is impossible to deny that in every case which has been cited, the Lord Chancellor has addressed himself to the consideration of the question whether it is proper that the writ should issue. There is no doubt about that; for whether it is to depend upon an examination of the lunatic, or upon such affidavits as the parties may think fit to file, still the Court has addressed itself to the question, is this a case in which the traverse ought to be allowed? But in order to come to a satisfactory conclusion upon this question, you must first decide whether in any proper sense the issuing of the traverse is of right or not; because, if it is of right, which I consider will now be decided, then the consideration to which the Court would address itself upon the second assumption, as to the subsidiary point, would be very different, it would be addressed in a very different view from that to which the Chancellor would be bound to direct his attention if it were not strictly of right; but being strictly of right it is still as it ought to be, under a certain control; for example, if a petition were presented to me, and I were to call, as I necessarily must, in every such case, for the presence of the alleged lunatic, and I saw instantly the signs of absolute raving madness, nobody can imagine that the person holding the office I fill would be at liberty to allow the writ to issue; in that case there could be no untrue allegation, and it would require no trial: upon the very view it would be seen that there was no untrue finding, and therefore that there was no necessity for the traverse; and the protection which it is the duty of this Court to throw around such an individual for the protection of his person and estate, would compel it to deny the right to traverse. In some of the cases, those before Lord Hardwicke particularly and in one or two before Lord Eldon, I cannot deny that matters have been entered into which, according to the strict interpretation of the words "as of right," one would hardly have expected would have been entered upon; but I am not surprised to find such cases, for as a petition is presented, and is served, and the common order made that all parties should appear, and be heard, and as the parties, by the rule of the Court, are left to their discretion in filing affidavits, I consider it no proof at all of the right or duty of the Court to enter into a general investigation of affidavits entering into the general question as to whether the sanity or insanity is proved or disproved before the jury. In many cases affidavits would absolutely prove nothing, but when the Court has been pressed with the particular hardship of the circumstances one is not very much surprised to find they have been entered into to some extent; but I cannot permit Lord Eldon's authority to be quoted in favour of that which is contended for against the traverse, that I am to enter into all the evidence which was before the jury, and to consider this as a question of a new trial: I cannot admit the authority of Lord Eldon for that proposition, when I find it over and over again deliberately stated that it is of right, and that he shall examine the lunatic himself upon that question. Now, that brings me to what it is I am to consider my duty with reference to the decision here. There is no doubt that my first duty is to render it satisfactory to my mind, that the application is a bona fide one; and that the lunatic herself is competent to judge so far as to satisfy me whether she really does desire or not to have a traverse as against the finding. If I had any doubt upon that point, I am not now going to decide, whether I should hear evidence of the sanity or insanity, which I now do hold I am not at liberty to go into. I will not decide, that if I were satisfied, upon the examination of the lunatic, that it was doubtful what her intentions were, that she herself did not know her own mind upon the subject, or was not perhaps capable of coming to a clear conclusion, I do not say in such a case the Chancellor might not feel himself at liberty to see who were the persons applying for her, by whom she was surrounded, and what were the objects and views of the persons applying; but it will be time enough to enter into those considerations when the case arises. The case now before me is one in which the Court will decide that it is of right in the proper sense of those terms. I have myself examined Mrs. Cumming; I have represented to her what the consequences of this traverse may be in point of expense; I have had a considerable conversation with her, and upon this point she is as reasonable and as sane (I am speaking not of any delusions she may labour under, of that I can form no opinion), and, as far as appearances go, as to her competency to judge whether she wishes or not that this traverse should issue; on that question I am bound to say she is as reasonable, as composed, as free from heat, or passion, or violence of any sort as any reasonable person with whom I ever conversed. She desires that this traverse may issue; she is aware it may put in peril the remainder of her property, or nearly so; she is content to sacrifice her property for what she terms her liberty of action; and she has satisfied me that as far as such a person can have volition, she has it. She has only and simply desired that if I think it right that the traverse should issue, I will allow it to proceed. I am of opinion, therefore, that this is a case in which (the traverse having been decided as being of right) I am bound to allow the traverse to go. There is one observation which I have to make, though not bearing upon the point of law. In this case it is impossible for the Court to have heard without pain that this lady's property is of small amount: without care and caution the whole of her property will be swallowed up in litigation, and she stripped of the whole of her means of existence at the age of 76, by the operation of law brought in to protect her. Let the parties on both sides seriously consider the case. It will be a reproach to all parties if this matter is carried on with an expense and to an extent which will swallow up the remainder of this poor lady's property. She is exceedingly infirm, and it would be a reproach to everybody concerned, and it would be a reproach also to the law, if during the short remainder of her life, she should be left without the means of subsistence. This case has been conducted at an expense which is perfectly frightful with reference to the object. Upon this occasion eight counsel have appeared; three on the part of Mrs. Cumming, and five on the other side; and I make an order that no more costs shall be allowed than for two counsel on each side; and I will make an order that in whatever further steps are taken on either side, they shall restrain the expenditure to the lowest possible point, and preserve to this lady, if it is in the power of the Great Seal to preserve it, some remnant of her fortune for the remainder of her days.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The observations of the Lord Chancellor render it almost or quite superfluous for me to add even the few words which I shall add. An inquest under a commission of lunacy is, I apprehend, in reality a proceeding to which the alleged lunatic is not a party. Accordingly I apprehend the law to be this, that his rights after the finding of the jury are the same, whether he shall have appeared before the jury for the purpose of contesting the allegations of lunacy or not. If he has not contested the matter before the jury by himself, or any counsel, solicitor, or agent on his behalf, and is not in default for not having done so, as I conceive to have been the case in this instance, surely it will be a monstrous principle to say he is not entitled as of right to dispute the finding, nor do I understand law and principle, or, in other words, law and justice, to differ in that respect. Legally, as I have said, his rights would be the same, although he had not appeared and contested the matter before the jury either in person or otherwise. The jurisdiction, therefore, to which it belongs is in my judgment only to ascertain whether the application is an act of free will of the person—not whether the will is that of a person of sound or of unsound mind: where, in the judgment of that jurisdiction, there is a plain and sufficient expression of free will, the traverse, cannot, I think, be refused, however clear, however important, and however beneficial to the alleged lunatic it may be in the opinion of the judge that the finding of the jury should remain unquestioned. It is the right of an English person to require the free use of his property, and that his personal freedom should not be taken from him on the ground of alleged lunacy without his being allowed the opportunity of establishing his sanity or of denying his insanity before a jury as a contesting party, and not merely as a subject of inquiry. Whether in the present instance there has been such a plain and sufficient expression of free will as has been mentioned (though I consider it highly probable), I do not know, and of course, therefore, I cannot give any opinion upon it, it having been thought by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, and myself right that the Lord Chancellor alone should see and converse with Mrs. Cumming.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.—I have nothing to do but to express my entire concurrence in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor and my learned brother, and just to add a few words to what has been said. I think, under the statute of Edw. 6, the party aggrieved (the lunatic herself particularly being the party aggrieved), by an inquest which has found her a lunatic, has a right to traverse. I think the right is expressly given to her by that statute, which, independently of the authorities, would have appeared to me perfectly clear and indisputable. Now, when I say a right to traverse, it may be thought inconsistent with the fact that the Chancellor in some degree exercises what is considered a discretion. I conceive that to be merely a discretion to see that the party is herself really applying for the traverse; because the peculiar nature of the subject-matter of inquiry makes all analogy from ordinary cases to a great extent inapplicable. If a party sues out a writ to recover land, or any property, it is presumed that it is his act; but where there is a primâ facie reason for supposing the party is incapable of having the will, it is fit that some precaution should be adopted for the purpose of seeing that that which is to be done as the exercise of his will is really so done that it is ordinarily done by the Lord Chancellor examining the party himself. I do not, however, mean to say that there might not be cases in which, even without a personal examination, some inquiry might be taken and made on the subject,—as, for instance, suppose a party is in a state, not of mental, but of bodily illness, that makes it impossible he should come in contact with the Chancellor. I do not say a case might not occur in which some discretion might not be exercised; but, in the general observations which have been made I entirely concur, and I have added these few words lest it should be supposed that I entertain some doubt when really I entertain none.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Owen Davies Tudor, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(BEFORE THE LORDS JUSTICES.)

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Saturday, March 20.

Re Brewer.

The attorney of a creditor who has proved, cannot request, as a matter of right, under the 232nd section of the Bankrupt Act, liberty to inspect the papers and documents upon which the adjudication is founded, for the purpose of impeaching the validity of the adjudication, as such request, according to the proper construction of the section, must be such as the Court, in its discretion, considers reasonable.

This was an application, made in consequence of the commissioner at Bristol refusing to give the attorney of a creditor, who had proved, liberty, under the 232nd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), to inspect papers and documents, upon which the adjudication was founded, with the intention, it appeared, of taking steps to impeach the adjudication

The 232nd section is as follows:—"That the proper officer of the Court in London, and in the several districts in the country, shall, on the reasonable request of any bankrupt or arranging debtor, or of any creditor of such bankrupt, having proved his debt, or of an arranging debtor, when the debt of the arranging creditor has been admitted in the petition, or proved, or on the like request of the attorney of any such bankrupt, debtor, or creditor, produce and shew to such bankrupt, debtor, creditor, or attorney, at such times as the Court shall direct, every fiat, petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, adjudication of bankruptcy, and petition for arrangement against or by such bankrupt, and all orders and proceedings under any such fiat, petition, or adjudication, and the Court shall order the official assignee or officer of the Court, as the case may be, to permit such bankrupt, debtor, creditor, or attorney, to have inspection at all reasonable times, of all books, papers, and writings relating to the matters of such fiat, petition, or adjudication, and the estate of the bankrupt or debtor in the possession of the assignees, or filed in court in such matter, and permit him to inspect and examine the same, and such official assignee or such officer shall provide for any such bankrupt, debtor, creditor, or attorney requiring the same, an office copy of such fiat, petition, or other proceeding, books, papers, and writings as aforesaid, or of such part thereof as shall be required, receiving such fee or sum, or rate of charge as may be authorised in that behalf."

James, in support of the appeal, contended that the Court was bound to allow the inspection.

Bacon, for the assignee, was not heard.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH thought that, according to the true construction to be put upon the section of the Act referred to, the request ought to be of a reasonable character, and that as it was not such in this instance, the application ought to be refused.

Lord Justice Knight BRUCE said that he was not perfectly satisfied that the particular papers and documents which the gentleman making the application wished to see, were within the language of the section, but that he would rather give no opinion on that point. But assuming, for the purposes of this case, that they were within the language of that section, he must hold that a discretion must be exercised as to the reasonableness of the application By this application the creditor, on the part of the bankrupt, desired to see the proofs with the view of impeaching those proceedings in which the creditors at large were interested,—one of the body had an interest adverse to the body at large, and wished to affect the whole body of which he was one merely—to destroy the commission and take away from his fellows that right which the adjudication gave them His lordship thought there never was an application more properly refused.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

IN CHANCERY.

Thursday, March 25.

Ex parte MANWARING, re THE EASTERN COUNTIES JUNCTION AND SOUTHEND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Provisional committeeman Contributory.

A company was, in May 1845, provisionally registered for the purpose of forming a railway from R. to S., and A.'s name was, on the 30th of September, 1845, inserted in the list of the provisional committee. A communication was made to A. by the secretary, stating that he was, as a member of the provisional committee, entitled to 100 shares, or a less number, upon his signifying what number he would take. A.'s wife and afterwards A. himself, wrote requesting 100 shares to be reserved for him. The secretary afterwards, by letter, requested payment by A. of the deposit on the 100 shares accepted by him. In reply, A. required information as to the amount of deposits already paid, stating that he should not hesitate to pay on being satisfied on the points inquired after.

Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that there had not been an unconditional acceptance of shares, it being, moreover, doubtful whether there had ever been an allotment of shares; and that A.'s name ought to be removed from the list of contributories.

This was a motion by way of appeal against the decision of Vice-Chancellor Parker of the 9th of February last, who did not think fit to make any order on a motion made before him on behalf of Mr. John Manwaring, that the order or certificate of Sir William Horne placing or retaining his name on the list of contributories should be discharged and varied, and that his name should be struck out from the list of contributories to the Eastern Counties Junction and Southend Railway Company. His Honour considered the case as not distinguishable from Hutton v. Upfill, 2 House of Lords Cases, 674.

The material facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment, and are reported 18 Law T. Rep. 268.

Lee and F. S. Williams, in support of the motion, contended,—first, that as there had been no unconditional acceptance of shares by Mr. Manwaring, this case did not come within the authority of Hutton v. Upfill, 2 Ho. of Lords Cases, 674; secondly, that there was no evidence that there had been an allotment of shares to Mr. Manwaring (Conway's case, 18 Law T. Rep. 169); thirdly, that at any rate the variation of the plans of the company by the introduction, without Mr. Manwaring's knowledge of a new line of railway, was a sufficient reason for not including his name on the list of contributories. (Edmond v. The Midland Great Western Railway Company of Ireland, 16 Law T. Rep. 505.) They also cited Cooke's case, 3 De Gex and S. 118; Lord Mansfield's case, 14 Jur. 28; 14 Law T. 345.

Daniel and Wordsworth for the official manager.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—We think this does not come within Upfill's case on the ground that there has been no acceptance of shares. Assuming that there has been no substantial variation of the line, the way the case stands is this: Mr. Manwaring's name is put on the provisional committee on the 30th of September, 1845, for the first time. On the 6th of October the first meeting of the committee of management took place, and on that day Mr. Causton, one of the promoters of the scheme, was appointed secretary; and on the same day, but I suppose after that appointment, he writes a letter to Mr. Manwaring, telling him that he was, as a member of the provisional committee, entitled to 100 shares, or any less number, provided he signified in writing on or before the 9th instant, the number he was desirous of taking. In answer to that letter Mrs. Manwaring writes on the 7th of October, that she cannot say whether he will take the shares, but that he will write when he returns home, but she asked that 100 shares might be "reserved" for a few days longer. When Mr. Manwaring returned home on the 9th of October he then writes, "I should wish to have the shares reserved for me." I expressed an opinion in Onion's case, 17 Law T. Rep. 138, to which I still adhere, and both myself and my learned brother are of opinion that it does not mean "I accept the shares," because the acceptance and the reservation of the shares were considered by the writer as different things, as appears from the other letters. If that be so there is no evidence of acceptance on the 9th of October, but then matters go to sleep for a long time. On the 21st of November a letter was written by Mr Causton to Mr Manwaring, in which he says, "the plans and sections of the Eastern Counties Junction and Southend Railway being nearly ready for deposit on the 29th inst. agreeably to the standing .. ... of the House of Commons, the committee of management are of opinion that the payment of the deposit money should be no longer delayed; they therefore request you will be so good as to pay forthwith the deposit on the 100 shares accepted by you as a member of the provisinal committee, agreeably to your letter of the 9th instant." So he admits that there was no acceptance unless that be considered one, which we do not consider to be an acceptance. The postscript of the letter adds, "Your letter of allotment has already been forwarded, and the bankers of the company are directed to receive the amount." On the 27th Mr. Manwaring writes in answer. "I must beg that you will have the goodness to inform me whether a sufficient amount of deposits has been paid up to enable the company to go to Parliament this session, and if all the other members of the provisional committee have paid their deposits; should that be the case, I shall not hesitate to pay also, that is, upon being clearly satisfied upon these points." Now, what we think is the fair inference, is no more than this, "I do not accede to your interpretation of my conduct but I accept subject to these qualifications," and there is no evidence that they have been complied with; on the contrary the evidence clearly shews they had not been complied with. Therefore it amounts to no more than this. The secretary writes, saying—"You did accept on the 9th of October, and we call on you to pay the deposit." Upon which Mr. Manwaring in substance says—"I do not trouble myself as to what may be the legal effect of what is already done; satisfy me that sufficient deposits have been paid, and I will accept the shares and pay my deposits." So that there was not an absolute and unqualified acceptance It does not, I think, come within Upfill's case. This gentleman's name, therefore, should be removed from the list of contributories.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Considering the case as it would stand if the letters of the 21st and 27th of November were out of it, there is not only in my opinion a total absence of evidence of allotment, but strong reason to believe evidence to the contrary. Whether arising from the fact suggested at the Bar that they had not wherewithal or otherwise to allot, that is my view independently of those letters. Then, upon those letters, how is this case varied on this point by them? It is argued by the counsel for the respondents that the letter of allotment referred to in the postscript of the letter of the 21st of November, either refers to nothing or to a letter not produced; the consequence, therefore, must be that in substance that letter of the 21st of November must be considered rather in the nature of the proposal than of anything else; and if it had been unconditional the case might have stood more favourably for the respondents. But the letter of the 27th is a conditional acceptance, and the condition was never fulfilled. I come to the same conclusion as Lord Cranworth, that sufficient evidence is not produced to put this gentleman on the list of contributories. But we are glad to think the Vice-Chancellor had not had this matter brought so fully before him or he would have taken the same course as we have. But what we now do is to be without prejudice to the production of additional evidence by the official manager in order that this gentleman's name may, if right, be placed on the list of contributories.

Costs of all parties to come out of the estate.

COOPER v. KNOX.

Order of course, discharge of—Irregularity.

Where an order of course is obtained at the Rolls, and application is made to discharge it, it ought to be made to the Court to which the cause is attached.

In this case an order of course was obtained at the Rolls to change a solicitor in the cause, which was a cause attached to Vice-Chancellor Turner's Court.

Moore now moved to discharge it, on the ground of irregularity.

Giffard, contrà, insisted that whatever the practice might have been formerly, it was now settled that an application to discharge an order of course ought to be made to the Court to which the cause is attached. The merits of the case, if necessary, could then be gone into, but that could not be done in this court, where nothing more than the question of regularity or irregularity was ever considered, and that course had been found inconvenient and had now been abandoned.

Moore in reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, that the practice had been varied by the General Order, and the application must be refused, with costs.

Errors in proceedings—Original and supplemental claim—Rectification.

Errors were committed in carrying out the proceedings under an original claim, and a supplemental claim was allowed to be filed for the purpose of correcting them.

Wickens moved for leave to file a supplemental claim for the purpose of effectually carrying out proceedings under an original claim, which had been continued after an abatement caused by the marriage of one of the plaintiffs.

The MASTER of the ROLLS gave leave to file the supplemental claim.

ROSE v. GOULD.

Will—Construction—Debts due by children of testator to be reckoned as part of their share—Hotchpot clause—Statute of Limitation—Residuary estate.

A testator directed his residuary estate to be divided amongst his six children:—"And I direct that, in order to equalise my said residuary estate amongst my said six children, in case it shall appear by my private ledger, that any or either of them my said children or the present or any future husband of any of my said daughters, are indebted to me at my decease in any sum of money, such debt shall be considered as forming part of my residuary estate, and the shares of my said children shall respectively become liable to pay such debt." One of his sons owed him a large debt, but part of it was barred by the statute:

Held, nevertheless, that the whole must be paid out of his share, and that the clause amounted to a hotchpot clause.

The testator gave the residue of his estate amongst his six children equally, "subject nevertheless to the several provisoes, limitations, and conditions hereinafter mentioned, expressed, and declared, of and concerning the same; that is to say, provided always nevertheless, and my will is, and I direct that in order to legalise my said residuary estate between and amongst my said six children, in case it shall appear by my private ledger, or any other of my books, that any or either of them my said children, or the present or any future husband or husbands of any or either of them my said daughters, are indebted to me at my decease, in any sum or sums of money, or in case I have or shall at any time during my life become security or responsible for the payment of any sum or sums of money on their or any of their account, which shall be then outstanding and unsatisfied, then and in either or any of such cases such debt or debts, security or securities, shall be considered as forming a part of my said residuary estate for the purpose of equalising the same between and amongst my said children, and in such case the share or shares of such of my said sons respectively, or of such of my said daughters whose husband or husbands shall be so indebted to me as aforesaid, or for whom or on whose behalf I may have become such security or responsible as aforesaid, of and in my said residuary estate, shall, in the first place, be subject and liable to pay and discharge such debt or debts to my estate, or redeem such security or securities, as the case may be: and if the same shall not be sufficient for that purpose, then the deficiency shall be paid and made good to my estate by the party or parties by whom such debt or debts shall be owing, or for whom or on whose behalf such security or securities shall have been given by me;" but his son Richard's share was to be invested in trust for Richard for life, with remainder for his wife for life, with remainder to his children.

At the death of the testator debts were owing to him by his son Richard, but some of them were barred by the Statute of Limitations.

Stuart and Bates, for the plaintiffs, the children of Richard.

R. Palmer and Batten, for Richard and wife, in the same interest, contended that the debt due by Richard ought not to be taken into account. The testator might have intended his ledger should be evidence of the origin of the debt and payment of the money, of which there was another proof; but the question was, did it include debts barred by the statute, and they submitted that it did.

Roupell, T. B. Saunders, Lloyd, and Shebbeare, were not heard.

The Master of the Rolls had no serious doubt as to the construction to be put upon the will. He was quite clear the proper construction was, that debts barred by the statute were included, and, in fact, that the clause amounted to nothing more than a hotchpot clause. The testator says, that "in case it shall appear by my private ledger, or any other of my books, that any or either," &c.; and it is argued that those expressions mean not what appears by the private ledger to be due, but what is actually due, and as part of the debt owing by Richard is barred by the statute, that cannot be included. But the plain words are, "whatever I say is due by my private ledger that must be brought into the amount;" and a case of election might be raised, for if the debt was very large, and the share of the property small, the son might say he would take against the will, and would not be bound. The debts must therefore be brought into hotchpot, whether barred or not.

Saturday, Feb. 21.

Stuart v. The London and North-Western Railway Company.

Railway company—Contract—Specific performance—Uncertainty—Laches—Conditional or absolute agreement—Adoption of contract—Agent—Bill, withdrawing opposition to—Claim.

A railway company agreed with a landowner to buy so much of his land as should be required for the railway at a certain price per acre, in consideration of his not opposing the Bill in Parliament, and the price as to one lot was to include consequential damages. The Bill passed, but the line was not made, and the compulsory powers of the company being gone they refused to perform the contract, contending that it was conditional only on the line being made. They insisted, also, on the defence of laches, the vendor having delayed enforcing the contract:

Held, however, on a claim for specific performance, that the case was a fit one for being brought forward on a claim, and that the contract must be specifically performed, and a reference was directed to the Master as to title in the usual way.

This was a claim filed to enforce specific performance of a contract for the purchase by the defendants, the London and North-Western Railway Company, of certain lands belonging to the late Marquis of Bute. In the year 1847, the defendants were desirous of obtaining an Act of Parliament to authorise the construction by them of a branch line from the London and North-Western Railway, near Watford, to St. Albans, Luton, and Dunstable, and the line, as projected, passed through lands belonging to the Marquis of Bute, in the parish of Luton, Bedfordshire. The Marquis, conceiving that his property would be injured by the construction of the railway, presented a petition in opposition to the Bill, and as there were several other Bills, his was that by the London and North-Western Company, introduced into Parliament for the construction of a railway to Luton, and particularly one by the London and York Railway Company, a severe contest was threatened, and it became very important to the London and North-Western Company to obtain a withdrawal of the Marquis of Bute's opposition to their project, and accordingly they entered into a negociation, which resulted in an agreement for the purchase of the land required by the company at a certain price, and for the consequent withdrawal of the Marquis's opposition. The arrangement so made was drawn up in a rough manner, and called "Heads of agreement for the purchase of the Marquis of Bute's land required by the above railway"—the Watford and Dunstable. The agreement was dated the 1st of April, 1847. There were four portions of land comprised in the agreement, distinguished therein by the letters A, B, C, and D; and as to A, the company were to give 100*l.* an acre for the land required for the railway, and an additional 100*l.* for making a road. As to B, which was laid out for building-ground, and was called the "Seven Acres," the company were to give 1,250*l.* an acre for seven acres extending from Love-lane to the street called North-street, &c.; and as to C, they were to give 100*l.* an acre for what was required; and as to D, they were to give 250*l.* an acre. Besides, they were to pay 1,000*l.* for depreciation of homesteads, &c. And the agreement contained this clause:—"The above prices refer to the quantities of land required for the railway, and to the contents of the roads and severed portions, which are respectively to be accurately measured." The agreement was signed by Edward Driver, as agent on behalf of the company, and by T. Collingdon, as agent on behalf of the Marquis. Upon the execution of this agreement the Marquis withdrew his opposition, and the Bill passed on the 9th of July, 1847, empowering the London and North-Western Company to construct the Watford, St. Albans, Luton, and Dunstable branch line, the powers for compulsory purchase of lands to continue three years from the passing of the Act, and the time for completion of the line being limited to five years from the passing of the Act. After the passing of the Act, a formal draft agreement was drawn up by Messrs. Roy and Co. the solicitors of the Marquis, and by them transmitted, on the 1st September, 1847, to Messrs. Parker and Co. the company's solicitors, accompanied by a letter requiring Messrs. Parker to carry the "heads of agreement" into effect. This draft agreement was retained by Messrs. Parker till the 7th of December, 1848, when it was returned with alterations of such a character as to convert what Messrs. Roy intended to be a draft of an absolute and unconditional agreement into an agreement contingent upon and only to be effective in case the London and North-Western Railway Company should construct the railway through Luton, though the Marquis was bound to sell and convey the lands upon the terms agreed to. A long correspondence then ensued; but nothing definite was done. The Marquis of Bute died on the 18th of March, 1848, having by his will, dated 22nd of July, 1847, appointed the plaintiffs, Lord James Stuart, O. T. Bruce, and J. M. Macnabbd, devisees in trust for sale of the Luton estate, and executors. The compulsory powers of the company ceased on the 9th of July, 1850; but the time to complete the construction of the railway does not terminate till the 9th of July next. The line, however, has been abandoned. The correspondence between the parties went on till June 1850, on the 18th of which month the plaintiffs filed their claim, but did not proceed with it till the 21st of January last. Under these circumstances the claim now came on to be heard. Several affidavits were read in support of and in opposition to the claim.

R. Palmer, for the plaintiffs, contended that the case was a proper one to be brought before the Court by claim, and specific performance had been decreed on a claim in the case of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, 9 Hare, where the company had lost the power to complete the line. And this is a stronger case, for here they still have time to complete the line. He cited also Preston v. The Liverpool, Lancashire, and Yorkshire Railway Company, 1 Sim. N.S. 586.

Willcock and Speed for the company.—The Marquis of Bute opposed the Bill because the railway was unnecessary, and would interfere with his property in an injurious manner. The party contracting is dead, and the plaintiffs have no title except as devisees. The contract is by way of a penalty; the object was not to sell the lands, but the railway was a great injury to him. Thus there was a distinct allegation that there was no authority to the agent to make an absolute agreement, and that they did not contemplate doing so. The contract was entered into three months before the Bill was passed, and on its passing the Marquis might have insisted on the contract being completed immediately. Then in the cases cited, a fixed sum was to be paid, and the purchase-money was certain; but here it depends on the quantity actually required, and unless the railway is made, the company have no powers to buy. As to what is required, that is to be determined by a line running between the two lines of deviation, and it is so much of the ground between as is required. Then there is 1,000*l.* for depreciation which cannot occur till the terms of the agreement shew that the taking of the land depended upon the construction of the railway. Besides, the Marquis has got all he wanted: he has got all his costs, and his land has not been taken, as he wished it not to be. Lastly, there have been great laches. They cited East Anglian Railway Company v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 18 Law T. Rep. 138; Moore v. Blake, 1 B. & B. 69; Walker v. Jefferys, 1 Hare, 348; Heapy v. Hill, 2 Sim. & S. 9; Watson v. Reid, 1 R. & M. 236; Hawker v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 20 L.J. , Black v. White, 3 Sw. 108; Clarke v. Moore, 1 Jon. & L. 728.

R. Palmer was not heard in reply.

The Master of the Rolls.—I cannot distinguish this case from that of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, and I must decide accordingly. The case has been well argued, but I think the case very clear. I thought the other day, when the matter first came before the Court, that difficult questions would arise upon the case, but I find that is not so. First, the contract is an immediate contract to be entered into immediately, and there is nothing in it shewing that it is conditional on the Act passing. On the face of it it is an immediate and direct contract. There is a clause in it marked D, and in that the sum of 1,000*l.* is given for depreciation, &c.; but in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company the same thing appears; and in that case Sir George Turner, in an elaborate judgment, after taking time to consider, decreed specific performance, though there it was urged, first, that the argument was conditional; secondly, that one undivided sum was given as a price for the land, and compensation for consequential damages, and therefore that the price of the land could not be ascertained; thirdly, that the powers of the company had ceased, and they could not compel a sale; and, fourthly, the hardship of the case. Now those grounds of objection to the specific performance are all to be found in this case. But, in the first place, I do not find such ambiguity as to make it impossible to perform the contract, assuming it to be a valid contract. I think a surveyor could ascertain the land required, and of course the price to be paid. The contract is for the land wanted for the present project as contemplated at the time, and what was wanted for deviation was also talked of, and therefore I should have required something more on this point if the Vice-Chancellor had not expressed an opinion in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company. It was there said that 1,500*l.* were for the land and for consequential damages, and therefore there is no distinct price stated as the price of the land. And so here the same thing appears. The other objections are that Mr. Driver had no authority. I am not satisfied from the evidence that he had authority to enter into this particular contract; but it is clear he had authority to enter into some contract, and the company saw the contract after it was entered into and adopted it, and allowed the Marquis of Bute to withdraw his opposition in pursuance thereof; and it is not denied that it was in consideration of the agreement that the Marquis withdrew his opposition. Now, if a party employs an agent, and he exceeds his powers, yet if the principal acts on what has been done by the agent, and allows others to act upon it, the Court will not allow the principal to draw back, but will compel him to abide by the contract. The next point is that the company had no power to contract; but the same objection is taken in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company and Preston v. The Liverpool Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company. I am of opinion, therefore, that there is nothing on that ground to prevent a decree for specific performance, and I am bound by the authorities. As to laches there is no difficulty. It is true, that the rule is, and the cases shew that parties must not delay, but must bring forward their claims with reasonable diligence, if they expect to succeed in obtaining redress; and I shall not be the first judge to weaken that principle; but in all those cases the contract was given up at the time. Here, on the contrary, it was kept for a year and a half, and that is the laches not of the plaintiffs, but the defendants themselves. It is true no claim was filed till eighteen months after the draft agreement was returned, but it was only then that the compulsory powers of the company ceased; and the plaintiffs did not know whether the company would or not take the land, and all this time the contract was insisted on as valid. I am of opinion, therefore, that the cases as to laches do not apply. As to the contract or the enforcement of it being useless, it is the fault of the defendants themselves, for they might have done all they contemplated doing; and it would be a dangerous principle to say, that because one party to a contract has changed his mind, and now that they find it of no use, refuse to carry it out, that, therefore, specific performance cannot be enforced. As to the hardship of the case, that question was discussed in Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, and I adopt the views there propounded. The case is one in which I am bound by authority, and specific performance must be decreed, and there must be a reference as to whether and when first a good title was shewn.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Popple v. Henson.

Costs—Heir-at-law.

A. B. contracted to purchase real estate of C. D. but died before completion intestate. C. D. filed a claim against the infant heir and the administratrix of A. B. for a resale of the estate and the application of the proceeds in payment of the purchase-money and expenses.

Held, that the costs of the heir were to be paid by C. D. and added to his own.

This was a claim filed by Mr. Popple against the infant heir-at-law and the administratrix of Mr. Henson, who died intestate. Mr. Henson had contracted to purchase real estate of the plaintiff Popple, and paid him a deposit of 100*l.* but before the sale was completed Henson died. By the claim it was prayed that the estate might be resold, and that the money produced by such resale, together with the deposit of 100*l.* might be applied in payment to the plaintiff Popple of the purchase-money, interest, and expenses.

Cairns appeared for the plaintiff.

J. D. Chambers, for the administratrix of Henson.

Briggs, for the infant heir-at-law of Henson, asked for his costs.

Cairns referred to The Duke of Beaufort v. Phillips, 1 De Gex & Sma. 321.

The Vice-Chancellor said that the heir-at-law was a necessary party to the claim, but had no means of getting his costs from the administratrix. The plaintiff must therefore pay the infant defendant his costs and add them to his own. The administratrix must take her costs out of her estate. If there were any surplus of the proceeds of the resale, after paying the plaintiff the purchase-money, interest, and expenses, it should go to the heir.

Trustee Act, 1850.

A. B. surrendered copyhold estate to the use of C. D. upon trust at any time to sell, and after payment of expenses, to retain 200l. and interest then due from A. B. to C. D., the receipts of C. D. his executors, administrators, and assigns, to be good discharges to purchasers. C. D. died intestate, and his administrator contracted to sell the estate to E. F. for 100l. The heir-at-law of C. D. was an infant, and the administrator and E. F. petitioned, under the above Act, for the appointment of a person to convey to E. F. in the place of the infant. A. B. had died intestate.

Held, under the circumstances, that it was not necessary to serve the representatives of A. B. with the petition.

At a Court Baron, held the 1st of October, 1829, at Stoke-upon-Trent, for the manor of Newcastle under-Lyne, Samuel Smith surrendered into the hands of the lord of the manor a piece of land in Shelton, to the use of Hugh Booth, his heirs and assigns, for ever, at the will of the lord of the said manor, according to the custom thereof, upon trust that he, the said H. Booth, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, should at any time or times thereafter, when and as soon as he or they should think proper or convenient, and without any further or other concurrence of or on the part of the said Samuel Smith than was therein contained, make sale and absolutely sell and dispose of the said hereditaments and premises as therein mentioned, and with the moneys arising from such sale or sales, and the rents and profits of the same premises in the mean time, until such sale or sales should be so made should in the first place pay the costs, expenses, &c. and in the next place retain and pay the principal sum of 200*l.* then due from S. Smith to H. Booth, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. and should pay the residue of the money to the said S. Smith, his executors, administrators, and assigns, or as he or they should appoint: and the said S. Smith did thereby consent and declare that the receipt or receipts of the said H. Booth, his heirs, executors, or administrators, should be a good and sufficient discharge and good and sufficient discharges to the purchaser or purchasers for so much money as in such receipt or receipts should be expressed to be received. Hugh Booth died on the 10th of October, 1831, intestate, leaving Mary Lovatt Booth, his only child, his heiress-at-law, and heiress according to the custom of the said manor, him surviving. In March 1833, letters of administration to the estate of H. Booth during the minority of M. L. Booth, were granted to Rev. E. Whitby, her guardian. On the 28th of March, 1837, M. L. Booth was married to J. A. Wise, and on the 4th of January, 1838, letters of administration to the estate of H. Booth left unadministered, were granted to Mary L. Wise, who had then attained twenty-one. Mrs. Wise died on the 6th of May, 1844, leaving her son L. L. A. Wise, an infant, her heir-at-law, and customary heir, her surviving, and on the 23rd of July, 1846, letters of administration to her estate were granted to her husband J. A. Wise, and on the following day letters of administration to the estate unadministered of H. Booth were granted to the said J. A. Wise. On the 13th of September, 1851, John Ayshford Wise, in pursuance of the power contained in the surrender of the 1st of October, 1829, agreed to sell to Ephraim Edwards the hereditaments and premises so surrendered, for 100*l.*; and it was agreed that 70*l.* should be paid at once, and the remainder, with interest, upon the premises being surrendered. This was a petition by J. A. Wise and E. Edwards, praying that M. Pattison might be appointed in the place of Lewis Lovatt Ayshford Wise, the infant, to surrender the copyhold to the use of E. Edwards, his heirs and assigns.

C. M. Roupell appeared in support of the petition, and stated that S. Smith had died intestate; that his customary heir had since died intestate; and that the proof of the title of the present customary heir would be attended with considerable expense. The surrender was not strictly a mortgage, but a trust for sale; and he submitted, that if any person on behalf of the mortgagee were served with this petition, it should be his personal representative; but as the mortgage was for 200*l.* and the sale for 100*l.* there could be no necessity for such service.

The Vice-Chancellor considered that, under the circumstances, the order might be made without service on the mortgagee, S. Smith, or his representative.

Gardom v. Ridgway.

Practice—Creditors' suit—Costs.

Further proceedings in a suit by a creditor on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of a partnership firm, against the estates of two partners, who were both dead, ordered to be stayed, two decrees having been obtained in three other suits, two of which were for the administration of the separate estates of the partners, and the third for taking the partnership accounts, the references being to the same master.

The costs of the suit which was stayed were ordered to be reserved until the costs in the other suit were dealt with.

This was a suit instituted against the real and personal representatives, both of J. W. Ridgway and H. E. Ridgway, by two creditors, on behalf of themselves and all other the creditors of J. W. Ridgway and H. E. Ridgway. J. W. Ridgway and H. E. Ridgway carried on business in partnership as solicitors at Manchester. J. W. Ridgway died on the 21st of January, 1851, and H. E. Ridgway died in the month of August following. The bill stated a case, upon which the plaintiffs claimed as creditors on the ground of a deed, the signature to which was alleged to be forged, against the joint and separate estates of the partners, and prayed a declaration accordingly, that the real and personal estates of both were liable; for the usual accounts of the real and personal estates of both; for an administration of the partnership estate; and for an injunction and receiver. The bill was filed on the 22nd of January last. At that time a decree had been obtained in a claim of Ridgway v. Ridgway, filed by Frances Ridgway, the executrix and one of the general devisees and legatees of H. E. Ridgway, against the other devisees and legatees, by which decree the usual accounts of the real and personal estate and debts of H. E. Ridgway were directed to be taken, and it was referred to the Master to inquire whether H. E. Ridgway was, in his lifetime, engaged in any and what partnership business, and whether the partnership accounts were unsettled, and liberty was given to the Master to direct any proceedings to be taken for obtaining a settlement of the partnership accounts. At the time the bill in this suit of Gardom v. Ridgway was filed, another decree had been obtained in a claim of Ridgway v. Clare, filed by Dinah Ridgway, the sole acting executrix of J. W. Ridgway, against his legatees and devisees; which decree, besides ordering the usual accounts of J. W. Ridgway's real and personal estate and debts, directed the Master to ascertain the amount of the deficiency (if any) of the personal estate, and to sell the real estate. After this suit of Gardom v. Ridgway had been instituted, a third claim was filed by leave of the Master, given in Ridgway v. Ridgway, by Frances Ridgway against Dinah Ridgway; and by a decree made on that claim, on the 14th of February last, it was referred to the Master to whom the causes of Ridgway v. Ridgway and Ridgway v. Clare stood referred, to take an account of the partnership dealings and transactions between the said H. E. Ridgway and J. W. Ridgway from the commencement of the partnership, and of the debts and liabilities arising from the late partnership, or chargeable against the joint estate of H. E. and J. W. Ridgway on account thereof, also an account of the joint assets; and it was ordered that the joint assets should be applied in a due course of administration in or towards payment and satisfaction of the outstanding debts and liabilities of the said partnership firm; and that the Master should take an account of such of the joint assets as were got in by H. E. Ridgway after the death of J. W. Ridgway, or by the plaintiff since H. E. Ridgway's death; and the Master was to be at liberty to adopt any of the accounts and proceedings taken or made under the decrees in Ridgway v. Ridgway, and Ridgway v. Clare, &c. All the decrees, although the suits were in different branches of the court, were sent to the same Master, and notice of them was given to the solicitors for the plaintiffs in Gardom v. Ridgway; but as they intimated an intention to proceed with their suit notwithstanding those decrees, a notice of motion, entitled only in the suit of Gardom v. Ridgway, was given by Frances Ridgway for the stay of all proceedings in that suit.

Russell and Surrage, in support of the motion, contended that the decrees already made would answer all the plaintiff's purposes, and therefore, according to the ordinary rule, the suit of Gardom v. Ridgway ought to be stopped; and, moreover, that the suit was in fact multifarious, the separate creditors of the several partners being mixed up in the same suit with the joint creditors.

Malins and Pryor argued that the plaintiffs in this suit were entitled to proceed, particularly as in the suit for administering J. W. Ridgway's estate, which was the larger estate, they could not obtain relief until the separate creditors were paid. In their suit, moreover, there was sought a declaration that the partnership funds were liable. The inconvenience and expense of being obliged to proceed under three separate decrees should also be considered. (Plunkett v. Lewis, 11 Sim. 379.)

The Vice-Chancellor said that it was not the practice of the Court to make, at the hearing in a creditors suit, any such declaration as the plaintiffs asked for. His Honour considered the decrees already made were sufficient; and he should therefore order that the proceedings in the suit of Gardom v. Ridgway be stayed.

Malins asked that the decrees should be consolidated.

The Vice-Chancellor said that he had no authority, on this application, to make such an order.

Malins then asked for an order that the costs of the suit should be paid at once by Frances Ridgway, she not denying assets; but after some discussion,

The Vice-Chancellor ordered the costs to be reserved until the costs of the other suits were disposed of.(a)

Beaumont v. Squire.

Devise—Construction—Restraint of marriage—Power of appointment.

Sir T. B. devised his G. estates to trustees for the use of his nephew in strict settlement. Remainder to the use of T. R. B. and his wife for their lives; and after the decease of the survivor to such son as the survivor should appoint in tail male. Remainder to W. L. and his wife with the like limitations. Remainder "to the use of Louisa W. or such person as she shall first intermarry with, if any (if before she attain the age of twenty-one by and with the consent and approbation of the said trustees; and which person shall also previously make a competent settlement upon her to the like approbation of the said trustees), for their lives or the life of the survivor," with the like power of appointment and limitations as in the case of T. R. B. and his wife, and W. L. and his wife.

(a) Upon this question of costs, see West v. Swinburne, 19 L.J. N.S. 81, Ch. and Golder v. Golder, 9 Hare, 276, from which latter case the rule appears to be, that the plaintiff in the suit which is stopped is entitled to his costs at once from the executor moving, unless there is an affidavit that the executor has no assets, in which case the plaintiff is directed to add his costs to his claim.

The testator devised other estates upon the same trusts, and in the like terms as the G. estates.

He then charged all except the G. estates with two rent-charges. One for the use of W. L. and his wife for life, and upon the death of the survivor to the use of such son as the survivor should appoint, and for default of such issue, &c. or in case W. L. or his wife should inherit the estate, then the rent-charge to sink into the estate. The other "for the use of Louisa W. and her assigns until she shall marry (under and with the restriction above mentioned), or for and during the term of her natural life," and when and so soon as she shall marry as aforesaid, then upon such trusts with the like powers, for such estates and interests, and subject to the same contingencies, &c. as before declared concerning the rent-charge devised to W. L. and his wife.

Louisa W. married under age without the consent of trustees, and had issue. After the death of her first husband, she, being then of full age, married again, and then appointed the rent-charge after her death to her eldest son by her first husband:

Held, that the power of appointment of the rent-charge devised as above, vested in her; and being well exercised conferred a valid title upon the appointee.

Replevin.—The defendant avowed for a distress for arrears of a rent-charge, devised to Louisa Wentworth by the will of Sir Thomas Blackett; in the first avowry claiming under an appointment by Louisa Clifford, formerly Louisa Wentworth, in the second, under an appointment by John Clifford her husband.

Plea in bar; and

Demurrer thereto; raising by direction of the Court of Chancery a question as to the construction of the following will.

Sir Thomas Blackett devised certain real estates, called the Gunnertone estates, in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, to trustees in fee, upon trust to the use and behoof of his nephew, William Bosville, for life, without impeachment of waste; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to the use of such one of the sons of William Bosville, as he should appoint, and of the heirs male of the body of such son; and for default of appointment or of such issue of such son, then to the use of the first, second, third, fourth, and all and every other son and sons of William Bosville, the heirs male of their bodies successively; and for default of such issue, then to the use of Thomas Richard Beaumont and Diana his wife, "one of my natural daughters," for and during their joint natural lives, and the life of the survivor, without impeachment of waste; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; and from and after the decease of the survivor then to the use of such one son of the body of his said daughter Diana, as the survivor of her, and T. R. B. should appoint, and of the heirs male of the body of such son; and for default of such appointment, or from and immediately after the decease of such son without issue male of his body, &c. then to the first and other sons of Diana successively in tail male; and for default of such issue, &c. then to the use of William Lee and Sophia his wife, "another of my natural daughters," with the same limitations; and for default of such issue, &c. then to the use of Louisa Wentworth ("the other of my natural daughters"), or such person as she shall first intermarry with, if any (if before she attain the age of twenty-one, by and with the consent and approbation of the said trustees, or the survivor, and his heir; and which person shall also previously make a competent settlement upon her my said daughter Louisa, by deed or deeds in writing, to the like approbation of the said trustees) for and during their joint natural lives, or the life of the survivor of them without impeachment of waste; remainder to her sons in tail male, with the like power of appointment, and the like limitations as in relation to Mr. and Mrs. Beaumont and Mr. and Mrs. Lee.

The testator, as to all his other real estates, devised them to the same trustees to the ... of T. R. B. and Diana his wife, and the son and sons of his said daughter Diana, and the heirs male of such son and sons, and to the use of William Lee and Sophia his wife and her sons, in the same terms, and "of my said daughter Louisa, and such person as she may so marry, if any, as aforesaid, and of the son and sons of my said daughter Louisa, and the heirs male of the body of such son and sons, &c. severally, respectively, and successively," upon such trusts, &c. as before declared concerning the estates before devised.

The testator then charged all his estates in Northumberland and Durham, except those devised to his nephew William Bosville, with two rent-charges, and gave to John Cockshutt and his heirs one annuity or rent-charge of 3,000*l.* upon trust for the use of William Lee and Sophia his wife for their lives, and upon the death of the survivor to the use of such son or sons as the survivor should appoint, &c. and for default of such issue, &c. or in case William Lee and his wife, or either of them, should inherit or possess any of the premises before devised, then the rent-charge to sink into the estate charged with the payment thereof, and to be annihilated. And he gave to John Cockshutt and his heirs another annuity or rent-charge of 3,000*l.* upon trust for the only proper use and behoof of his said daughter Louisa Wentworth and her assigns, "until she shall marry (under and with the restriction above mentioned), or for and during the term of her natural life; and when and so soon as she my said daughter shall marry as aforesaid," then upon such trusts in like manner, and with the like powers, for such estates and interests, and with the like remainders and limitations, and subject to the same contingencies and annihilations as before declared concerning and in relation to the aforesaid rent-charge devised for the benefit of Sophia.

He also gave his daughter Louisa a legacy of 10,000*l.* 5,000*l.* payable upon her marriage, "with such consent and approbation as aforesaid," and 5,000*l.* within two years next afterwards.

The material facts stated upon the pleadings were that Louisa married whilst a minor, without the consent of the trustees, and without any settlement made upon her. She had a son by that marriage; and afterwards, being a widow, married her second husband, John Clifford. After her second marriage she exercised her power of appointment in favour of her eldest son by her first husband.

The case was argued Tuesday, Nov. 18, before Lord Campbell, C.J. Patteson, Coleridge, and Wightman, JJ. by Butt for the defendant.

Lord Campbell, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case the question for decision arises upon the construction of a clause in the will of Sir Thomas Blackett, made in 1792. The defendant avows for a distress made for arrears of a rent-charge created by that will; in one avowry, claiming immediately under an appointment by Louisa Clifford, who, as Louisa Wentworth, was the first devisee of the rent-charge with a power of appointment; in the second, under an appointment by John Clifford, her second husband; and the questions will be, whether at the respective times of these appointments the powers under which they respectively professed to act existed in either of these persons. It will be necessary, in considering these questions, to advert not merely to the devise now to be construed, but to four other portions of the will, which may be described as the devises respectively of the Gunnertone estate, of the family estates, and two rent-charges on these last, amounting to 3,000*l.* a year each, one of them the rent-charge in question, and a legacy of 10,000*l.* But it may be proper, in the first place, to consider the clause which limited the two rent-charges, only premising that at the date of the will Sir Thomas Blackett had no legitimate child, and his three natural daughters were among the principal objects of his bounty; Diana, then married to Thomas Richard Beaumont, Sophia, then married to William Lee, and Louisa Wentworth, then a minor, unmarried. The devise in question is as follows. "To John Cockshutt and his heirs one other annuity or clear yearly rent-charge of 3,000*l.* upon trust, nevertheless, to and for the proper use and behoof of my said daughter, Louisa Wentworth and her assigns, until she, my said daughter, shall marry (under and with the restriction above mentioned), or for and during the term of her natural life; and when and so soon as she, my said daughter, shall marry, as aforesaid, then upon such trusts, and in like manner, and with the like powers for such and the like estates and interests and with the like remainders and limitations, and subject to the same like contingencies and annihilations as are hereinbefore particularly mentioned and declared of and concerning and in relation to the aforesaid rent-charge herinbefore given for the benefit of my said daughter, Sophia." It will be observed that this clause contains two references, the last of which refers to the trusts, powers, estates, remainders, limitations, and contingencies to arise upon marriage, and applies specifically to this devise what had been before expressed in regard to the rent-charge created in favour of Mrs. Lee, the former referring to the "restriction above mentioned." If, under the circumstances, the trusts, powers, estates, &c. have arisen, there is no difficulty in the construction of the clause referred to, which sets them out at length, and perhaps the only remark which it is worth while to make upon it in passing is that if they do not arise, so that what is limited after the life estates did not take effect, there is a specific provision for the rent-charge to sink into the hereditaments and premises chargeable with the payment thereof, and thenceforth to be annihilated and be no longer paid or payable. But in the view which we take of this case, this becomes immaterial. To ascertain what the testator intended by the 'restriction above mentioned," we are remitted to the first of the four devises spoken of above, that of the Gunnertone estate. This was, in the first place, to his nephew, William Bosville, in strict settlement, in default of appointment; remainder in the same manner to the Beaumonts and Lees successively, and then "to the use of Louisa Wentworth (the other of my natural daughters), or such person as she shall first intermarry with, if any (if before she attain the age of twenty-one, by and with the consent and approbation of the said trustees, or the survivor of them, and which person shall also previously make a complete settlement upon her my said daughter Louisa, by deed or deeds in writing to the like approbation of the said trustees), for and during their joint natural lives, or the life of the survivor of them." Supposing Louisa Wentworth to marry, but without fulfilling the condition imposed by this "restriction," as the testator calls it, it is obvious that at least two questions with regard to the rent-charge might arise; the first is as to her own interest; the second, as to the power of appointment, or in default of appointment the interest of her sons, if any, under the devise. She did marry while a minor, but without the consent of the trustees, and without any settlement made upon her; and the first of these questions, which has some bearing on the second, that now before us, did arise and received a judicial decision from Lord Loughborough, in the case of Stackpole v. Beaumont, 3 Ves. Jun. 89. He thought it very clear that she was entitled for her life to the rent-charge; that neither the first husband was, nor would any after-taken husband be entitled to any interest in it; and he had further to decide in the same case on a claim which Louisa, then Mrs. Stackpole, put forward to the legacy of 10,000*l.* above mentioned. The words of that bequest were as follow:—"To my said daughter Louisa the legacy or sum of 10,000*l.* payable and to be paid unto her in manner following; that is to say, the sum of 5,000*l.* upon her marriage, with such consent and approbation as aforesaid; and the sum of 5,000*l.* within two years next afterwards." He determined that the condition here imposed by the testator was a lawful one, and as it had not been performed the daughter was not then entitled to the legacy. Many years after she, having become a widow, married Mr. Clifford, and again claimed the legacy upon the ground that it was payable to her on marriage generally, and that the required consent applied only to a marriage under twenty-one. (Clifford v. Beaumont.) Sir John Leach, Master of the Rolls, decided against the claim, and it does not appear that his judgment was ever reviewed. The questions which now arise, arose either not at all or very indirectly in the cases just referred to. Lord Loughborough expressly declined to make any declaration as to the children. The plaintiff, who now denies that the power ever arose or the limitations took effect, must contend either that by the words of the devise a condition precedent is created, until the performance of which no trust or power for the benefit of children arises, that condition being a marriage while under age, with consent of trustees, and with a settlement previously made, or that at all events, though if the daughter had not married while a minor, the condition might not have attached on a first marriage, made after attaining full age, yet that the first marriage, whenever contracted, was so exclusively in the contemplation of the testator, that being made in breach of the restriction imposed, it prevented the trusts and powers in favour of children from ever arising. It seems to us, on full consideration, that these positions labour under insuperable difficulties; as to the first, which relies on the literal import of the words "when and so soon as she, my said daughter, shall marry as aforesaid," however specific the words "when and as" certainly are, it is clearly not necessary to hold that the words "as aforesaid" incorporate all the previous conditions, or limit the marriage to the first made; for it is not an absurd or insufficient meaning to give them if we make them refer only to the mere fact of marriage before spoken of; and it is the more natural to do so, because if the sentence is construed to make a marriage before age an absolute condition precedent, the testator must be supposed to have required his daughter to marry while a minor in such sense, that if she remained single during that time, but married after twenty-one, her children by such marriage would be excluded. But this is a supposition so absurd in itself, so contrary to his obvious wish to guard her during minority, and to discourage her from marriage during that period by in some sort restraining her liberty as to choice and terms, and also so inconsistent with his plain scheme of making her position, so far as he could, the same as her sister Sophia's, that the construction involving it ought to be inevitable to induce us to adopt it. No one could infer from a restraint on marriage before twenty-one, unless under certain conditions, or at most a qualified permission to marry before that age, an intention so to insist on a marriage being made before that age, that all trusts in favour of children of every marriage she might at any time make were to depend on it. On the other hand, if we adopt the second supposition, we are met with this difficulty. The testator clearly distinguishes between husband and children as objects of his bounty; only the first husband is to take interest or power, but the children of a first, or any after-taken husband, may succeed. Yet, according to this supposition, if there had been no children by Mr. Stackpoole, but there had been by Mr. Clifford, these must have been excluded; the power could not have been exercised in their favour, in spite of the manifest general intention and some of the language of the testator, on account of the first marriage—which certainly is a very unreasonable intention to impute to the testator; it is to deduce a very serious consequence from a cause which has no reasonable relation to it. Lord Loughborough's decision, however, determined that the young lady herself did not forfeit her own life interest in the rent-charge by the marriage which she first contracted. Looking at the words of the previous devise of the Gunnertone estate, it cannot be doubted that he would have held, supposing the previous limitations to have failed, that her marriage did not prevent her taking those estates for life al Now, in that case, we think it clear that, although the limitations in favour of her first husband could not have taken effect, yet those in favour of her sons by him, or any after-taken husband, would have taken effect. But, although there are slight variations in the wording, yet as the testator, both in respect of the family estates and the rent-charges, refers to the language used in respect of the limitations of the Gunnertone estate, it is clear that in these his intent was the same, and certainly the general words of reference in the second and third cases must be construed according to the meaning of the more detailed language in the first It would seem, therefore, to follow that the limitations over as to the rent-charges, so far as regards the sons of the marriage, will take effect; and this does no violence to the language used. If the parenthetical words, "under and with the restriction above mentioned," had been omitted there, we should still have found nothing awkward or redundant in the language which follows, "when and so soon as my said daughter shall marry as aforesaid;" the words "as aforesaid" would equally in that case have been inserted by a conveyancer, merely to refer to the fact of marriage before spoken of. There can, therefore, be no necessity for making them also take up the parenthetical words, and so introduce the restriction there also, for the purpose of making the limitations over depend on it as on a strict condition precedent. Nor does any difficulty arise upon Lord Loughborough's decision as to the legacy of 10,000*l.* because in that case, when the intended legatee applied as Mrs. Stackpole she had clearly not brought herself within the words of the bequest. She was a minor, and had married, but had not married with the required consent The words were too specific to be got over. In the case before Sir John Leach, when she had married Mr Clifford, having married after coming of full age, it was perhaps open to her to contend that the condition was now spent; that the first marriage, if it did not of itself entitle her to the legacy, yet would not prevent the effect of the second marriage, and certainly the judgment does not give any satisfactory answer to some of the arguments of her counsel; nor are grounds satisfactory to our minds put forward by the learned judge in giving judgment, in support of it. Better reasons, perhaps, might be suggested from the particular language of the will; but the Master of the Rolls seems to have thought that Lord Loughborough decided more than he really did. We are, therefore, upon the whole, of opinion that the power was vested in Mrs. Clifford; and, as no objections have been made to the manner in which it was exercised, that the first avowry is good, and the plea in bar is no answer. Our judgment will, therefore, be for the defendant on this point.

Judgment for the defendant.

WEBSTER v. KIRK.

Bill of exchange—Payee against drawer—Security for debt of another—Statute of Limitations.

In an action by the payee of three bills of exchange against the drawer, to which the Statute of Limitations was pleaded, it appeared that the brother of the drawer had been indebted to a banking company, to the plaintiff, and to the defendant; that in pursuance of an arrangement between the parties the bills had been drawn by the defendant on his brother, payable to the plaintiff, and then handed to the banking company, that the bills became due on the 4th of May, 1843; that the banking company commenced an action against the plaintiff on them in 1847, and signed judgment in December 1850; that early in the year 1851 the plaintiff settled that action, and that afterwards in April 1851 the action was brought:

Held, that the action on the bill was barred by the Statute of Limitations.

This was an action of assumpsit by the payee of three bills of exchange against the drawer. The declaration contained three counts upon three bills of exchange drawn by the defendant, John Kirk, upon William Kirk, payable to the plaintiffs or their order; and a count for money paid. First plea to the whole declaration, the Statute of Limitations; eighth plea to the fourth count, non assumpsit. On the trial, before Platt, B. at the Yorkshire Summer Assizes in 1851, it appeared that on the 1st June, 1840, which was the date of the first bill, William Kirk was indebted to the Yorkshire District Banking Company, who were pressing him for the payment of the balance of his account; and that he was also indebted to the plaintiffs, as well as to his brother, the defendant. It was then arranged that bills to the amount of William Kirk's debt to the bank should be drawn, and delivered to the banking company; and that the defendant should be the drawer and the plaintiffs the payees of the bills. The bill declared upon in the first count was one of the series, and was made payable thirty-five months after date, which would expire on the 4th May, 1843; the bills in the second and third counts were given in renewal of the original bill, and were made payable on the same day as that bill. The action was brought on the 28th April, 1851. The bills were in the hands of the banking company at their maturity, when they were dishonoured, and in 1847 the banking company commenced an action against the present plaintiffs upon the bills, and signed judgment in December, 1850, and early in 1851 the present plaintiffs settled that action. It was contended for the plaintiffs, that their right to sue the defendant did not accrue until they had paid the bills, and had become holders of them, and therefore the action did not accrue until 1851. The learned judge, without expressing any opinion, directed a verdict for the plaintiffs for 1,304*l.* 16*s.* reserving leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant, or to reduce the damages to 652*l.* 8*s.* being one-half of the whole amount.

In the following Michaelmas Term (Nov. 1) a rule nisi was obtained, pursuant to leave, on two grounds,—first, that the Statute of Limitations was an answer to the action on the bills, and Rhodes v. Southurst, 6 M. & W. 351, was quoted; and, secondly, that the damage ought to be reduced, the plaintiff and the defendant having been mutually sureties for William Kirk.

Jan. 26 and 28.—Against the rule cause was shewn by

Hull.—The Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until the cause of action has accrued (Stat. 21 Jac. 1, c 16, ss. 3, 7; Murray v. The East India Company, 5 B & A. 201); that is, accrued to the plaintiffs, for without a plaintiff to whom it may accrue the action cannot accrue. The defendant was an accommodation indorser, and so contracted that the acceptor should pay the bill and that the assignee of the bill, which between them was a chose in action, should be on demand, and the bank, in fact, gave no value, but took the bills as a collateral security for the debt due to them from the acceptor; and if that debt had been satisfied by other means, the bank could not have sued upon the bills. The plaintiffs and the defendant were sureties to the bank upon the terms of the bill, and the plaintiff was surety for the defendant to the bank; but he could not sue the defendant until he himself had been compelled to pay, and for every payment made by him, that is, for every fresh damnification, a fresh right of action arose. (Pownel v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 430; The East-India Company v. Prince, R. & M. 407; Savage v. Aldren, 2 Stark. 202; Brooks v. Rogers, 1 H. Bl. 640; Howis v. Higgins, 4 T. R. 714.) In the case of Cowley v. Dunlop, 7 T. R. 565, which was an action by the assignee of the firm of Peters, it was allowed by all the Court, that if the indorser of a bill for valuable considerations be compelled to pay it on account of bankruptcy of the acceptor, he may prove it under the commissioner, although he did not take it up till after the commission issued. All the judges admitted in that case the distinction between a surety and an indorser for valuable consideration. For the present purpose the Statute of Limitations is analogous to the Statute of Bankruptcy. He then cited Wallis v. Swinburne, 1 Ex. 203; and Harle v. Baxter, 3 East, 177.

Atherton, Q.C. (with him Ellis and Boothby), contrà.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We think that the action is barred as to the bills of exchange by the Statute of Limitations; but as to the other count there must be a new trial to ascertain more clearly the terms on which the original bill was given.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

REG. on the Prosecution of the MARQUIS of BRISTOL v. THE TITHE COMMISSIONERS.

Tithe Commutation Acts—Differences determinable by Commissioners—Question of title—Remedy.

A writ of mandamus recited, that there were differences between certain landowners in the parish of H. and the vicar, as to whether the old enclosed lands were wholly exempt and discharged from great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool, or, if not exempted, whether they were subject only to the payment of 1*s. per acre yearly to the impropriator of the parish for or in lieu of the great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool, and as to the new enclosed lands, whether they were wholly exempt from the render of great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool, and commanded the Tithe Commissioners to appoint a time and place for hearing and determining the same differences. The return stated a meeting before the assistant commissioner, on the* 24*th of April,* 1843, in pursuance of a notice, at which the vicar claimed tithes of lamb and wool, and the agent of the land owners contended that by a decree of the Court of Chancery in 1697, all the tithes of the parish had been commuted, and that meeting was adjourned in order to ascertain whether the commissioners would consent that all the evidence relating to the disputes and differences that had so arisen should be heard before the assistant commissioner, and that a further notice was given by the commissioners on the 22*nd of February,* 1844, to hear and determine the said differences, whereby the making of the award was alleged to be hindered, that such meeting was held before an assistant commissioner, when the parties attended by counsel, and the vicar proposed that a feigned issue should be tried as to the right to the tithes of lamb and wool, and that the said commissioner should award a rent-charge in lieu of them to the party entitled; but the landowners insisted that those tithes were extinguished by an agreement and the decree of the Court of Chancery; that a difference was existing between the landowners, vicar, and impropiator concerning the tithes, and they required the commissioners to decide it. It was arranged that time should be given to the parties to consider whether they would consent to try a feigned issue as to the title to the said tithes, and if they did not the landowners should be at liberty to apply to this Court for a mandamus to compel the commissioners to decide the question, whether the said tithes of lamb and wool belonged to the vicar, or to the landowners and impropriator of the tithes of the respective lands, that being a question of title. The return then stated a bill in Chancery filed by the vicar (the same person who is now vicar) in 1812, against certain landowners, for the subtraction of tithes, in which a question was raised whether the lands were ever liable to the payment of tithes of lamb and wool to the vicar. It then stated the decree of the Court of Chancery of the 14*th of November,* 1817, by which it appeared that the defendants set up an agreement of 1697, confirmed by a decree of the Court, and a subsequent agreement of the 16*th of September,* 1707, as binding on the vicar, which he denied to be binding on him, and by which decree of November, 1817, the Court ordered the Master to take an account of the tithes of lamb and wool as due to the vicar, dismissing his bill as to the tithes of hay. The return then stated a bill in Chancery in 1819 by the impropriator against the vicar for the tithes of wool and lamb, which bill was dismissed out of court, with costs, The return then stated a petition that was preferred in 1821 to the Vice-Chancellor, Sir John Leach, by one of the occupiers of the parish, for leave to file a supplemental bill in the original suit in which the decree of 1817 was made, as to whether the vicar was not entitled to the tithe of lamb and wool, which petition was dismissed with costs. Then it stated an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, which appeal was dismissed with costs. The return then stated the perception of the tithes of lamb and wool by the vicar; and further, that the Tithe Commissioners, considering the decree had established the right of the vicar, on the 5th of June, 1845, in answer to a requisition from the agent of the landowners, declined to confirm as invalid the agreements of 1697 and 1707, or to decide the question of title. It then stated an application to this Court in 1845, for a writ of mandamus to compel them to confirm the agreement, and to decide the existing differences, the issuing of the writ, the return to it; and the demurrer and judgment for the commissioners in December 1849. It then stated that the assistant commissioner, on the 4th of February, 1850, made his final award; but that the confirmation was delayed till the 28th of February of the same year, which delay was in order to give the landowners an opportunity of making any further claim before such confirmation; that notice was given to the agent of the landowners of their intention to confirm the award about to be made within a fortnight after such notice, that is to say, on the 23rd of February. The return then set out the award, which found all the titheable lands in the parish subject to the tithe in kind, stated who were the impropriators of the great tithes, that the vicar is in possession of the tithes of lamb and wool, and entitled to the residue of the tithes. It then fixed the rent-charge to several landowners, and 360l. to the vicar for the time being, or the party entitled in lieu of the tithes of lamb and wool, and 150l. to the vicar for other tithes.

On special demurrer, held, that no difference was shewn to exist between the vicar and the landowners by which the making of the award was hindered, or any which the commissioners had power to hear and determine; that the question was purely one of title between the impropriator and the vicar, which might still be contested under the 71st section of the Tithe Commutation Act, and, therefore, that even if the writ were good (which was very doubtful), the return was a sufficient answer to it, and judgment must be given for the commissioners.

The judgment in this case sufficiently states the facts and the argument for the prosecutor, which only was heard; the Court, at the close of it, saying that if the opinion then formed by them should be altered on consideration, they would call on the counsel for the defendants.

Monday, Nov. 24.—Cowling for the prosecutor.

Bovill appeared for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, Feb. 21.—The judgment was pronounced by Coleridge, J.—The writ of mandamus in this case states that there were certain differences between certain landowners in the parish of Great Hale and the vicar, namely, as to the old inclosed lands, whether they were wholly exempt and discharged from the render of great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool, or if not exempted, whether they were subject only to the payment of one shilling per acre yearly to the impropriator of the parish for, or in lieu of, the great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool; and as to the new inclosed lands, whether they were wholly exempt from the render of great tithes and tithes of lamb and wool. The writ commands the commissioners to appoint a time and place for hearing and determining the same differences; and the return states a meeting before the assistant commissioner on the 24th of April, 1843, in pursuance of a notice, at which the vicar claimed tithes of wool and lamb, and the agent of the landowners contended that by a decree of the Court of Chancery in 1697, all the tithes of the parish had been commuted, and that meeting was adjourned in order to ascertain whether the commissioners would consent that all the evidence relating to the disputes and differences that had so arisen should be heard before the assistant commissioner, and that a further notice was given by the commissioners on the 22nd of February, 1844, to hear and determine the said differences, whereby the making of the award was alleged to be hindered; that such meeting was held before an assistant commissioner, when the parties attended by counsel, and the vicar proposed that a feigned issue should be tried as to the right to the tithes of lamb and wool, and that the said commissioners should award a rent-charge in lieu of them to the party entitled; but the landowners insisted that those tithes were extinguished by an agreement and the decree of the Court of Chancery; that a difference was existing between the landowners, vicar, and impropriator concerning the tithes, and they required the commissioners to decide it. It was arranged that time should be given to the parties to consider whether they would consent to try a feigned issue as to the title to the said tithes, and if they did not the landowners should be at liberty to apply to this Court for a mandamus to compel the commissioners to try the question whether the said tithes of lamb and wool belonged to the vicar or to the landowners and impropriator of the tithes of the respective lands, that being a question of title. The return then states a bill in Chancery filed by the vicar (the same person who is now vicar) in 1812, against certain landowners for the subtraction of tithes, in which a question was raised whether the lands were ever liable to the payment of tithes of lamb and wool to the vicar. It then states the decree of the Court of Chancery of the 11th of November, 1817, by which it appears that the defendants set up an agreement of 1697, confirmed by a decree of the Court and the subsequent agreement of the 16th of September, 1707, as binding on the vicar, which he denied to be binding on him, and by which decree of November, 1817, the Court ordered the Master to take an account of the tithes of lamb and wool as due to the vicar, dismissing his bill as to the tithes of hay. The return then states a bill in Chancery in 1815 by the impropriators against the vicar for the tithes of wool and lamb, which bill was dismissed out of Court with costs. The return then states a petition that was referred in 1821 to the Vice-Chancellor Sir John Leach by one of the occupiers of the parish for leave to file a supplemental bill in the original suit, in which the decree of 1817 was made, as to whether the vicar was not entitled to the tithes of lamb and wool, which petition was dismissed with costs. Then it states an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, which appeal was dismissed with costs. The return then states the perception of the tithes of lamb and wool by the vicar; and further, that the Tithe Commissioners, considering the decree had established the right of the vicar on the 5th of June, 1845, in answer to a requisition from the agent of the landowners, declined to confirm, as invalid, the agreements of 1697 and 1707, or to decide the question of title. It then states an application to this Court in 1845 for a writ of mandamus to compel them to confirm the agreement, and to decide the existing differences; the issuing of the writ, the return to it, and the demurrer; and judgment for the commissioners in December 1849, which case is reported in 19 L. J. 177, Q. B. It then states that the assistant commissi [illegible] his final award, but that the confirmation was delayed till the 28th of February of the same year, which delay was in order to give the landowners an opportunity of making any further claim before such confirmation; that notice was given to the agent of the landowners of their intention to confirm the award about to be made, within a fortnight after such notice, that is to say, on the 28th of February. The return then sets out the award, which finds all the titheable lands in the parish subject to the tithe in kind; states who are the impropriators of the great tithes; that the vicar is in possession of the tithes of lamb and wool, and entitled to the residue of the tithes. It then fixes the rent-charge of 10l. 6s. 4d. to Sir George Farrant and Thomas Farrant; 3l. 13s. to Mr. Godson; 1,182l. to several landowners, and 360l. to the vicar for the time being, or the party entitled in lieu of the tithes of lamb and wool, and 150l. to the vicar for other tithes. To this return there was a special demurrer. From the writ of mandamus itself we gather that when the vicar is claiming tithes of lamb and wool, the landowners say their lands are exempt from these tithes by reason of the payment of 1s. per acre in lieu of them to the impropriator. Now this either means that the impropriator, and not the vicar, is owner of these tithes, but is bound to receive a shilling per acre in lieu of them; and if that be the meaning, it raises at once a question of title between the impropriator and the vicar, which is a difference the commissioners cannot determine, and so the writ is bad (see 15 Q. B. Rep. Reg. v. The Tithe Commissioners); or it is that the vicar is owner of these tithes, but cannot receive them, because a shilling per acre is to be paid to the impropriator in lieu of them—a startling proposition which one would think would hardly be supported by any state of circumstances. When, however, we come to look at the statement in the return we find this shilling per acre is not an immemorial payment or modus, but had its origin in the agreement of 1697. That agreement may be binding on the impropriator, but it is invalid as regards the vicar, which the decrees in Chancery abundantly shew. And so plainly is this the case, that the landowners endeavoured to persuade the commissioners to confirm it, on the ground of its being an invalid agreement, under the 7th section of the Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54, and failing so to persuade them obtained a writ of mandamus to compel them, in which also they failed, and do not now attempt to renew such compulsion, but this Court has expressly already decided that the agreement is not such an agreement as the commissioners were bound to confirm. (See 19 L. J. 177.) If, then, the agreement be binding on the impropriate rector only, and not the vicar, and a shilling in lieu of tithes of lamb and wool be payable only under the agreement, it is plain it can only be a payment exempting the land from the render of those tithes on the supposition that the impropriator is the owner, and not the vicar, who, if he be owner of them, is manifestly entitled to them in kind. In other words, the question, in this view, is a question of title. Again, it appears by the return, that the commissioners declined to go into further discussion, because they find the vicar in possession of the tithes of lamb and wool, and considered themselves bound by the principle of the decree in the Court of Chancery, according to the 44th sect. 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71. The learned counsel for the landowners argued that they are not so bound, and cited authorities to shew that where a feigned issue is tried under the 46th sect. of the Act, the judge and jury are not so bound; and that is perfectly true, but it shews, however, the landowners ought to have adopted the course of trying a feigned issue, which it appears by the return was proposed by the vicar, and declined by them, if there was to have been any question which could be tried on such an issue between the parties. Looking at the whole of the pleading in this case, namely, the writ and return, it is manifest that no difference existed between the vicar and the landowners by which the making of the award was hindered, or any which the commissioners had power to hear and determine. The question is purely one of title between the impropriator and the vicar, which may still be contested under the provisions of the 71st section of the Act, which gives all persons who have claims to tithes the same right of claiming a rent-charge in lieu of tithes. We are, therefore, of opinion, even if this writ be good (which we think very doubtful), the return is a sufficient answer to it, and judgment must be given for the commissioners.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Reported by A. Bittleston, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

ERROR FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, Feb. 2.

Will—Construction—Executory devise—Remoteness—Contingent remainder.

[illegible] devise over is limited upon t[illegible] gencies, upon one of which it would be void for remoteness, but not upon the other, the devise is void altogether. A testator devised his real estates to his daughter E. for life, and after her death to such of her children, if males, who should live to attain twenty-three, if females, who should live to the age of twenty-one, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common; and in case all the children of E. should die under those ages, or if she had none, then to his son J. and his daughters S. and A. for their lives; and upon their decease, the share of such of them so dying unto his or her children, if males, living to twenty-three, or daughters, living to twenty-one, in fee. And in case of the death of J. or S. or A. without leaving a child who should, if a male, attain twenty-three, or if a female, to attain twenty-one, then he gave the parts such children would have been entitled to, to the child and children of J., S. and A. having issue, if sons, living to to the age of twenty-three, if daughters, to the age of twenty-one.

After the death of the testator, E. died, never having had a child, afterwards A. died, never having had a child. S. and J. had several children who attained the prescribed ages:

Held (reversing the judgment of the Court below), that the devise over to the children of J. and S. after the death of A. was void for remoteness. It would have been valid if it had been a devise over in the single event of A. having no child at all; but as it also included the event of A. having a child, and the child dying under the prescribed age, it was void altogether.

Error from a judgment of the Court of Q. B. in favour of the lessors of the plaintiff. The question turned upon the construction of a will, the material parts of which are set out in the judgment of the Court.

The case was argued (Thursday, Nov. 27) before Alderson, B., Maule, J., Cresswell, J., Platt, B., Williams, J., Talfourd, J. and Martin, B. by

Cur. adv. vult.

Alderson, B. now delivered the judgment of the

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Court.—This is a writ of error from the judgment of the Court of Q. B. upon a special verdict. This was an action of ejectment brought to recover a twelfth part of certain property devised by the will of one Thomas Dolley to his daughter Elizabeth. The lessors of the plaintiff were Mary Ann Evers and her husband, she being one of the two children of John Dolley, the son of the testator. The testator had four children, John, Sarah, Anne, and Elizabeth; and by his will, dated 12th June, 1819, he gave the property (the twelfth part of which is now in question) to trustees during the life of his daughter Elizabeth, in trust for her separate use; and after her decease, he gave the same to such children as she might have, if a son or sons, who should live to the age of twenty-three; and if a daughter or daughters, who should live to the age of twenty-one years, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common He then provided for the disposition of his property, in the event of one or more of the children of Elizabeth dying leaving others surviving. He then provided this: "In case all the children of my said daughter Elizabeth shall die, if a son or sons, under the age of twenty-three years, or if a daughter, under the age of twenty-one, or if she has none, I give all the said last-mentioned premises unto the said Thomas Challis and John Brogden, their heirs, &c. during the respective lives of my said son John Dolley and daughters Sarah Ward and Anne Dolley, upon trust to pay, or permit my said son and two last-mentioned daughters to receive and take, the rents, profits, and annual income thereof, for and during their respective natural lives, in equal shares; the share of my said two daughters to be for their separate uses only, and independent of any husband or husbands, and upon the decease of my said son and two last-named daughters, I give the share of such of them so dying unto his or her children, if a son or sons, living to attain the age of twenty-three years; and if a daughter or daughters, living to attain the age of twenty-one years, his, her, and their heirs and assigns, if more than one, in equal shares, as tenants in common; and if only one child, to such only child, his or her heirs and assigns." The part of the devise on which the question depends is this: "And further, in case of the death of my said son, or of either of my said two daughters, without leaving a child, if a son, that shall live to attain the age of twenty-three years, or if a daughter, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, I give the part and parts such children or child would be entitled to as aforesaid, unto the child or children of my said son and two daughters having issue, if a son or sons, living to the age of twenty-three years, and if a daughter or daughters, living to attain the age of twenty-one years; if two of my said last-named children have such children or child, to them, his, or her heirs and assigns, as taking in equal shares from his or her father or mother, his, her, and their heirs and assigns; and if only one of them, my said son and two daughters, leaves issue that lives, if a son or sons, to the age of twenty-three years, or if a daughter or daughters, to attain the age of twenty-one years, then I give the whole of such last-mentioned estate and premises unto such issue, if more than one, in equal shares, their respective heirs and assigns, and if only one, to such one, his or her heirs and assigns, at the ages aforesaid." Elizabeth died in August 1838, having been married, but never having had a child. Upon her death, her brother and two sisters took each one third of the property devised to her issue. In March 1847 Anne died, having been married, but also never having had a child, and thereupon Mrs. Evers, being one of the two children of John, and being twenty-one years of age, claimed a twelfth part of the property devised to Elizabeth, insisting that, upon the event that had happened, the two children of John became entitled to a half of the third of the property devised to Elizabeth, which had come to Anne on her death, and that she, as one of them, was entitled to a half of this third, or one-twelfth of the whole. A special verdict was found, which stated the above facts, and judgment was given by the Court of Queen's Bench for the lessor of the plaintiff. The case is reported in 20 L.J. 113, and upon this judgment the present writ of error is brought. This will came under the consideration of the Court of Q.B. in the case of Doe v. Ward, 2 Ad. & E. 582, and both parties acquiesced, and, as we think, most correctly, in the propriety of that decision. We are to take it, therefore, as clearly established, that by this will the testator gave an estate for life to his daughter Elizabeth, with a contingent remainder in fee to her unborn children, which, on the birth of the child, became a vested remainder in fee; that upon such child or children being born and failing, if males, to attain the age of twenty-three, and if females, to attain twenty-one, then he gave Elizabeth's share over by an executory devise to his other three children equally. Now it is clear, this executory devise over would be void as too remote; but in this part of his will the testator also provided, by a distinct and separate clause, that if Elizabeth should have no children, the property devised to her should go over in like manner to his three remaining children. In the event which happened, the contingent remainder to Elizabeth's children never vested, and so the devise over took effect, not as an executory devise, but as a good contingent remainder to the three other children of the testator, one of whom was the testator's daughter Anne. In the event, therefore, which had happened, the devise was one to Elizabeth for life, with contingent remainder to her unborn issue tail—contingent remainder, one third to Anne for life, with a contingent remainder in fee to Anne's unborn issue, to become vested on the birth of a child, and with a devise over, on which the present question turns, in favour of the children of his surviving brother John and sister Sarah. Now Anne died never having had a child, and consequently the contingent remainder in fee given to her children failed. We must, therefore, look at the terms of the devise over: they are as follows:—"in case of the death of my son, or either of my two daughters, without leaving a child, if a son, that shall live to attain the age of twenty-three years, or if a daughter, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, I give the part and parts such children or child would be entitled to as aforesaid, unto the child or children of my said son and two daughters having issue, if a son or sons, living to the age of twenty-three years, and if a daughter or daughters, living to attain the age of twenty-one years." Now here there are not the two events which were separately and distinctly mentioned in the former devise over; the event, if she shall have no children is not mentioned in terms at all. The question between the parties is, whether this devise over be void or not? It may be well admitted, that the testator intended to include in these words two events, first, the event of Anne having no child at all (and certainly, if she never had a child, she must die without a son who could attain twenty-three, or a daughter who could attain twenty-one); but that, secondly, he also intended to include in those same words the compound event of her having a child, and the child dying under the prescribed age. This second event is, according to all the cases, too remote an event to take effect according to law. The first, if it stood alone, is legal. The thing to be settled is the principle on which the Court is to act. In the first place, it seems established, that the time to construe the will is at the testator's death. The devise at that time must be legal to oust the heir-at-law. Now, at the death of the testator, and in the lifetime of Anne, how would the devise have been construed? For it is not sufficient, that on the happening of certain events the devise may take effect, and if limited to those events originally, would have been good; but it ought to have been shown that the devise of the testator must be valid and legal in all the events contemplated by him. This, we think, is the principle contained in the passage of Sir William Grant's judgment, in Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 370, in which he says an executory devise is an infringement of the rules of common law, and is only to be allowed in consideration of its not exceeding certain established limits. In a devise to a class, therefore, the Courts do not split the devise into two parts, and give effect to the legal part; for this (says Sir William Grant) is to make a will for the testator. Here the true meaning of this devise is, in every event which can happen, in which Anne dies, leaving no children, if male, who attained twenty-three, or if female, who attained twenty-one, I give the estate over. That is what he says, and that is what he means. He includes all those events in one clause. Some are legal, and some are illegal. If it is the Court to sever those events which the testator has expressly joined together, without making a new will? The principle seems, therefore, to be against splitting such a devise, when we are considering the question whether it is a legal one. Now this question, it is conceded, must be determined as on reading the will at the instant of the testator's death. Do the cases cited affect this principle? On looking at them, we find that in all of them the devise in any event was legal, and that it was competent to the testator to make it. In Jones v. Westcomb, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245, a case on which the Court of Q. B. proceeded, it was a bequest to the wife for life, and after her death to the child with which she was supposed to be enceinte; and if such child should die before twenty-one, then, as to one-third, to the wife, and two-thirds to other persons; and it was held that the wife, not being enceinte, the bequest over took effect. But if the testator had distinctly expressed all that the Court held to be included in the words he used, the whole would have been legal. This is not an authority, therefore, for splitting a devise, and giving effect to the legal, and rejecting altogether the illegal. Gulliver v. Wickett, 1 Wilson C. C. 105, which is the same case, only applying this will to real estate, is to the same effect; and the observations of the Court in the latter case, as to the validity of the executory devise over, if it took effect as an executory devise, were material, if this necessity for the devise being legal on all the contingencies contemplated by the testator, be the true principle on which the Court acts, and may reconcile the observations of Fearne with those of Bailey, J. in Doe dem. Harris v. Howell, 10 B. & C. 196; and Meadows v. Parry, 1 Ves. & B. 126, is to the same effect. These cases are fully explained and put on a very clear principle by Sir William Grant, in Murray v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 313. They shew, no doubt, that the existence and failure of the children for whom the provisions limited are made, not in all cases, and was not in those cases, a condition precedent to the devise over; but they shew no more, and do not at all apply to the question now before the Court, whether, if one of the contingencies be illegal, the single devise which included that contingency, but with others, became void. If Lady Bath had separately stated in her will the contingencies on either of which Mrs. Markham was to take, each would have been legal; and the Court held, that her including them both in one expression made no difference. This is like expressing the individuals of a class all of whom can legally take, and including all those individuals in a class, which is good; but the reverse is true, if some of the individuals cannot legally take. Then, if they are expressly named, the will is carried partly into effect; but if they are classed together, it becomes void. Suppose this had been a limitation by deed to Anne for life, the remainder to her children in fee; or if she have none, if male, who have attained twenty-three, or female, who attained twenty-one, then over, it is, I apprehend, clear enough that such a limitation over would be void altogether at common law. It may, however, says Fearne, p. 373, be good in a will, or by way of use, on a contingency to happen within a reasonable period. Now, if so, must the contingency here so happen? We think not; for it may go beyond the period allowed by law, if the natural and full effect be given to the words of the testator. For these reasons, we think the judgment of the Court of Q. B. must be reversed.

PROTECTION CASE.

Tuesday, March 30.

(Before the Chief Commissioner.)

Re John Bingham the Younger.

Non-appearance at first examination—Mode of obtaining subsequent protection against creditors in the schedule.

Held, that a petitioner who has lost his protection on account of not appearing at an adjourned examination, upon being taken into custody by his creditors, must apply under the 28th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

Cooke applied for a new interim order under the following circumstances. The petitioner appeared upon his interim examination on the 2nd of January last, and the case was adjourned till the 13th of February, when the insolvent did not appear, and the case was adjourned generally, at the request of his counsel, upon the ground that he was arranging with his creditors. He had not, however, succeeded in his efforts at arrangement, and was now in custody at the suit of three persons. The object of this application was to put him in the same position as he was at the time of the original adjourned examination, and the mode of doing it, he apprehended, would be to issue a new interim order, and a warrant to discharge from custody under the 6th sec. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. He requested, therefore, to have this done, and a day fixed for his examination, upon notice to the creditors to shew cause why the interim order should not be renewed and the insolvent discharged. He should wish to treat the case as if it were under the 6th section of the 7 & Vict. c. 96; and supposing a man to be in custody, cause would be shewn why he should not be discharged.

The Chief Commissioner.—I must hear the creditors before adopting this course.

Cooke.—We propose to give the creditors notice.

A day for further hearing of the case on the merits was then named, with six days' notice to all creditors by the messengers, that the Court would be moved for the discharge of the insolvent from custody.

Monday, April 5.—To-day counsel on both sides appeared upon the rule.

Sargood, for the detaining creditor, gave consent to the issue of a discharge.

Dowse, for the other creditors, contended that consent could not give jurisdiction, and that as the statutes spoke throughout of one interim order only, the Court had no power, under these circumstances, to discharge under sec. 6.

Cooke contended that the Court had an original power to grant a discharge at any time, especially in cases like these.

The Chief Commissioner decided that he had no power to grant a discharge under the 6th section; but upon counsel (Dowse) consenting that insolvent should come up for his final order, a day was fixed for that purpose, the insolvent remaining in prison in the nterval.

(Before WILLIAMS, J. and a Special Jury.)

BROWN v. WARD and OTHERS.

Landlord and tenant—Demise by two persons, and distress for rent by heir of survivor—Course of proceeding in replevin.

On issue taken on a plea of non tenuit to an avowry for rent, the defendant is entitled to begin, and may, after giving in the first instance general evidence of the plaintiff's tenancy by the payment of rent, set up by way of answer to the plaintiff's case particular evidence of title.

Where a demise is made by two persons with a reservation of rent to themselves and their heirs, payment by the lessee of a moiety of a half year's rent to the heirs of the survivor affords evidence of the plaintiff's treating the estate of the lessors as a tenancy in common so as to estop him from afterwards contending that the estate was a joint tenancy.

Where, in support of a plea of non tenuit to an avowry for rent by the representatives of the heir at law of the lessor, the plaintiff set up the lessor's will executed previous to the 1 Vict. c. 26, to defeat the title of the heir, it was Held that the representatives of the latter might in reply give evidence of the ancestor's purchase-deed executed subsequent to the date of the will, and that such evidence was an answer to the plaintiff's case.

Welsby and Grove, for the plaintiff.

Evans, Q.C. and Pulling, for the defendants.

This was an action of replevin. The defendants avowed as administrators of Christopher Ward for 112*l.* 10s. the moiety of four and a half years' rent of a farm in the plaintiff's occupation, due in said Christopher Ward's lifetime. The plaintiff pleaded in bar non tenuit.

From the evidence it appeared that by a lease, dated 23rd January, 1836, William Ward and Richard Barker jointly demised the farm in question to the plaintiff, at a rent of 50*l.* per annum, payable half-yearly to themselves and their heirs. William Ward died in July 1836, leaving Christopher Ward his heir, and in March 1837 the plaintiff paid to the collector employed by Christopher Ward the moiety of half a year's rent due subsequent to the death of William Ward, but from some cause or other no subsequent payment had been made on account of such moiety. Christopher Ward died in 1850, and his administrations then claimed the arrears accruing due in his lifetime in respect of the moiety of the rent, and after some correspondence had taken place between the parties a distress was put in, and the present proceedings arose.

The defendant's counsel, who claimed the right to begin, put in the counterpart of the lease of 1836, signed by the plaintiff. The following evidence for the defendant was then given:—

William Worrell produced the lease of the 23rd of January, 1836, which stated the rent as being 50*l.* a year, the tenancy being yearly.

On cross-examination the witness stated that William Ward had been dead several years, but that Barker is still alive.

John James: I used to receive rent for William Ward, of Farringdon, Berkshire. I first began to receive the rent in 1831, I received it up to 1837. Brown succeeded the former tenant of the farm in 1836, and I received rent from him. The rent was paid half-yearly. I find an entry in my books of payment by Brown of 12*l.* 10s. in October, 1836; that was for the half-year up to Michaelmas-day. On the 7th of March, 1837, I received the half-year's rent becoming due on the 25th of that month. That was before it was due. Mr. William Ward died shortly after my receipt of the first of those payments, but I am not quite sure of this. In the month of December, 1844, I was instructed by a Mr. Vallance, the executor of Mr. Wm. Ward, to apply to Joseph Brown, the plaintiff, for payment. I saw him myself on the day before Christmas-day in that year. He asked for indulgence in paying his rent on account of money he had paid for repairs and outlaid in improvements. He stated he had a good deal of money due from debtors, which he could not just then get in. I wrote to him about the rent in 1846. I saw him in the month of June of that year. He made similar statements of reasons for delay in payment of his rent, and added that he would not pay till the title of the parties was established. He said he paid the other moiety of rent to one Mr. Cotgreave.

Cross-examined: I never knew of my own knowledge that Mr. William Ward was for years before he died a lunatic, and had been so found by inquisition. I saw Mr. William Ward in 1836; he appeared imbecile, but not insane. Not a word was then said about insanity.

Wm. Fidel: I knew the late Mr. Wm. Ward, of Farringdon. He was a banker. I knew him before his marriage. He had seven or eight children. His eldest son was Christopher. Mr. Ward died in July, 1836. I knew his daughters, Miss Ward and Mrs. Reynolds. Christopher Ward died in February, 1850.

Cross-examined: I never knew that there was a commission of lunacy on Wm. Ward. He was not well, and a Mr. Schultz transacted his business. I think he transacted his business of a banker several years before his death.

Edward Wilde: I am a bailiff, and made a distress, the subject of this action, on plaintiff's cattle. I took property of the value of 112*l.* 10s. I saw Brown, who asked how much money I wanted. I told him the amount, and he said he had not enough money in the house to pay me. There was nothing said about paying under protest.

This was the case for the defendants.

Welsby then contended that there was no evidence in support of the defendant's case; that the lease only disclosed a joint tenancy in Wm Ward and Barker, and it was not proved that the plaintiff had, with notice of Wm. Ward's death, paid rent to his heir.

WILLIAMS, J. said that in his opinion there was evidence to go to the jury of the plaintiff having recognised the estates of his lessors as a tenancy in common, so as to estop him from now contending that it was a joint tenancy; but the point should be reserved.

Welsby, for the plaintiff, then put in the will of Wm. Ward, dated 1832, by which all his real estate was given to certain trustees.

Evans, Q.C. in reply, contended that that will referred solely to equitable estate, and that the legal estate was in the defendants. He would prove that in 1816 William and Thomas Cotgreave were tenants in common of the farm. They assigned to one Lee, who made a declaration of trust that he held three-fourths of the moiety for W. Ward and the remainder for himself. The legal estate of these three-fourths, which William Ward had before, was afterwards formally assigned to him. So that William Ward did not acquire the legal estate in the farm till after the date of the will. The legal estate therefore did not pass by the will, as that was made previous to the coming into operation of the 7 Vict c. 26, s. 3.

Welsby objected that it was not competent for the defendants to divide their case into two portions, and make out a different title in reply from that which was set up in the opening.

WILLIAMS, J. held that it was in his opinion competent for the defendants to set up the purchase deed, to shew that the estate was after acquired property, and did not pass by the will This point was however, also reserved.

Evidence was then given of the deeds of lease and release, dated in 1835 (a), by which the legal estate in the moiety, now claimed, was conveyed to Wm. Ward; and the jury gave a verdict for the defendants.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.

Hereford, March 22.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

DOE dem. CALDWELL and WIFE v. LEE.

Attestation of will—Statute 1 Vict. c. 26—Competency of wife as a witness when a party to the action.

A testator having requested H. to write his, the testator's, name as his signature to his will, being unable from illness to do so, H. did so, and he and two other persons signed their names as attesting the execution of the will by the testator. The following memorandum was subsequently affixed and signed by H., "Memorandum, I, E. H. signed the testator's name, at his request."

Held, that the memorandum was not inconsistent with the previous attestation, and that the will was duly executed, according to the statute, 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9.

In ejectment on the demise of husband and wife, the latter claiming as devisee of the property, the wife is a competent witness.

This was an action of ejectment brought to recover possession of a house and lands in the parish of Stoke Lacy. The lessors of the plaintiff claimed under a devise by Thomas Lee to the wife, for her life, with remainder to her son in fee. The defendant claimed as heir-at-law of the testator.

Whateley, Q.C. and Huddleston, for the plaintiff.

Greaves, Q.C. and W. H. Cooke, for the defendant.

The will of Thomas Lee was produced, and tendered in evidence on the part of the plaintiff, and two of the persons purporting to attest its execution were examined as witnesses.

It appeared from the evidence that the will was prepared by a solicitor, with a form of attestation at the foot, and executed in the following manner. It was read over to the deceased on the 3rd of September, 1851, but the execution was postponed at his request. On the morning of the 6th of September he consented to execute it, and Mr. Howey, a surgeon and apothecary attended with a person named Fowler, and Mary Bruton, a servant, for the purpose of attesting the execution. The testator, who was in bed and very ill, was raised up, and a pen put in his hand. He attempted to sign his name, but failed. He had previously asked Mr. Howey to sign it for him, and after shewing his inability to do it himself, Mr. Howey said to him, "Shall I sign it for you?" The testator replied, "Yes;" and Mr. Howey accordingly wrote the testator's name at the foot of the will; and he and Fowler subscribed their names to the attesting clause; and Mary Bruton being unable to write put her mark, her name being written by Mr. Howey. The testator had not made any request that the witnesses should attest his execution. The attesting clause was in the ordinary form, expressing that the will was signed by the testator in the presence of the witnesses present at the same time, who in his presence, and in the presence of each other, and at the testator's request, had affixed their names as witnesses. In this state the will was delivered by Mr. Howey to the testator's solicitor, who had prepared it. Being informed of the mode in which the execution was effected, he wrote the following memorandum at the foot of the attestation:—"Memorandum—I, Edward Howey, signed the testator's name at his request." And this memorandum was signed by Mr. Howey.

In the course of the case some observation was made as to why Mrs. Caldwell, the devisee, was not called as a witness; and Whateley said there was a doubt as to the admissibility of her evidence, in consequence of her coverture, and on that ground he would not run the risk of calling her.

WIGHTMAN, J. said he should have received her evidence, as she was herself one of the lessors of the plaintiff, and the meritorious cause of action.

At the close of the plaintiff's case,

Greaves, Q.C. objected that the will was invalid and informal, not having been duly executed as required by law. The attesting clause asserted in distinct terms that the will was signed by the testator himself; and then followed the extraordinary memorandum directly contradicting the previous attestation. It was therefore an imperfect instrument. The objection is, first, the attesting clause could not be contradicted. Secondly, it could not be shewn that the witnesses attested Howey's signature for the testator, nor that they attested any signature by the testator, as either would contradict an allegation on the face of the instrument. Thirdly, there is no attestation clause to Howey's signature on behalf of the testator. If Howey signed on behalf of the testator, his execution should be attested by two witnesses. Fourthly, there was no evidence that the testator knew that the witnesses were present, or that they attested his will, still less that they were called upon by the testator to be witnesses to his will. It was the duty of the plaintiff to shew affirmatively that the signature was made in the presence of the witnesses and in the presence of the testator.

Whately, contrà.—The stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, sec. 9, provides that no will shall be valid unless it be in writing, and shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or some other person in his presence, and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator, in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time; and such witnesses shall attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the testator; but no form of attestation shall be necessary. The execution by the hand of Mr. Howey was, therefore, within the very terms of the Act, and was in law the execution by the testator, and that execution was attested by two witnesses.

WIGHTMAN, J. expressed his opinion that the execution was within the statute, and was attested by three witnesses. Then the additional memorandum was not inconsistent with the previous allegation, for the signature by the hand of Howey, in the presence and by the direction of the testator, was, in fact, an execution by the testator.

At the request of the counsel for the defendant the learned judge took a note of the objection.

Greaves, Q.C. then addressed the jury on the question as to the testator's competency at the time.

(a) There were several objections raised as to the admissibility of these deeds in evidence, which were, however, all reserved for the opinion of the Court of Ex. from whence the record came.

WIGHTMAN, J. directed the jury that if they were of opinion that the testator at the time of signing the will by the hand of Mr. Howey was in such a state as to be incapable of knowing what he was doing, or what was being transacted, they should find for the defendant; but if, on the other hand, they were satisfied that the testator was competent to give instructions to Mr. Howey to write his name to the will, and that it was his intention that the will should operate as his last will and testament, their verdict should be for the plaintiff.

Verdict for the plaintiff.

Monmouth, March 26.
(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)
REG. v. DILMORE.

issibility of depositions of deceased persons—atute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17—Identity of ence charged in the indictment with that preferred before the justices.

r the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17, which r providing for the taking of depositions before justices, enacts that, upon proof at the trial of the death, &c. of the deponent, "it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution."

Quære, whether the deposition of a deceased person on a charge against the prisoner of stabbing him, can be read on a trial for the murder or manslaughter of the deceased.

The prisoner was indicted for manslaughter.

The indictment charged that the prisoner, on the 4th day of August, 1851, "did feloniously kill and slay" one Joanni Stoicovich.

On the part of the prosecution it was sought to give in evidence the deposition of the deceased, taken on the 11th of August, 1851, the wound having been inflicted on the 4th of August, and the deceased having lived until the 16th of that month.

The deposition was headed as follows:—

"Borough of Newport, in the County of Monmouth, to wit. } The examination of Joanni Stoicovich, late seaman on board the Elodie, of Trieste, lately lying in the Newport-dock, taken upon oath this fourteenth day of August, A.D. 1851, at Pillgwenlty, in the said borough, before me, Thomas Hughes, esq. one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said borough, in the presence and hearing of Cesare Delmore, charged before me the said justice, for that he the said Cesare Dilmore did, on the 4th day of August instant, at the said borough, feloniously stab, cut, and wound the said Joanni Stoicovich in the belly with a knife, or some other cutting instrument, of which stabbing, cutting, and wounding, the said Joanni Stoicovich is likely to die. James Caprella sworn to interpret Italian into English."

Huddleston, for the prisoner, submitted that the deposition could not be read. It was proposed to read it under the provisions of the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17. That section enacted, "That in all cases where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with any indictable offence," &c. the justices shall take the examinations of th witnesses, in the manner therein stated; and then proceeds to enact that, "if, upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid, it shall be proved by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead," &c. "it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution." In this case, charge before the magistrates was one of stabbing, and not a charge of manslaughter. He submitted that the deposition can only be given in evidence where the charge before the magistrate is the same, as that for which the prisoner is subsequently indicted. The statute says, "upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid," referring to the accusation before the magistrate. [WIGHTMAN, J.—If that is so, the deposition of a deceased person cannot be used in any case where the charge is connected with his death.] The question had been raised in a case before Mr. Greaves, Q.C. sitting at Gloucester, to try prisoners, and, after conferring with Lord Campbell and Mr. Justice Williams, it was held that a deposition on a charge of assault was not admissible on an indictment for cutting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, but that the indictment must be for the same offence as that charged before the justices. (Reg. v. Ledbetter and Others, Gloucester Summer Assizes, 1850.) (a)

Barrett, on the same side, urged that it was a hardship on the prisoner to receive the deposition of the deceased in this case. It would not be admissible on an indictment for stabbing, unless the prisoner was present at the time, so as to cross-examine the witness; and the deposition, when complete, consisted of the cross-examination as well as of the examination in chief. Here there could have been no cross-examination as to the charge with which the prisoner now stood indicted. [WIGHTMAN, J.—The hardship you put scarcely arises in this case. The charge is varied by the death, but the charge is still manslaughter by cutting and wounding.] The statute which enables depositions to be read in the absence of the witness ought to be construed strictly. Supposing a prisoner to be indicted for highway robbery and wounding, would a deposition of an absent or deceased witness taken on a charge before the magistrates of wounding only, be admissible? Surely not.

Skinner, for the prosecution.—The question has been already decided. The case of R. v. Smith, R. & R. 339 (cited in Archbold, p. 149, 11th edition), is expressly in point. There it was held that depositions taken on a charge of assault were, after the death of the deponent, admissible against the defendant on his trial for the murder of the deponent, who died in consequence of the assault. That was a decision subsequent to the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, which merely provided for the taking of depositions, and contained no provision respecting the admissibility of depositions in the event of the death of the deponent. The recent statute simplified the powers under the former statutes, and was not intended to diminish but to extend their operation. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. in using the terms, "in such prosecution," must be taken to mean the prosecuting the inquiry to an end, whatever particular form it might assume from intervening circumstances. The charge before the magistrates was for stabbing, cutting, and wounding Joanni Stoicovich, "of which stabbing, cutting, and wounding, the said Jhanni Stoicovich is likely to die." That was the charge here, subject to the change in the particular offence arising from the death of the deponent.

WIGHTMAN, J.—What is the offence charged on the face of the depositions? It seems to be stabbing, simpliciter. Is that an offence, except as including an assault, it not being alleged that the stabbin was done unlawfully or maliciously?

Huddleston in reply.—The case of R. v. Smith was not on the present statute. Moreover, the case before Mr. Greaves, at Gloucester, with the opinion of Lord Campbell, shewed that Smith's case was not law. It was an unsatisfactory decision. Several of the judges expressly stated that they should have doubted the admissibility of the evidence in that case but for Radbourne's case, 1 Leach, 457 (see 2 Russell on Crimes, by Greaves, 891, note f.)

WIGHTMAN, J. There is no decision precisely in point. The case cited at Gloucester differs in one respect from this. There the original charge was an assault, here there is something more. The recent alteration in the law, making it unnecessary to set out the means of death in the indictment, increases the difficulty, for here the indictment merely alleges that the prisoner did feloniously kill and slay the deceased. The question raised here is one of the greatest importance, for it is in those cases where an injury has been done to the deponent of which he subsequently dies that it is desirable to have his evidence. If it is a casus omissus the statute ought to be amended forthwith. It may be that the Legislature has omitted to provide for the very cases where the necessity chiefly arises, but if so it a most extraordinary defect. I shall receive th evidence and reserve the point if necessary.

The deposition was then read.

The prisoner was ultimately acquitted.

WIGHTMAN, J. observed, that although it longer became necessary in this case to discuss point raised with reference to the admissibility of the deposition; it was very important that the question should be settled without delay.

(a) The case was cited from a MS note of Mr. Greaves, Q.C.

Ecclesiastical Courts.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Reported by Dr. WADDILOVE, of Doctors' Com

Jan. 30 and March 14.
(Before Dr. LUSHINGTON, sitting for Sir H. JENNER FUST.)
BRENCHLEY v. LYNN.

Will of married woman—No executor named—Administration with will annexed decreed to the universal legatee in preference to husband.

A married woman made a will under powers contained in the will of her mother and her marriage settlement, she also covenanted that she would not revoke or alter such will. She afterwards made several wills, and finally executed a codicil, whereby she revoked all former wills, and declared an intention to die intestate, and that her property should go to her next of kin according to the provisions of the Statute of Distribution:

Held, that such paper was alone entitled to probate, and that it was in every respect a testamentary instrument.

Semble, although probate was now refused of the other papers, still the Court of Equity would probably, with a view to see how far the covenant in the settlement rendered inoperative the codicil, direct the other papers to be proved in order to guide its decision.

The proper course is to answer an act on petition, not merely to pray that it may be rejected.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently in the judgment.

Sir J. Dodson and Harding, for the husband.

Addams and Twiss, contra.

JUDGMENT.

In order to bring the questions which arise in this case clearly under consideration, it is necessary to state some of the leading facts. This litigation relates to the property of Mrs. Lynn, formerly Mrs. Elizabeth Coare. She died on the 17th of April, 1848, leaving her husband her surviving, but no children. Under the will of her mother, Mrs. Minnitt, she took considerable property, and had certain powers of making a disposition in the nature of a will, of such property. There is also other property left besides. Prior to the marriage a settlement was executed; there was no issue of the marriage, as I have already stated. All these facts I may call common to both parties. Now, what have been the proceedings in this case? The cause commenced by the issuing of a decree at the instance of Mrs. Brenchley, described as the sister, and only next of kin of the deceased. That decree is dated the 28th August, 1848, and it recited that Mrs. Minnitt made a will; that a settlement was made, dated the 21st of May, 1831; that in virtue of the powers contained in Mrs. Minnitt's will and the settlement, the deceased made a will and various codicils, and appointed Mr. Still and Mr. Rackham executors. The decree further alleged, that under, and by virtue of the before-mentioned powers, the deceased, on the 14th of May, 1847, executed a further will, revoking the former will and codicils, but did not appoint any executor or residuary, or other legatee. According to the words of the decree, the effect of this paper was to give the property over which she had a power of disposal to her next of kin, according to the Statute of Distribution. That so stated. The decree then called on the executors to see the codicil to be propounded proved in lemn form of law, and also to shew cause why administration, with the paper of the 14th May, 1847, should not be granted to Mrs. Brenchley, the sister, and only next of kin, limited to the right and interest of the deceased, to all such personal estate, as by virtue of Mrs. Minnitt's will otherwise she had a right to dispose of. I have set forth the contents of this decree somewhat fully because I think it will be necessary hereafter to discuss it more particularly. Mr. Rackham, the surviving executor in the previous paper, declined to interfere in this suit. Various other testamentary papers were brought in. An appearance was given for Mr. Lynn, who had been cited. The paper of the 14th of May was propounded in an allegation. The contents of that allegation may be very briefly stated. It begins by alleging that by Mrs. Minnitt's will Mrs. Lynn had a power of distribution over the property, and in case it is not exercised, it alleges the intention of Mrs. Minnitt. The third article states that certain testamentary papers which are recited at length, namely, a wi and seven codicils, were made by the deceased. In the fourth article, it is alleged that Mrs. Lynn, having an intention to revoke and make void all such former wills and codicils, made and executed the paper propounded in this case. Now, this allegation, I see from the proceedings, was opposed,—upon what grounds I know not, but it was admitted, and three witnesses were examined upon it, and they were examined solely to the making and execution of the paper itself. An allegation was also given in on the part of Mr. Lynn, which was rejected. As this allegation was rejected, perhaps it is not necessary to consider minutely the effect of it. I may, however, have occasion hereafter to refer to it. The cause then came on before the Court, on the former allegation, and the evidence taken, and the prayers of th respective parties were as stated in the course of these proceedings. These concluded by praying the judge to pronounce for the force and validity of the codicil, bearing date the 14th of May, 1847, on the part of Mrs. Brenchley, and also by praying the judge to decree letters of administration with the codicil annexed to her. I need not go through it more minutely than I have done. That was the prayer, the decree is in the following terms: "The judge having read the evidence," and so on, "by his interlocutory decree, pronounced for the force and validity of the said codicil, bearing date the 14th day of May, 1847, but made no order as to costs." Now, it is perfectly clear, from a perusal of that decree, that it does not correspond with the whole of the prayer which I have already stated. The case was appealed, and the prayer of the appellant was to reverse, that of the respondent to affirm, the decree such as I have stated. The judgment was affirmed. The first consideration then is, what has been done by Sir Herbert Jenner Fust and by the Judicial Committee? What I am now precluded from considering, and what I am at liberty and bound to deal with? No doubt can be entertained that, beyond all question, I am bound by what the Judicial Committee has done, confirmed by order in council; and I am also bound, though perhaps not quite so stringently, by all Sir Herbert Jenner Fust has done. I can neither diminish nor enlarge the decrees. I have only to construe them, and to decide matters which were not decided by them. Reading the decree, then, in the printed proceedings before the Judicial Committee, at page 4, it is to my mind most abundantly clear that it left the question, as to whom the administration was to be granted, wholly and altogether untouched. I cannot engraft upon the decree what was not in it, but it was said, in the course of the argument, that the Court might vary the decree; and, in some instances, no doubt where a mistake has been committed, a decree may be varied from the original minutes, under the authority of the Court. I doubt not but that, under the circumstances, that may be done, and that such power exists in the Court; but not under the present circumstances, for the Court cannot alter a decree affirmed by the Judicial Committee; whatever may have been the error, assuming there was an unintentional omission in the Court below, when once made, and the decree is affirmed by a Superior Court, it is utterly impossible for the Inferior Court to make the slightest alteration. I may observe, however, that if I had the power, I have no evidence to satisfy me that the learned judge of the Prerogative Court intended to dispose of the question to whom the administration was to be granted. All he said was, taking his words literally, "I pronounce for the validity of the paper, and decree probate." Probate is the general term used. The meaning is as clear to my mind as it possibly can be—I pronounce it is entitled to proof; but not a word is said in that judgment as to who was to take the grant, and the Registrar's book confirms this entirely. I am clear, therefore, that the question to whom the grant must pass is yet to be decided, and decided according to the principles and rules applicable to the circumstances of this case; and indeed I may observe that though both probate was demanded by the prayer, and also the grant of administration with the will annexed to the sister, yet these are in themselves two separate and distinct subjects; and according to the practice of the court, at the time,—at least, when I practised in it,—it did not at all follow that because an instrument was declared to be proved, the other party could not be heard on an act on petition as to whom the grant should pass. The cause is then remitted to this court. And the next step is, the proctor for Mrs. Brenchley, on the 9th of July, 1851, makes a prayer conformable to the latter part of the prayer he had made before the decree was pronounced by Sir Herbert Jenner Fust. And here I may say, if I really believed that Sir Herbert Jenner Fust and the Judicial Committee had already decreed the administration to Mrs. Brenchley, I cannot comprehend why such administration should not have issued at once, nor what was the necessity for a fresh appearance in the Prerogative Court. However, in opposition to this prayer, an appearance is given on the behalf of Mr. Lynn, and he prays to be heard on his act on petition. The substance of that act is, that it states first the will of Mrs. Minnitt; secondly, the making of the will of 1834 under it; thirdly, that the settlement was intended to bear even date with the will; fourthly, it sets out part of the contents of that settlement, namely, a covenant not to revoke the will of May 1834; fifthly, the act further states the making of various other testamentary papers, which I do not think it is necessary to specify; and, sixthly, it states that on the 11th day of May, 1847, the subsisting testamentary papers of the deceased were, the will, dated the 21st of May, 1831, and two codicils. It is then alleged that questions may arise as to the operation and effect of the instruments at law or in equity, and that to obtain such decision it is indispensably necessary that in some shape or other the said will and codicils should be admitted to probate. It further states that the deceased left personal estate other than the properties over which she had a power of appointment. And the prayer at the end of this act on petition is, "that the said Elizabeth Lynn left behind her personal estate and effects other than the properties over which she had a power of appointment as aforesaid, and that by the law and practice of this Court the said Rev. James Lynn, as the lawful husband of the said Elizabeth Lynn, is entitled to take letters of administration of all and singular the goods, chattels, and credits of the said Elizabeth Lynn, deceased, with the four said testamentary appointments, or such of them as the Court may be pleased to direct, annexed on giving the usual security. Wherefore, referring to the several testamentary appointments hereinbefore mentioned, and now remaining in the registry of this Court, and to such other proofs as he may hereafter bring into the registry, prayed the judge to decree letters of administration with the said testamentary appointments bearing date the 21st day of May, 1831, the 1st day of December, 1845, the 21st day of July, 1846, and the 14th day of May, 1847," the three codicils, "or" —this is the alternative,—" with the said testamentary appointment bearing date the 14th day of May, 1847, alone annexed." That is the prayer made on behalf of Mr. Lynn. This act on petition having been given in, a very unusual course was adopted on the part of Mrs. Blenchley, for no answer was made to the act at all, but the Court was asked to reject it. Now I am of opinion that the ordinary course of proceeding should not have been departed from upon the present occasion; that there was no reason to justify the so doing, and that it has been productive of inconvenience; and it might in some cases be of prejudice to a party in the position of Mrs. Brenchley, because, amongst other considerations, the Court cannot possibly come to the original bearing of this case with its mind at all informed by the arguments intended to be urged on behalf of Mrs. Brenchley, who has made no answer, nor as to whether the facts contained in the original act are admitted or denied. I entertain no doubt, and I have already expressed my reasons for that opinion, that the question to whom the grant should be made was an open question, and I think it equally clear that an answer was required in that respect. Whether the annexation of the other papers to the grant was an open question remains now to be considered, and if not an open question, I must say I think the Court was entitled to be informed by a statement of the party why it was not, and then, if an open question, why the grant, with the papers annexed, should not be decreed as prayed. No answer, however, was given, and I had not the least hesitation in rejecting the extraordinary prayer, or rather refusing the extraordinary prayer, to reject the act on petition. To have rejected the petition would have been tantamount to declaring that the matter contained in it was utterly foreign to the cause, or on its own shewing felo de se. I entertain a very different opinion to that now, as I did then, and consequently I refuse to grant that prayer. The Court is, therefore, now called on to perform this duty; to consider the import and effect of this act on petition without any answer to it. The objections against it I have to collect from my own mind, or from the arguments of counsel, as no issue is taken either in law or in fact. I have already said that I must consider to whom the grant must be made, but I must first consider another question, which I think requires considerable attention, and that is, am I precluded by what has been already done from considering of what papers the grant should issue? Has that question already been determined, or has it not? Has it been determined by any act of the Judicial Committee, or of Sir Herbert Jenner Fust? If I could come to such affirmative conclusion, I should doubtless be relieved from a very difficult part of this case. First, then, has the Judicial Committee considered or decided, or in any way intimated an opinion that the will and codicils before mentioned should not be included in the probate with the codicil of May, 1847. This is a question which may possibly admit of some doubt, and that doubt arises from the allegation given in on the part of Mr. Lynn, and rejected. I must, however, remember, that whatever may have been the wording of the allegation admitted on the part of Mrs. Brenchley, the only question truly raised by it was, whether the codicil of the 14th of May was entitled to probate, but not exclusively. The legal meaning of the codicil might be decided upon the issue raised, but whether it was barred from being operative as a revocation of all other papers, was a question for another Court, when and after its title to probate was established. If duly executed it was entitled to probate, whether the intention to revoke was operative or not. I think that the case of Hughes v. Turner, 4 Hagg. 30, to which I must soon more especially advert, shews that the mere pronouncing that a paper is entitled to probate, does not exclude the question whether other papers may not be joined, unless indeed that question was specifically raised. On the whole it appears to me that the rejected allegation was applicable only to the question of probate of the contested codicil, and that I am not justified in presuming that the learned judge meant to decide, by the rejection of that allegation, that no other paper could be joined in the probate. I think the only question which was raised by that allegation was, whether, in consequence of the covenant contained in the settlement, the Court was barred from decreeing probate of that paper, and no other. Now I am in no degree apprised of what did occur when the question of the admissibility of that allegation was debated. I may, therefore, be in error, but I must form my judgment from the pleadings, and it does not appear to me that the question of joining other papers in the probate was distinctly raised or decided at all. Even if I should be mistaken in this opinion, I think it is much safer, in the absence of all information, to assume that the question whether any papers should be included in the probate was left an open question. I am of opinion, therefore, that it is a duty from which I must not shrink to pronounce my judgment upon both the questions raised in this act on petition, namely, whether the three papers mentioned should be joined in the grant with the codicil of the 14th of May, 1847, and to whom, secondly, the grant should be made. I will take these questions in the order I stated them. Primâ facie the codicil of May, 1847, is a revocation of all the testamentary papers before made, and no reasonable doubt can be entertained that if that codicil, or a similar testamentary paper, were pronounced for, without reference to the execution of powers or covenants in a deed, probate of that codicil alone must pass, and that according to our ordinary course of business. It is perhaps almost superfluous to advert to that codicil, but I will do so, and very briefly. Whatever else may be said of the codicil, certainly great pains have been taken by the framer of it to make it a sweeping revocatory paper, for it goes on to state—" Whereas I have by my last will and testament in writing, or by some instrument in the nature of a will by me, duly executed, and made in pursuance of some power or authority vested in me by my marriage or some other settlement, appointed and disposed of the real and personal estate," and so on. " Whereas I am desirous to revoke and make void my said will and disposition aforesaid, and to die intestate, in order that all my property, both real and personal, may go to and devolve upon my heirs or next of kin according to the nature and quality thereof, the same as if I had made no will and had died utterly intestate. Now, therefore, I, the said Elizabeth Lynn, do by this instrument in writing, revoke, annul, and make void my said will in toto, and all the gifts, dispositions, clauses, and directions therein absolutely, so that I may die intestate both as to my real and personal estate. And I make and execute this codicil," and so on, in order to effect that object. I think, therefore, I am quite safe in saying, that no doubt at all can exist as to the revocatory intention which was entertained by the deceased being clearly and satisfactorily expressed in this instrument. Some special reasons, therefore, must be shewn to justify the Court in departing from the ordinary course. These reasons are set forth in the act on petition, the ordinary course being to grant probate of that paper alone, as I have already stated. The substance is the will of Mrs. Minnitt, the marriage settlement, the covenant not to revoke, and that no revocation has been legally effected. I mean strictly speaking,—that the codicil does not operate so as to destroy the effect of the will of 1831. Now, I am called upon to decree probate of these testamentary papers, in order that justice may be done by the proper Court,—the Court that would properly take cognizance of the effect and construction of the codicil. But to this averment no answer whatever has been made. How, then, am I to deal with it under these circumstances? If it were a simple averment of fact that it was indispensably necessary for the purpose of suits in equity or elsewhere, I think I should be bound to take it all as true; but it is in truth a complex averment; it is an averment of law founded upon a given state of facts. I apprehend, therefore, that it is my duty at least to pause before I assume it to be a statement entirely true in a legal sense, and if, therefore, I should be of opinion that it is true or doubtful, I must then consider how far the law allows me to give weight and effect to such a state of things, even if admitted to be true. Now, I cannot shut my eyes to this—the whole of the papers shew it—that the question intended to be raised elsewhere, is manifestly the effect of the covenant in the marriage settlement,—whether that covenant is binding so as to render the codicil inoperative in effect, though an instrument bearing the probate of this Court, or whether the covenant is not null and void, as in fraud, of the power which gave a right of disposal by will and not by deed, a will being in its nature revocable. I do not mean by this observation to enter minutely on questions not familiar to this Court, but I do not think it consistent with my duty to adopt, without consideration, sweeping averments of the description contained in this act, and it would be a very dangerous precedent so to do. I must consider whether these averments are well founded. Then, to proceed with reference to the questions intended to be raised, as I collect from the act; first, I conceive it to be perfectly true that a Court of Equity cannot carry into execution testamentary instruments disposing of personal property, unless they have received probate. That is a law so uniform and generally admitted on all sides, and stated in all cases, that it must be considered as undoubted law; consequently, I am bound to admit that a Court of Equity could not, whatever might be its opinion of the effect of the covenant in the settlement, or however inoperative the codicil already proved, it could not carry into effect, without the probate of this Court, the previous will of 1834, and the two codicils of which probate is prayed by Mr. Lynn. That is a proposition which we must start with as undoubted; in order to enable a Court of Equity to carry these instruments into effect, probate of this Court is an indispensable preliminary. But, though this be true, I am not aware that a Court of Equity, having before it Mrs. Minnitt's will, the marriage settlement, and the codicil of May 1847, might not declare its opinion as to the effect of these three instruments, or whether the codicil was revocatory, not in the sense of probate, but in operation, because here we must judge whether the codicil be revocatory in the sense of granting probate, but whether it was revocatory in the sense of operation belongs to a Court of Equity, but in operation of prior testamentary instruments, if any. I am not prepared to say, whether justice might not then be done by coming to the Court for probate of these instruments. I know not exactly how this may be, and I pass no opinion, but I cannot think this is a state of things wholly and altogether impossible; I cannot easily believe that though a Court of Equity will not give effect to testamentary papers without probate, that it will wholly ignore the possibility of the existence of such papers. I am the more inclined to come to that opinion because of a recent case which has been decided in the Court of Chancery under the name of Penny v. Briggs. I hold in my hand a copy of the judgment of Lord Justice Knight Bruce, which was afterwards affirmed by the Lord Chancellor. The question was one of a totally different description; of course I do not quote it as bearing on the question, but with relation to certain remarks and things done in that case. The question was, whether Miss Penny was a trustee, or took the residue for her own benefit, but the testatrix, in her will, stated that she had written papers, which papers did not appear; and what did the Court do? Why the Court did this: after having commented at considerable length upon four papers, in themselves testamentary, but held not to be entitled to probate in this court—having so far taken notice of them,—it decreed a reference to the Master to inquire whether there were any and what other papers which could possibly have a bearing upon the case; and for what purpose was this reference to the Master to find these papers? Why these were testamentary papers, and these papers could have no operation or effect in the Court of Chancery unless they had been proved; and does it not follow to demonstration under these circumstances, that if the Master does find any papers of that character they must be sent to this Court before any effect can be given to them? I will not occupy much time in going into the particulars of this case, because I think I have said all that is necessary to shew that which I wish to prove, namely, that the Court of Chancery, though it does not carry into execution any testamentary paper unless proved, yet it is not bound to shut its eyes wholly and altogether to the existence of such papers; but that it may and does order an inquiry whether any such paper does exist. I presume the necessary consequence of the existence of such a paper would be, if found, that the Court of Equity would direct that that paper should be brought here to receive the sanction of this Court to render it effective, otherwise it would be a mere useless inquiry to make search for papers of which no use could be made by the Court when found. Now, that decree was affirmed by the Lord Chancellor after great consideration. In his judgment, as well as in the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, reference was made to those papers which were supposed to exist. Why should I not presume that a somewhat similar course might have been followed upon the present occasion? I mean, why should I presume that the Court of Chancery, if the codicil was brought in, the settlement was brought in, and Mrs. Minnitt's will was brought in, would utterly ignore the consideration that there could possibly exist other testamentary instruments, and would not pronounce on the effect of those instruments; and having pronounced on them if the codicil was inoperative, would not allow further steps to be taken? I do not say it would, but I have heard no argument to satisfy my mind that it would not. I have entered on this inquiry reluctantly; but I think I am bound to do so. It would, in my opinion, be exceedingly dangerous to the interests of justice to assume general sweeping assertions, such as I find in this act, to be true without the least proof of any kind to support them; and I must say, because, as I have already expressed myself, I do doubt,—I venture to say no more than that,—that the indispensable annexation of these papers to probate is well founded. I will not, however, decide the question upon these grounds, though I think I should be justified in so doing. I will assume that it is necessary for the purpose of justice, as stated in this act, that probate should be granted of the three papers. I will assume that to be true. Then, if this be so, there cannot be a stronger inducement to the Court to grant the probate as prayed. It is quite superfluous to observe that it is the duty of every Court, to the extent of its jurisdiction to aid other Courts in doing justice; but then comes another question, what is the law which must govern the Court under such circumstances? Am I at liberty to exercise such discretionary powers, or am I not? By what rules am I to be governed in exercising such discretion? The whole subject of the testamentary papers of married women, and the grants to be made respecting the same by the Ecclesiastical Courts has never in my opinion been placed on any very satisfactory foundation. The history is stated at considerable length by Lord Brougham in the case of Barnes v. Vincent, 5 Moore's Priv. C. C. 201, which shews that the practice has in some degree varied, as no doubt has the law in Courts of Equity as to separate property between husband and wife; but however that may be, this is clear, that the Statute of Wills has nothing at all to do with the present question. That statute does not affect the jurisdiction of Ecclesiastical Courts in this matter in any way whatever. It neither diminishes the jurisdiction, nor does it enlarge it; all that the statute does is this, it enacts that powers to be executed by testamentary acts shall, as to the mode of execution, be the same as the mode of execution enacted for ordinary testamentary instruments, or, in other and shorter words, all powers shall be executed in the presence of two persons, and they shall attest them in the presence of each other; that is the sum total of the Wills Act, as bearing on this question. The Court of Probate, therefore, must decide whether that form of execution has been duly followed. Why? Because otherwise it is not a testamentary instrument. But the judgment of a Court of Probate is not made binding on a Court of Equity more than it was before, and a Court of Equity may, if it should think fit, inquire as to the execution of the power, and decide, notwithstanding probate, that the power was not well executed. A Court of Equity might differ both as to law and fact. We might decide the paper was entitled to probate; the Court of Equity might decide it was not well executed; even a decision by the Judicial Committee on the same point would not bind a Court of Equity. Having disposed of those arguments which arose at the bar, and depend on the Statute of Wills, I will proceed with the inquiry, and confine myself to the question of power only, and not confound it with separate property. I will observe that there are two sets of questions which may arise, the one the existence of the power at all under any given circumstances, and what the power is, and whether it can be exercised at all. The second question is, the execution of the power itself, the form in which it is executed. I think it will be necessary to keep these two considerations quite distinct. It will also, I conceive, be necessary to a clear understanding of this subject, to bear in mind that the word "revocation" has two meanings. The one—if I may use such an expression—in the probate sense of the term, that is, where one instrument revokes another originally entitled to probate, and so revoking it, disentitles it to the probate it would otherwise be entitled to. The other sense—which we may call the Chancery sense of the term—is where one paper, and that subsequent, renders another inoperative in the whole or part, though both papers may have received probate. To advance another step: what is the true question now before me, and how far can I discuss it; and what is the law I can find applicable to the case? The question is very easily raised; it is this,—whether the testatrix intended by the codicil of May 1847, entirely to revoke all other testamentary papers. If she did, and if the codicil is in terms sufficient for such purpose, then no doubt can be entertained that if no impediment occur on account of the power, probate of the codicil alone must be granted. It is clear beyond all argument that it would be so in the case of an ordinary testator. I have entertained some doubt whether Sir Herbert Jenner Fust did not dispose of this question by the rejection of the fourth article of the allegation given in by Mr. Lynn; that is, whether the codicil was entitled alone to probate. I know he disposed of this question, that it was entitled to probate, but whether that it was so alone or not is another question. Upon the whole I think he did not. In searching for the law to aid me in deciding this case, there appears to me to be but one case, which, however, contains pretty nearly all we have—that is, the case of Hughes v. Turner, 4 Hagg. 30. There is also Tatnall v. Hankey, 2 Moore, Priv. C. C. 342, and Barnes v. Vincent, 5 Moore, Priv. C. C. 201. I think, when I have mentioned these cases, I have pretty well exhausted the decisions with reference to any question I am now discussing. Now, do these cases, or either of them, lay down a rule to govern the Prerogative Court in this or similar cases, or do they not? I must refer to Hughes v. Turner, 4 Hagg. 30. It is no easy matter to understand the whole bearing of that case. It is a case that occupied the serious consideration of the Court, and occupies in this volume nearly forty pages; but I give what I consider to be a faithful abstract of it so far as it bears upon the case now under consideration. There the testatrix had executed two sets of testamentary papers, one set bearing date in 1815, the latter in 1829. The Prerogative Court decreed a general probate of the papers of 1829 only. A question arose, whether those papers of 1829 contained a valid appointment of the property of the donor of the power. The Prerogative Court was applied to, and the application assumed to a certain extent the same form as the present, which will appear at page 49 of that case, namely, that it was necessary, before a proper decision could be obtained in equity, that probate should be granted of the set of papers of 1815. What the Court of Probate then did was this: it left the general probate of 1829 unrevoked, but it granted administration of the papers of 1815, limited to proceedings in Chancery, touching the execution of the power. Now mark - that decree the Court of Delegates reversed, and that was the first step they took in the cause. They would not allow the Prerogative Court to leave the question in that shape, namely, a general probate of the papers of 1829, and what I may call an ancillary probate limited to the Chancery proceedings of the others of 1815. It is clear that is a course that cannot be admitted after the decision in that case. Now what was the next step before the delegates? The Court was then prayed to decree probate of the set of papers of 1815 and 1829, as together containing the will, and that brings the case of Hughes v. Turner and the present case very much into juxta-position. The Court of Delegates refused so to do, and it confirmed the probate of the papers of 1829 alone. Now, how do that case and that judgment bear upon the present question? Let us see in what respects the two cases agree, and in what they are dissimilar. They agree in this, that in both cases the question was revocation quâ probate or not quâ probate; they differ in this, that in Hughes v. Turner it was contended that the papers of 1829 were not in execution of the power. In this case of Brenchley v. Lynn, the testatrix, it is said, was estopped by the covenant in the settlement, from executing a testamentary paper, revoking the will of May, 1834. In Hughes v. Turner, it was said, "Unless you decree probate of the paper of 1815, you shut out the question, whether it was not a good execution of the power, and the will of 1829 not operating as a revocation; that was the bearing, not as destructive of what had been done by the will of 1815. That was the question in Hughes v. Turner. The party said, "You do me injustice in refusing to grant me probate with the papers annexed, because I say, the will, signed in execution of the power, namely, the will of 1815, is a good execution, and you do not enable me to try that question in Chancery by excluding the will, and I say that is a grievance." That the party said in Hughes v. Turner; what does the party say in this case? Somewhat to the same effect. "By the refusal of probate to the papers, mentioned in the Act, you shut out the question, whether the testatrix was not barred by the covenant from rendering the will of May, 1834, inoperative—for it is that instead of revoking,—and from that will being carried into effect, if not rendered inoperative." The result then is, that in both these cases it was alleged that the refusal of probate would prevent the Court of Equity from exercising their proper jurisdiction. Then what did the Court of Delegates do? Of course by their decision I am bound. They said, in effect, you must not look at any such consideration. The report at the end of it is in the following words. After stating the decree, it further says, "It is understood that the ground of decision in the Court of Delegates was, that the contents of the will of 1829, taken together, clearly shewed a departure from the original intention in 1815, and therefore revoked that will; but that the clause of revocation, taken per se and without a clear intention, would not have had that effect." The Court of Delegates consisted of very learned judges, and, as I well know, great pains were taken—Mr. Baron Bailey, Mr. Justice Patteson, and Mr. Baron Alderson, independently of gentlemen from this Court,—and it appears to me that the plain meaning of that decision is, that the Court of Probate must decide according to its ordinary rules whether the last paper was revocatory or not, which was the last will. In the 2nd volume of Dr. Lee's Reports, at p. 542, published by Dr. Phillimore, who was one of the judges delegate, states that was the case. That the paper which I have already read is revocatory of all other papers is, as I conceive, too plain to admit of a moment's argument; and if that be so, if Hughes v. Turner be law, can I possibly distinguish these two cases in substance, though they are different in minute circumstances? I have looked to see whether the case of Hughes v. Turner in any degree clashes with any other case—whether it is contradicted. I must remember that Hughes v. Turner, being decided in the Court of Delegates, is absolutely binding unless it has been overruled by the Judicial Committee or by some subsequent decision. Now it is not contradicted by Barnes v. Vincent. Hughes v. Turner was distinctly brought under their lordships' consideration appears by the report. It was not repudiated; on the contrary, the present Lord Justice Knight Bruce said, "In that case (Hughes v. Turner) the question of due execution was not decided. The Court only acted as if it was a question of revocation." The duty, therefore, of deciding whether the last paper was intended to revoke all others is, as I think, clearly thrown upon this Court by that authority, and being of that opinion the Court has no option but to decree probate of the codicil alone. Perhaps it would be vain to speculate, for we have no data as to what were the precise grounds upon which that judgment of the Court in Hughes v. Turner went. It would have been satisfactory to us all if we could have had any written judgment of the reasons which actuated the Court in coming to the conclusion which they did. It is dangerous, perhaps, to speculate upon it, but I cannot help saying that if I were to speculate on the reasons which actuated the judges, I cannot help thinking that it must very much have depended upon this, whether it was possible that, where the donor had a power, and directed that power to be executed by will only, not by deed, but by will only, it was possible to divest that power of that which the donor had attached to it, namely, the right of revocation necessarily incident to testamentary instruments; but it is not necessary to determine that, because I am not concerned with the reasons; I am more concerned with the mere matter of the judgment. In conformity with that authority I refuse to grant probate of the papers prayed for by Mr. Lynn, and I do so with less reluctance, because, notwithstanding the averments in the act, I am not convinced that the refusal will prejudice Mr. Lynn in any right he may have to remedy elsewhere. Having disposed of these questions, I will now come to the last—to whom administration is to be granted with the paper of the 14th May, 1847, annexed. I must first decide who are the claimants for the grant, and in what character they claim. On the one side is the husband of the deceased; on the other Mrs. Brenchley, who is the surviving and only next of kin of Mrs. Lynn. But upon what averment or in what capacity does Mrs. Brenchley claim as regards the paper itself? Now, I find in the original decree and in the proceedings, it is said that, in case of no disposition of the property by due exercise of the power, Mrs. Brenchley would take as next of kin; that the deceased executed a testamentary paper, whereby she revoked all other papers, and did not name any residuary or other legatee, ergo, that the administration should be granted to Mrs. Brenchley as the person entitled under the will of Mrs. Minnitt. I have entertained very considerable doubt whether that original decree, or whether the statement made in the act on petition, is correct; and I am of opinion that it can make very little difference in the ultimate decision of the case; yet I am of opinion (and after a great deal of consideration) that the statement, both in the original decree and subsequently in the prayer now made, is erroneous, and that administration cannot be granted to Mrs. Brenchley in the form prayed, though it may be of little importance. I think that Mrs. Brenchley does not take, properly speaking, under the ultimate disposition of the property by Mrs. Minnitt's will, but then she is a sole universal legatee of all that property by the instrument of May, 1847. I think she takes as an appointee under that instrument, and not as legatee in the ultimate disposition of Mrs. Minnitt; she takes, in fact, in consequence of the operation of that instrument. Now, let us see what the instrument is itself. It is not merely a revocatory instrument. It is an instrument, in my opinion, dispositive as well as revocatory, though if it were purely revocatory, I should not be inclined to alter my opinion at all. "Whereas I am desirous to revoke and make void my said will and disposition aforesaid, and to die intestate, in order that all my property, both real and personal, may go to and devolve upon my heirs or next of kin, according to the nature and quality thereof, the same as if I had made no will, and had died utterly intestate." Now I deem this to be a bequest of the property to her own next of kin. I think it would have done this: suppose the limitation in Mrs. Minnitt's will to be otherwise than the next of kin of Elizabeth Coare, it would have defeated that limitation, and the next of kin would have taken the disposition. Suppose Mrs. Minnitt's will had declared that if no disposition were made of the property, the property should go to John Noakes and Abraham Stiles, those words I have now read would entirely destroy the effect of that limitation, and be a direct bequest to the next of kin. Let us consider, then, a moment how this case stands. When Mrs. Brenchley takes under this paper in the manner stated, must she not pay duty as a legatee? Is it a case of intestacy? Was there ever such a thing as testative intestacy? How is it possible? It was hinted at rather than argued, that the paper might not be proved; it was not necessary to prove it. How could any one swear the deceased died without making a will, when here is a paper that disposes of the property to certain parties? Now I think that all such papers should be proved, and if there have been cases in which a revocatory paper has not been proved, I am of opinion that that is a very mischievous practice, and I say it without hesitation, when I look at the consequences, I say it upon principle, as well as when I look at the results of not proving revocatory papers. In the first place, on principle, intestacy can only arise where a person dies without legally bequeathing his property—without a will at all. If a man by will declares he dies intestate, and that his property shall go as in cases of intestacy, it is not an intestacy, but it is a bequest of the property personis designatis, namely, to persons designated in the Act of Parliament, as it might be by any other description, and the property in this case will go by virtue of the will setting aside the power, but not by virtue of the statute. Now let us see what would be the danger of holding a contrary doctrine. Why if you hold a contrary doctrine, the result would be, if you did not prove the will in the manner I have stated, that at any distance of time an old will might be set up, and then you would be in the predicament that you might have lost the revocatory instrument, and that doubt might be thrown upon it in consequence of its not having been proved as it ought to have been. I think I may safely lay aside all that consideration, and may really come to the essence of the case. I hold the proper claim of Mrs. Brenchley is that of universal legatee in a paper not appointing an executor. Then, how stands that claim under the circumstances of this case, as opposed to that of the husband? Mr. Justice Williams's work on Executors has been cited, and he states the law in the last edition, at page 340, in these words: "Where a feme covert has a power to dispose of her estate by will, which she executes, but without appointing an executor, administration will be granted to the husband cum testamento annexo. Again, if a feme covert has a power to dispose of certain personal property by her will, but no power to appoint an executor, and she makes a will, the Court will grant to the executor an administration with the will annexed, limited to that property, and decree a general administration cæterorum bonorum to her husband." Now, this is a very faithful exposition of the two cases which are cited at the bottom of the page; it is a faithful exposition of Salmon and Hays v. Breese, 4 Hag. 382, and and Boxley v. Stubbington, 2 Lee, 537; but I very much doubt whether the principle attempted to be extracted from the faithful statement of these circumstances is really the true ground, because, according to the mode in which the two cases are stated, it will make the grant to depend very much upon the circumstances of whether a feme covert so having executed a will without having appointed an executor, that for that reason it shall go to the husband; but if she appoint an executor, without any power to do so, it shall of necessity go to the person so appointed executor, though she has no power of appointment. That I do not believe to be the correct exposition of the law, not that I apprehend Mr. Justice Williams intended this. All I apprehend he intended was to give a faithful abstract of the two cases; but by simply stating the facts he does not, by necessity, extract the spirit of the rule. The decisions, no doubt, under the circumstances of the two cases, were quite right, but it does not follow that the whole of these grants are to depend either upon omitting to make an executor, or making an executor without the power of appointing one. In the case of Boxley v. Stubbington, though there was no power to appoint an executor—a point I am not going to discuss now—though there was no power, yet the testatrix having done it, the Court granted the administration. Then what was the real effect and meaning of Salmon and Hays v. Breese? Because it is absolutely just, if I am going to take a case as a guide, that I must really look at the circumstances of the case, and must not take a single expression from the judge who decided that case, than whom there was none more accurate—we must not take a single expression dehors the case, and pin him down to it. That case arose under the following circumstances:—Mrs. Hays made a will—very obscure to begin with—and a doubt arose as to the validity of the will—it was long before the Statute of Wills—whether it was duly executed, it having begun—"I, Elizabeth Mary Hays," and she not having signed the paper, the husband opposed the probate, contending that it was imperfect. An allegation was given in, the judge admitted it, expressing considerable doubt as to what the ultimate result would be. The husband then gave up opposition, and consented that probate should be taken, and then the question arose whether he who was the husband should take the grant, or whether it should be taken by two daughters by a former marriage, who were legatees in the will. It is to be observed the donee had a power in that case; she exercised [illegible] peared as the representative of the four children. So far as interest went, the majority was with Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays represented a greater interest than that of the other two daughters in the proportion of two to one. Upon that occasion it was contended, "Where a feme covert makes a will in respect of property over which she has a disposing power, and does not appoint an executor, administration with the will annexed is granted to the surviving husband, if he is willing to take it." The Court said that was correct as to general practice; and I have no doubt as the practice then was, that was correct. Whether the practice has continued the same, uniform, to the present time, I am not enabled to say; but I can never omit from bearing in my mind, when I am talking of a grant, that to couple the grant with the interest is, for the most part, one of the leading principles of this Court, and, as I think, one of the safest principles on which it can go. However, what did the Court say in that case? It saw no reason to depart from the ordinary practice, holding, as is undoubtedly true, that it had a discretionary power to grant the administration with the will annexed to Mr. Hays, because he said he had not carried on a vexatious opposition, but had withdrawn the very moment the allegation was admitted, and he was also the father of four legatees. Under these circumstances, he said he saw no reason to pass him over, and he granted it to Mr. Hays in preference. Then the result of that is, that it is a matter of fair discretion to whom the administration shall be granted. The Court must judge from all the circumstances of the case to whom the administration ought properly to pass. I must say this case is toto cœlo different from Salmon and Hays v. Breese, as to the title of Mr. Lynn to administration, for the course he has adopted is, indeed, very unlike that of Mr. Hays, who, when the allegation was admitted, withdrew from litigation. Mr. Lynn has carried the case not only through the Prerogative Court, not only to the Superior Court—the Judicial Committee—but, according to the statement made in his own act, threatens legal proceedings elsewhere. How, then, can I think that Mr. Lynn is the person best calculated to administer this property, in which he has no interest, for the benefit of those entitled to it according to the instrument, if the Court decrees probate? I verily cannot. As to there being other property, he may take a cæterorum grant, and I see no inconvenience if there be such property. I cannot doubt the proper person to take the administration is Mrs. Brenchley, who has fought through this long-contested battle, and who, I think, on every principle of law as well as justice is entitled to it. I therefore grant probate of this paper alone—namely, the codicil bearing date the 14th day of May, to Mrs. Brenchley, as the sister and universal legatee named in the paper.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

IN CHANCERY.

(Before Lord St. Leonards.)

March 20 and 31.

CUTTS v. SALMON.

Attorney and client—Sale—Specific performance—Infant—Duties of an attorney purchasing from his client considered.

An attorney for three brothers, on behalf of one of them, a minor, lotted and put up to sale an estate belonging to the three, and in person bid for and became the purchaser of one lot, and signed a contract, by which it was agreed that a deposit of 10 per cent. should be paid down, and that possession should be given and the purchase completed on a day before the infant would have attained his majority. The attorney did not pay the deposit, but took possession of the estate. The purchase-money was not paid in the manner or at the time mentioned in the contract. The client, after attaining twenty-one, five months after the sale, received from the attorney money amounting to rather more than one-fifth of his share of the purchase-money of the lot. Three years afterwards he filed his bill to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, which was not proved. Held, in the Court below, that the bill was filed too late, and was dismissed, but in consequence of the conduct of the attorney in the matter of the sale, without costs. The attorney subsequently filed his bill for the specific performance of the agreement; the Court, acquitting him of fraud, affirmed the decision of the Court below, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

Where an attorney purchases from his client, the Court will not assist him in obtaining specific performance, without he can shew that all confidence has been preserved in the matter of the sale.

Semble, an attorney should not purchase from his client without the intervention of another solicitor.

Where the solicitor to the vendor, and known to be such, bids at the sale, the presumption is, that he is bidding for the estate, and not for himself. In such a case the sale is damaged, as by so doing he prevents the public from bidding, and is enabled to buy the estate at an undervalue.

A vendor has no right to have his estate exposed to the hazard of an auction without a reserved bidding, not necessarily for the purpose of screwing up bidders to the highest point which the estate is worth, but for the purpose of preventing its going at a great undervalue.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

The facts of the case are reported in 16 Law T. Rep. 502; and 17 Law T. Rep. 87; and are stated in his Lordship's judgment.

Lee and F. S. Williams appeared for the appellant (the plaintiff).

Cooper, Malins, Craig, Elderton, and Goodwin appeared for the several parties.

The following cases were cited :—Cole v. Gibbons, 3 Pr. Wms. 290 ; Edwards v. Meyrick, 2 Hare, 60 ; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234 ; Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 355 ; Stead v. Dawber, 10 Adol. & Ell. 57 ; Cory v. Gertcken, 2 Madd. 46 ; Thomas v. Phillips, 11 Jurist, 80 ; Davies v. Davies, Vice-Chancellor Parker (not yet reported).

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case admits of very little doubt. The rule of law is perfectly clear and settled. Now the aid of particular authorities is not wanted to support the proposition that the attorney may buy from his client ; beyond all question there is no rule to prevent that: but if an attorney does buy an estate from his client, he must shew that he deals with him at arm's length ; if he fills that situation of confidence, he must also shew that all confidence has been preserved between the parties. No attorney would be well advised who should act for himself, and deal with his client for the purchase of that client's property. I say that the attorney would not be well advised if he so acted without the intervention of another solicitor. No solicitor ought ever to buy a property from his own client, without at once requiring that another solicitor should act for the client. I do not mean to lay down the rule that no purchase could be sustained as between attorney and client unless another solicitor was called in ; but no prudent man in the character of solicitor would ever attempt to purchase an estate from his client without seeing that that client was in the possession of the professional aid of another solicitor. This is a very singular case ; I never saw a case more so than the one now before the Court. Mr. Cutts, it appears, was the solicitor of the testator, by whom this property was given, and he was in possession of all the title deeds, of course in possession of the will ; and without imputing to him that he had the management of the estate, or was particularly conversant with its qualities, or had more knowledge of it than the persons actually living upon it, yet he had all the knowledge which properly belonged to what I may call the family solicitor. The property is given by the will in a way which admits of no doubt. No lawyer can look at the will without seeing that the trustees only took, if they did take, the intermediate estate up to the time of the Messrs. Salmon becoming of age ; when they did become of age the powers and estate of the trustees altogether ceased, and the young men themselves took the property amongst them as tenants in common in fee, and were the absolute masters of that estate, without any power or control, or any estate remaining in the trustees. I think it clear upon the evidence that the family of the Salmons did want to sell the property. There is no imputation, therefore, to be cast upon Mr. Cutts with reference to the intention of these parties to sell the estate ; but there is reason to think that they were led to believe, I do not know by whom, but one can easily suppose, that the legal estate was in the trustees, and that it was in them for sale ; whether it was a mistake or not I know not, and therefore express no opinion ; but it was a total want of knowledge of the commonest rule of law, with respect to the operation of the will. Any solicitor of this Court, I should imagine, looking at that will, would know at once that the legal estate in fee would become vested in the three sons on the youngest attaining the age of twenty-one ; but there was a representation that the estate must be sold. During the course of the argument for the plaintiff, I called for the advertisement announcing the sale of the estate, and I found it was as early as the month of March, 1845, and that advertisement announces the sale in these words :—"The valuable farms to be sold in the month of June next by order of the trustees named in the will of the late Mr. John Smith." Observe this—"by order of the trustees named in the will of the late Mr. John Smith," and that "possession will be given at Michaelmas next." Observe it says also, "that further particulars will be given, and the estate may be looked over on application to Mr. Cutts, solicitor," &c. Now there is a representation which I must consider is brought home to Mr. Cutts himself as early as the month of March 1845 ; a representation to the purport and effect that the estate was in the trustees for sale, and was to be sold in the month of June, and that possession was to be given at Michaelmas. Now the error was found out in some way or other, but is not explained how ; and consequently the advertisement in that respect was not acted upon. The particulars of sale were then generally for a sale without reference to the trustees, and yet the trustees were acting as if they had had some authority over this estate for sale. Now it appears that there were three closes which were the particular objects of desire of Mr. Cutts, and which Mr. Cutts wished particularly to possess ; and I do not impute any fraud to Mr. Cutts in this transaction. From anything in the odious sense of fraud I entirely, as far as my opinion goes, absolve Mr. Cutts. He was desirous of having three particular closes, constituting part of this estate, and I think naturally so, because it so happened that these closes adjoined his own property. Now the question arose as to how the estate should be lotted, and the auctioneer took the business of allotting the property principally upon himself. It appears that several persons went in a body, and amongst them Mr. Cutts, for the purpose of looking over this estate with a view to this allotment ; but when they came to this particular portion which, as I have already observed, Mr. Cutts wished to purchase, and did eventually purchase, it appears that Mr. Cutts withdrew · that fact impresses one with the notion that he believed at that time they could not interfere with the sale. However, the three closes in question, which constituted a considerable portion of this small estate, were lotted, and they formed lot 8, which has been the subject of contest. Now, without going any further into the facts of the case on that point, it appears that Mr. Cutts bought that property ; I will presently state the circumstances under which he bought it. I may observe that he made a very good purchase, he gave 2,500*l.* and he was enabled to withdraw and keep in his own hands the ground which he particularly wished to possess, and which I think was some twenty-four or twenty-five acres of land ; he kept that in his own hands, and he let the remainder of the lot for 100*l.* giving only 2,500*l.* or 2,510*l.* for the whole. That is no proof of fraud ; but is a proof that the lot was a very good lot, and would have fetched, no doubt, under ordinary circumstances, a large price, and that 2,510*l.* therefore, cannot but be regarded in the light of a bargain on the part of Mr. Cutts. I am not prepared to say that the amount of the purchase-money was such as would have justified the Court in setting aside the conveyance. But on the other hand, to have done what was strictly right, Mr. Cutts, when he made up his mind to purchase this part of the property, ought cautiously to have withdrawn himself from every dominion over it ; but instead of doing that, we find that he allows himself to be inserted in the advertisement in the public newspaper announcing the sale, as the solicitor ; and in case of any further information being required he allows himself to be referred to. It is admitted that he drew as many of the conditions as bear on the title and so on, and with a full knowledge, as I must suppose him to possess, of the title. He stipulates that an abstract shall be delivered in twenty-one days ; that that abstract shall shew a good title ; and that the possession of the estate and the completion of the purchase shall take place in Michaelmas 1845, the sale taking place in the month of June. How did the circumstances of the case at that time stand ? Edmund, one of the children (and on whose attaining the age of twenty-one the estate would vest in all those persons), was not at that time, although nearly, twenty-one ; he did not attain that age until the month of November following. Now observe the first false step which Mr. Cutts took after he had discovered the mistake as to the trustees ; he allows this estate to be sold under an express condition, namely, that a good title shall be shown in twenty-one days, and an abstract delivered, and the purchase completed at Michaelmas on conveyance, and payment of the purchase-money. I must consider him cognisant of this fact, namely, that Edmund not being of age until the month of November following, he could not sell himself, neither could any body sell for him ; that he could not sell and convey it at the time the conveyance was stipulated to be executed. What, therefore, is to be said of a transaction in which an attorney puts up the estate of his client for sale, the estate of a client who is under age, and stipulates that the purchase shall be completed while his client is under age ? He must be taken to have known at the time that every purchaser of the estate, or portions of the estate, if he happened to be dissatisfied with his purchase, might turn round after the sale had taken place and might throw up his purchase and bring an action on the ground that the sale had taken place without the possibility of making a title ; how is it possible to sustain the case if it stood there merely ? How is it possible, I ask, to sustain such a transaction ? A solicitor for an infant sells his estate during infancy, and stipulates that the title should be made good during the infancy, and the conveyance also be made during the infancy ; thus enabling every purchaser, after all the expenses had been incurred, to throw up his contract and rescind the sale. That alone, in my judgment, would be a sufficient ground if that were all ; but it is not all, or approaching all. Mr. Cutts goes as solicitor, with his name in these particulars as solicitor to that estate ; every body in the room knew that he was the solicitor; that fact was known to every man ; he bid openly, and he bid for himself. What would be the fair inference which everybody would have drawn at that sale ? Why, undoubtedly, that Mr. Cutts attending there at that sale, and known to be the solicitor, and avowed to be the solicitor, every man present at that sale must have believed,—I mean everybody who knew any thing of the ordinary transactions of sales of this nature—must be taken to have believed that Mr. Cutts was bidding for the estate and not for himself. But we must inquire what effect that would have had on the sale. Now, for that purpose, look at the case of Twining v. Morris, 2 Bro. C. C. 326 ; 6 Ves. jun. 338 ; 10 Ves. jun. 305, 313, 398 ; and see what effect the Court has given to a circumstance of that nature. If a solicitor attends a sale known to be the solicitor, and does not publicly mention the fact that he is buying for himself, and the public is led to believe, as they naturally would without evidence to the contrary, that the man is bidding for the estate, he thereby damages the sale and prevents men from bidding who otherwise would have done so if they thought it a bonâ fide sale, and he enables himself to buy at an undervalue by the very circumstance that he himself is a bidder. But observe another thing which took place, and the effect of it. I refer to the fact of there being no reserved bidding. Who ever heard of a sale of this nature taking place without a reserved bidding ? Mr. Cutts, meaning to buy part of the estate himself, and these alleged trustees, meaning to buy the rest, they go to the sale of the property of these young men during their infancy and have no reserved bidding. Who ever heard of such a thing ? What is to prevent their buying the estate at any price ? There is nothing to protect it. Is a solicitor to tell me that he is to maintain a sale against his client, when he has put that client in a condition to have his estate sold for anything it may fetch ; perhaps, for a fourth or fifth of its proper value : Besides he has not taken proper precaution. No man is expected to expose his estate to the hazard of an auction, without freely having a reserved bidding ; not necessarily for the purpose of screwing up bidders to the highest point which the estate is worth, but merely for the purpose of preventing the estate going greatly under its value. Suppose, for the purpose of argument, that could be justified, which cannot be, but suppose for a moment it could be justified, what should he have done as a prudent solicitor acting for his client ? Undoubtedly he ought to have told the public that it was a sale without reserve, and then again you would have had the advantage, as he had the advantage, of selling without a reserve ; for if the public know, and have confidence in the auctioneer, and the parties believe what is said, for, I am afraid it is sometimes said, but not acted upon,—I say if they can have confidence, and believe that they are dealing with men of character and credit, it assists the sale of the estate, if it is understood that there is no reserved bidding; and the people bidding believe that every man who bids is an honest, fair, bonâ fide bidder. But there is this circumstance in addition, there is no guard on the estate ; no guard against the estate being sold for nothing, or against being sold for next to nothing, and there is no benefit taken from that great relaxation of the common rule ? Well, now, what portion does Mr. Cutts buy ? What are the particular conditions which Mr. Cutts, acting as solicitor for this young gentleman, who was under age, imposes upon the rest of the world ? He imposes the condition, that ten per cent. should be paid down instantly as a deposit, and the remainder of the purchase-money at Michaelmas, 1845, and possession given at the same time. Now, then, let us see how Mr. Cutts executes this contract between himself and his client. His client was entitled to 10 per cent. down. That was a large proportion of the purchase-money ; it lies dead as against the purchaser, and it is a security to the seller that the purchaser will complete his contract, or he loses his deposit. The remainder of the purchase-money was to be paid at Michaelmas. So early a time after the sale was, of course, a very great benefit, because then this young man, for example, supposing he had been of age (he was not competent to have received the money at the time, as I have said before, therefore it was a delusion as regards him-

Appeal dismissed with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY

Reported by Owen Davies Tudor, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

March 19, 20, and 22.

Kent v. Jackson.

Foreign railway—English directors—Managing committee—Discharge by general meeting.

The English Directors of a Belgian railway company, established as a Société Anonyme, subsequent to their retiring, returned deposits to a considerable amount to English allottees, and also purchased back for the company some of the shares which had been allotted. An account of these transactions was laid by the English directors before the committee of management, to whom also the balance due from the English directors was paid. These transactions were afterwards approved of by a general meeting:

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the general meeting had power to sanction such a transaction, and having done so, there was no ground for a suit in this country against the retired English directors.

This was an appeal from the decision of his Honour the Master of the Rolls, dismissing the bill of J. K. Kent, a shareholder in the Charleroy and Erquelinnes Railway Company, which was filed on the 24th of June, 1848, on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders of the company (except such of the several persons thereinafter named as defendants thereto, as were shareholders in the said company), against Jackson, the assignees of Graham, and the committee of management of the railway company, who were stated to be out of the jurisdiction. It appeared that on the 28th of May, 1845, by the royal concession of the King of the Belgians, the railway company was established as a "Société Anonyme," under certain articles or rules (afterwards duly ratified and approved of by a royal ordinance), which, so far as are material, are as follows:—

Art. 3. The company takes the title of, &c. Its seat is Brussels.

Art. 15. The possession of, or subscription for, one or more "titres," carries with it the adhesion to the present statutes.

Art. 16. The company shall be represented by a general meeting of shareholders: it shall be managed by a board.

Art. 23. The board of directors is invested with the most extensive powers, as regards the construction and the working of the line, its branches and dependencies. It is authorised to contract for the whole or part of the works; it is authorised to pass, with third parties (but subject to the approval of the general meeting), all treaties advantageous to the company, even for railways in connection with this one. It makes the regulations for management or internal order, and superintends their execution.

Art. 26. As the members of the board act as representing the company, they contract, by virtue of their offices, no joint or personal liability; they are only answerable for the execution of the trusts reposed in them, under art. 32 of the Code of Commerce.

Art. 28. Judicial proceedings shall be carried on in the name of the board of directors, at the prosecution, and by the proceeding of the chairman, or of the person replacing him.

Art. 31. The general meeting regularly convened by a notice, &c. shall represent the whole body of shareholders. It assembles every six months, &c.

Art. 38. At the meetings constituted according to the terms of article 31, the general meeting take cognisance of the accounts and balances, and determines on them finally. The approval of the balances completely discharges the board of directors.

Art. 39. The deliberations of the general meeting, taken in conformity with the above dispositions, bind the company, &c.

Art. 43. Every six months, at the half-yearly general meeting, the active and passive situation of the company shall be presented to the meeting, the accounts and balances shall be settled and approved, &c. &c.

Art. 47. All disputes between members of the company, concerning the affairs of the company, shall be judged by arbitrators. The tribunal shall be composed of three arbitrators, in the choice of whom the parties shall be bound to agree within eight days; in default of which, the said arbitrators will be named by the president of the Tribunal of Commerce of Brussels, at the request of the first requirent. The arbitrators shall decide absolutely, as amicable compounders, without appeal, and without being bound by the forms and delays of legal proceedings. Their decision cannot be reversed by appeal, civil petition, nor by recourse to Cassation.

By another article, the defendant Jackson, Graham, and certain other persons, were appointed directors. Shares having been allotted in England, deposits upon them to the amount of 12,680*l.* were paid into the bank of Smith, Payne, and Co. to the joint account of Jackson and Graham. On the 26th of October, 1845, each of them, in consequence of disputes between the English and Belgian directors, sent in his resignation of the office of director, which was duly accepted. In November 1845, Jackson and Graham sent a circular to the English shareholders, giving them the option either of taking scrip in exchange for the banker's receipts, or having the amount of their deposits, paid by them, returned without interest. Many of the allottees having adopted the latter alternative, deposits to the amount of 8,280*l.* were paid to them by Jackson and Graham, out of the 12,628*l.* by cheques on the bankers.

The plaintiff Kent was the owner of ten shares in the company, which he had purchased three weeks only before the filing of the bill. The bill alleged, "that the company, ever since it was established, carried on, and still continued to carry on and conduct, their affairs, on the footing of and in conformity with the said rules and regulations; and that such rules and regulations have ever since constituted, and now constitute, the existing laws of the said company, and are binding on all persons who are or have been, at any time, members or shareholders of or in the same, to the full extent of all their respective property or interest therein." The bill also alleged, that Jackson and Graham determined to avail themselves of the legal control they had over the English deposits, for the purpose of indemnifying themselves against all liabilities which they had incurred as directors; the bill insisted that the return of the deposits amounted to a breach of trust and fraud on the shareholders, and that it had taken place against the protest of the committee of management, and that the committee had no power to authorise the return of the deposits. It also charged, that the shareholders were very numerous, and that it would be impracticable to make them parties, and prayed that it might be declared that Jackson and the assignees of Graham (who had become bankrupt) were liable to make good the 8,280*l.*; and that an account might be taken, and that the sum found due, might be paid and secured in court for the benefit of the Charleroy and Erquelinnes Railway Company, and all persons entitled to or interested in the funds thereof. Jackson, by his answer, said that the English directors had retired in consequence of the apparent impossibility of the company carrying its plans into effect, and that they had declined, after their retirement, to pay the English deposits to the committee of management in Belgium, and that they returned them to the English allottees with the sanction of Mr. Arnold, the solicitor of the committee of management, considering that they were entitled to them on the failure of the undertaking; that after their retirement various negotiations took place between the defendants and the committee of management, and that finally an account was rendered by them to the committee, and settled, and the balance, after deducting the sum of 8,280*l.* and certain other payments, was, on the 2nd of June, 1846, paid over to the committee of management. In the account thus rendered, a sum of 1,281*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* was included, which, as appeared by the answer, was paid by Jackson and Graham, with the sanction of Arnold, for the purchase back of 300 shares allotted in London.

On the part of the defendants, two Belgian advocates gave evidence as to the law of Belgium: the evidence of one of whom was in substance as follows: That the directors of Sociétés Anonymes could bring or maintain any suit in the name of such sociétés, but that no individual member could do so. That in this case any differences between shareholders must, by the 47th article of the statutes, which is in accordance with the terms of article 1134 of the Civil Code, making it binding on the shareholders, be settled by arbitration; and the Belgian tribunals would declare themselves incompetent in such cases.

Roundell Palmer and Shee, for the plaintiff, contended that the English directors had no authority to return the deposits, or to apply the funds of the company in purchasing up the 300 shares; and that, as trustees or agents for the company, they were liable to make good the funds so misappropriated. (Salomans v. Laing, 12 Beav. 352.)

Bethell, Wilcock, and Amphlett, for Jackson, contended—1st. That Jackson and Graham, after they had retired from being directors, had stated and settled their accounts respecting the transaction complained of with the committee of management in Belgium, and that all the members of the company were bound thereby. (Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461; Mozley v. Alston, 1 Phil. 790.) And moreover, it must be taken to be approved of by the general meetings; as it is alleged in the bill, "that the company have ever carried on their affairs on the footing of, and in conformity with, the rules and regulations." It must, then, be assumed that half-yearly meetings representing the whole body of shareholders had been held according to the 31st article; that the accounts in which the items complained of appeared, must have been duly passed according to the 38th article; and that by the 39th article the approval thereof was binding on the company. 2nd. That as the seat of the company by article 3 was in Belgium, the rights of the members of the company must be determined by the Belgian law. That by article 28 all judicial proceedings must take place at the prosecution of the chairman. That by article 47 all disputes between members concerning the affairs of the company are to be settled by arbitration. And even by the law of England an individual member cannot sue for money belonging to the corporate body, unless he shew a reason why the company neglect to do so. 3rd. That there was a misjoinder; for although the plaintiff may not have sanctioned or approved of the acts of the defendants now complained of, yet the other shareholders who did so, and are co-plaintiffs,—the bill being filed by the plaintiff on their behalf,—are wrongly joined with him in that capacity. (Graham v. The Birkenhead, &c. Railway Company, 2 Mac. & Gord. 146; King of Spain v. Machado, 4 Russ. 225.) 4th. That the railway company was a necessary party.

Malins and Borill, for the assignees of Graham.

Shee, in reply.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—Whether, upon the question of right or the question of remedy, the law of Belgium or the law of England is regarded, this suit seems to us ill founded. According to the law of Belgium, the plaintiff is incompetent to sue for the purpose for which he has filed this bill; and by the law of England, he has shewn no case for suing the Directors in the manner he has done, even if some suit be proper. The pleadings and evidence seem to us to shew that in the year 1847, more than a year before the plaintiff filed his bill, an account had been stated and settled between the committee of management in Belgium, who were authorised agents of the company, and Jackson and Graham; which account, if fairly stated, must be considered destructive of the plaintiff's case. It appears to us to have been fairly stated and settled; that is, every fact was stated without suppression, and the account so come to and stated was approved by the committee of management, who were in our opinion competent to do so. If, possibly, on account of the existing trusteeship, if there was one, the confirmation by the committee might have been insufficient, there must still be taken to have been a sufficient affirmance by the general meeting. There is, probably, more than one other ground fatal to this case; but enough has been said to shew that this petition of appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Jurisdiction — Foreign judgment — Contribution — Joint and several liability — Interlocutory order — Final decree.

A. a domiciled Scotchman, being indebted, borrowed money on the security of an estate in Scotland, part of which it was arranged should be deposited in the bank of Scotland, in the names of the plaintiff and defendant (the agents of the lender and borrower), in trust to meet the liabilities of certain creditors. The plaintiff and defendant made payments out of this deposit from time to time, which, though for the benefit of the borrower, were held by the Scotch Courts to be improper. Proceedings were taken by certain creditors in the Scotch courts, and in the course of these the defendant was ordered to pay in a sum admitted to be in his hands, and afterwards an interlocutory order was made directing plaintiff and defendant jointly and severally to pay in another sum, which sum was accordingly paid in by the plaintiff, the defendant having left Scotland and come to reside in England, and got an assignment of the order of Court from the creditors, which authorised him to call upon the defendant to repay him the whole amount so paid in. The plaintiff being unable to avail himself in Scotland of the assignment and process founded thereon, instituted the present suit to compel repayment by the defendant of the whole fund withdrawn, or if the Court would not make that order, then that the defendant should be decreed that part which, on an account taken between them, should appear to be due from him. The bill was dismissed with costs.

This Court has jurisdiction to enforce a foreign judgment or the debts and rights which might arise on a contract made between persons of another country who had afterwards come to reside here.

But the judgment of the foreign Court must be the final decree of the Court, and not an interlocutory order made in course of the litigation, the enforcement of which latter by this Court might work great injustice to the parties.

This was a bill to enforce an order of the Court of Session of Scotland, or to carry into effect certain proceedings founded thereon. The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

Anderson and Toller, for the bill, cited Dickson v. Stewart; Paul v. Roy, 1 Wils. & Sh. 716; Lingard v. Bromley, 1 Ves. & B. 114; Lefroy v. Gore, 1 Jon. & L. 517; Wilson v. Goodman, 4 Hare, 54.

R. Palmer, Goodeve, and Forbes for the defendant.

Thursday, Feb. 12.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Having given this case as much consideration as I could—and I considered it fully last night—I am prepared to state now my opinion that I have formed. At present I am of opinion that the plaintiff in this suit is not entitled to any decree for relief at all in this case. I am of opinion that he has not shewn any grounds for granting him the relief that he prays; and I am about to state the reasons upon which I have arrived at that conclusion. The facts of the case, as far as it is necessary for me to refer to them on the present occasion, are these:—That Major Anstruther being entitled to an estate, or the life interest in a certain estate called Caiphe, in Scotland, in the year 1835, which was considerably embarrassed, raised money from a gentleman or a [illegible] he [illegible] upon the estate, and the estate was to be conveyed to a gentleman of the name of Renton, in trust, for the rents arising therefrom to be applied for the purposes which are mentioned in the memorandum of agreement to which my attention has been called, and to which I have just referred. Of this sum of 10,000*l.* agreed to be thus lent, 7,900*l.* were applied in the discharge of the various charges mentioned in the memorandum, and the remaining sum of 2,100*l.* was deposited in the Bank of Scotland in the name of the plaintiff who was the agent of the lender, Mr. Wood, and in the name of the defendant, Mr. Roy, who was the agent of Major Anstruther upon the same occasion. This sum was deposited by them for this purpose—for the purpose of carrying into effect the trust to which the money was to be applied in the manner mentioned in this memorandum of trust. In the years 1835 and 1836 certain payments were made out of this fund; proceedings were taken, and the Court of Session has determined that many of these payments were improperly made, and several inhibition creditors having taken out proceedings somewhat analogous to our proceedings,—that is, to an attachment in this country,—a proceeding of a summary description, and having brought a suit of forthcoming in order to provide for the funds being brought back for the purpose of being made available; and the Court of Session having the rights and claims of all the parties entitled to the funds ascertained in that suit,—the Court have directed the two trustees, Paul and Roy, to bring back these sums of [certain sums particularly enumerated]—in order to make up the sum of 2,100*l.*, that is, to make up what was not properly paid out of it. In the first place they ordered, some time in the year 1841, that is, in June 1841, the Court ordered the defendant Roy to pay a sum of 569*l.* into court, on behalf of himself and the plaintiff, which he accordingly did on the 2nd of July, 1841, contending it was the utmost amount of those sums which had not been applied according to the trusts; and subsequently, in the year 1845, the Lord Ordinary directed that that sum should be made up to 1,981*l.* odd shillings, the amount of the sum in court being then 796*l.* which further sum was ordered to be paid in by both parties. This sum of money being ordered to be paid in, Mr. Roy comes to England, and Mr. Paul pays in the whole amount, and thereupon he gets an assignment from the creditors in the suit in the Court of Session—he gets an assignment of the decree from the creditors, which entitles him, Mr. Paul, in the terms of the decree to call upon Mr. Roy, to repay to him, Mr. Paul, the whole amount which he, Mr. Paul, has paid into court according to the order—the whole amount paid into court—not the half, but the whole amount; and thereupon he takes out letters of horning, and having failed in obtaining any satisfaction from the goods of the defendant, he takes out those letters of caption, which direct him and entitle him to take the defendant himself, and imprison him till the whole amount that is claimed is satisfied. The plaintiff being unable to put those letters of caption into effect, and the defendant having come to England, where he now resides, thereupon the plaintiff institutes this bill, which prays in the alternative - to which it is necessary to pay some attention presently, and which it will be proper to consider more fully; it prays that the defendant may be ordered, either to replace the whole of the sums paid out of the 2,100*l.* which were improperly paid out, other than the sum of 569*l.* which was replaced by the defendant, and also to pay the sum of 271*l.* 3s. 5d. and the costs incurred by the plaintiff in the actions of forthcoming and multiple-poinding, or, in default of the Court not considering that that ought to be done, that the defendant may be ordered to make contribution and pay the balance of the sum he paid taken from one-half of the fund paid into court. That is the relief which he seeks by this bill; and I was early embarrassed in the case in considering in what way the Court had properly jurisdiction in this case, if it had any; whether it was upon the ground of its being a foreign judgment, or whether on the ground that it was a contract which I was called upon to enforce, entered into between strangers, the subjects of a foreign country, and one or both of whom had come afterwards into this country. There is no doubt that, in the great majority of cases, some distinction may be taken; but I do not doubt that in either case this Court has jurisdiction either to enforce a foreign judgment, or in the great majority of cases to enforce the debts and rights which might arise on a contract made between two persons of another country when they came afterwards into this country and reside here. I first considered this, whether it was to be considered in the light of a foreign judgment, which must be taken as final, for it would be new to me to find that this Court would ever enforce a foreign judgment unless [illegible] enforce a judgment which was merely interlocutory, and give relief which might be enforced by final judgment in another country. The Court might do great injustice by so doing. If there is a final judgment to pay a certain sum of money, subject to certain observations I am about to make, I have no doubt that the Courts of this country can compel the debtor, if residing in this country, to pay the foreign judgment creditor the amount. But now considering this case either as a final judgment or not, in no way can this suit be considered as a suit for properly enforcing a foreign judgment. The decree, singularly enough in the first place,—this is not singular,—directs the plaintiff and the defendant to pay in the sum jointly and severally, that is, as between the creditors and the plaintiff and defendant themselves they were jointly liable to pay the whole amount; but then, upon one paying in the whole amount and obtaining an assignment of the decree, this singular result takes place, that if in such a case by order of the Court of Session the plaintiff obtains such an assignment of the decree, it enables him and gives him a right to obtain repayment from the other, not of the proportion of the amount ordered to be paid in jointly, but of the whole amount he has paid into court. In such a case as this, at least, there is no doubt the Court would inquire into the propriety of the foreign judgment. Even if this were the case of a final judgment in a foreign court, the case of Houlditch v. Donegall, 2 Cl. & F. 470; S. C. 8 Bli. N. S. 301, shews that it is to be treated as primâ facie evidence of the right in the party who had obtained the judgment, and that its propriety may be inquired into, and, therefore, that the Court has jurisdiction. If that be so, then, the only case we have to consider is, that of contribution; and the ground for contribution brought forward here is, that the Court having ordered two persons jointly and severally to pay a certain sum of money into court, it is inequitable that one of them, the plaintiffs, should pay in the whole amount; but so on the other hand it must be considered equally inequitable that the other, the defendant, should be called upon to repay the whole amount to him; yet the effect of it would be, if I were to make a decree in favour of the plaintiff to make the defendant pay the whole amount of the money into court. No doubt that is a result so monstrous that Mr. Anderson and Mr. Toller have not themselves asked the Court for a decree to give such relief or effect to the judgment pronounced in Scotland; and I consider if I were to act upon it, it would be treating it as if the judgment of a foreign Court and not the Court of Session. In that Court relief and proper justice might be administered between the parties notwithstanding a decree of that description; and, therefore, I am not able to consider this as a case of enforcing a foreign judgment—it would be unjust to do so, and I am not even asked by counsel to do so, nor does the bill, although it prays that on the proceedings in the Court of Scotland—in fact, asks me to carry into effect the whole of the judgment of the Court of Session—it only asks me to carry into effect a portion of it. Then I have to consider the question, independently of the question of not enforcing a foreign judgment, whether there is anything by reason of the proceedings which have taken place in Scotland which enables the plaintiff in this court, constituted as it is, to require the defendant to pay, either as the prayer of the bill puts it, the sums of money which have been improperly paid out of the 2,100*l.* or to pay half of the sum of money which has been paid into court. I will shortly consider these two questions: in the first place, the money which has been paid out of court is this—out of the Bank of Scotland, I should say—I use the words as meaning the same in both cases, and for all practical purposes the meaning must be considered the same. There was a sum of 2,100*l.* for the purposes mentioned in the memorandum: various sums of money have been paid out of it, and to the evidence that has been given upon that subject I have attended very carefully, for the purpose of seeing what those sums were that were paid out. There was paid out,—and, it is not contested, was paid out with propriety,—a sum of 501*l.* 19s. for inhibition debts, and with respect to that sum no question is raised on either side. With respect to other necessary sums which were paid out, there are various sums which, according to the statements in the bill, and according to the whole of the evidence, amounting altogether to 1,019*l.* seem to have been paid out to the plaintiff himself. I will consider in a moment the question of an account. These sums appear to have been paid out to the plaintiff himself,—one sum was for costs, another sum was for the purpose of replacing premiums on policies which the plaintiff had already paid, and which not merely he mentions the fact of his having already paid, but that the money paid to him is not merely the amount paid upon the premiums, but interest from the time when he advanced [illegible] being applied to that purpose, but that the premiums on the policies had been actually paid by the plaintiff at that time, and that the plaintiff then came to make the fund in court—to make the trust fund available to repay him, with interest upon the amount so paid. If you take the whole amount, after deducting that 103*l.* which remains in court, the total amount of the rest will be 425*l.*, so that if the whole of the amount of the rest had been paid to the defendant Roy, he would pay back under the order 569*l.* more than the amount of the money paid out to him Now, there could be no question that the Court of Session having determined that these sums of money were improperly paid, the person who received them ought to replace them, and that is the manner in which this Court, and I have no doubt in the Court of Session, would be the ultimate way in which the rights of the parties and the equity of the case would be worked out. There were some sums of money which were advanced by the plaintiff out of his own pocket, which, he says, were properly payable out of the rents, and he makes this sum of 2,100*l.* available for that purpose to repay himself. The Court of Session having decreed that sum to be made good and to be replaced, they must both, the plaintiff and defendant, as against the creditors, make it good. But suppose this were solely a trust fund, and the money had not been applied for any other purpose, it would rest simply between the plaintiff and the defendant, and each would have to pay the sums he had received. These sums were paid out to repay debts, in respect of which the plaintiff was a creditor; but the plaintiff says,—and for that purpose an elaborate account has been gone through on both sides,—the plaintiff says these very sums which were paid by the plaintiff, ought to have been paid—I shall be very glad to be set right if I misstate anything—that, in fact, although the plaintiff paid this annuity to Lady Anstruther, the rents of the estate were applicable to this purpose, and that, in fact, the defendant Roy, in his account of the receipts of the rents, has had credit for the application of the rents for that express purpose. Now, I assume that to be so, and observing in what character Roy was in possession of the estate, I find that he was in possession of the estate as factor to the trustee, and according to the law of this country, the factor could only be answerable to his trustee for the rents, and is not answerable to any of the cestuis que trust for any of those rents; but the factor, as between himself and his trustee, having misapplied those rents,—the factor being nothing more than what we in England should call a steward—a person who, by authority, receives the rents—the trustee would equally render answerable and liable for the due application of those rents which he had received himself, or by his factor, Mr. Roy, who was only his agent. In fact, if there were a case different from that, it would be totally impossible for me to take an account of the rents, to see whether they had been properly applied. It could not be done in a case of this kind, because it is obvious that Mr. Renton should be, and is, a necessary party to this suit for that purpose; and also, that Major Anstruther should be made a party, or else the Court would be taking accounts over and over again, which would not bind absent parties, and therefore would have to be taken over and over again for every one of those parties as they came. It is impossible, therefore, that I can, in a suit constituted as this is, regard, in any degree whatever, any question arising upon the rents of the estate, for the purpose of considering whether, in point of fact, whether it be law or not, the defendant Roy has, in the account of those rents, had allowance made for those very sums which were advanced by the plaintiff, Mr. Paul, and which Mr. Paul got repaid to him out of the 2,100*l.* improperly, and which the Court of Session has ordered to be replaced. In my view of the case, I can only look at the question of the 2,100*l.* and I consider that the suit is not a suit which is constituted in any form, which would enable me to look at it in any other way. Well, then, the other case, that if he, the plaintiff, is not entitled to that, the other alternative of the prayer is, that he may have contribution; that is to say, that the defendant may be compelled to pay into the Bank of Scotland, or into the Court of Session, the one-half of that sum which Paul and Roy were ordered jointly to repay; but upon what ground can I do that? Not upon the ground that it is a foreign judgment, because that is not a final judgment; not on the ground that that is shewn to be the proper amount between the parties, because I say it is not possible for me to ascertain that it is the proper amount; but it is only upon the ground that a foreign Court has directed two persons to pay a sum of money into court, jointly and severally, and has thought proper to make a decree, that this Court is asked to say that, and say they ought to pay it in separately, while the other Court has jurisdiction in the matter, and the proceedings shewing that steps are now going on in that court for the purpose of working out full and complete justice. I am of opinion that if I came to deal with the case in the present state of the case, I should, in fact, be carrying on the suit concurrently with the Court of Session, not having before me the whole of the parties who are before the Court of Session—not having the evidence laid before me which is before the Court of Session—not having the means of obtaining that evidence—and not having the means of doing justice between the parties when the arguments were proceeding. I put this question, supposing if I should order that Mr. Roy should pay to Mr. Paul one-half of what I should consider was due, or any other sum, and the Court of Session would not afterwards look upon that decision as being correct, and should determine that that was not the proper amount to be paid, and should call upon Mr. Paul to repay it, how could I say that Mr. Roy could get that back? and I consider if I were to do so I should, in fact, be making a final decree in a case which is pending in another court, and in which case that Court has made no final decree itself. I am also of opinion that it would be necessary for the plaintiff to ascertain by proceedings in the foreign court what was the amount which was properly due from the defendant. I am not satisfied that he has not the means of efficiently doing that, and I am not satisfied that by means of an account being taken against the defendant in a foreign court, the plaintiff has not the means of discovering if he has property. I am not satisfied that there is not property in another country belonging to Mr. Roy himself which might give a right of jurisdiction against Mr. Roy. It is very true that I do not call upon Mr. Roy to shew that he has property, but if it be true that the plaintiff could not obtain a final decree against the defendant, the burden would lie upon him to prove that, and if a final decree had been obtained in Scotland, and accounts taken ascertaining what was the sum due, there would have arisen a question which it is not necessary for me to discuss, whether the plaintiff could have enforced his claim in this court, or whether he might not have gone to a Court of Law. As I have considered and expressed my opinion that there is no case of a foreign judgment made out before me upon which I could act, and as I have gone into the other question, I do not stay to inquire whether this is the proper tribunal or not, or whether this is one of those peculiar cases which relate to the accounts of rents in a foreign country in which this Court would have jurisdiction to inforce a contract entered into by foreigners alone, because I am of opinion that no case has been made out, and for the reasons I have stated I can give the plaintiff no relief, and therefore the bill must be dismissed with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, Feb. 15.

Ex parte CROXTON, re THE OUNDLE UNION BREWING COMPANY.

Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Costs.

A trustee of a company, by the order of the directors, executed a bond for a sum advanced to the company, and was afterwards sued for the debt and compelled to pay it. Upon the company being ordered to be wound up, the trustee carried in a claim for the amount paid by him, but the Master disallowed the claim. Upon an appeal from this decision, the Court directed an action to be tried as to the trustee's right to be repaid, which action resulted in a verdict in the trustee's favour. The Court gave the trustee the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him in resisting the claim, and the costs of the motion of appeal from the Master's decision, and before the Master.

In 1840, the Oundle Union Brewing Company being in want of funds for carrying on the business of the company, an arrangement was made by the directors with John Hudson for the loan by him to the company of 1,000*l.* and as a security for the same it was agreed that George Croxton and William Prentice, as trustees for and on behalf of the company, should jointly execute a bond in the penalty of 2,000*l.* in favour of John Hudson. The bond, dated the 2nd of July, 1840, was accordingly executed by Croxton and Prentice, at the request and by the order of three of the directors of the company, who signed a memorandum to that effect at the foot of the bond. The money was applied to the uses of the company, and interest on the bond was from time to time paid out of the funds of the company up to the 1st of January, 1850. On the 26th of February, 1850, an action to recover the said 1,000*l.* and interest was commenced, of which Croxton gave notice to the company's solicitor, and to Prentice and the directors. On the 26th of April, 1850, Croxton gave a further notice to the solicitor and directors of the company under the provisions of the Winding-up Acts, requiring them to pay the money or defend the action. On the 30th of April, 1850, the action came on to be tried, and a verdict for the principal, interest, and costs was given for the plaintiffs, and on the 31st of May, Croxton paid this amount. On the 25th of May, 1850, the company was order to be wound up (15 Law T. 201). A claim having been carried in before the Master (Richards) by Mr. Croxton to be repaid the said debt and costs, and also the damages he had sustained in regard thereto, it was, on the 23rd of March, 1[illegible] disallowed. Upon an appeal from the Master's decision, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the 8th of May, 1851, directed an action to be tried as to Mr. Croxton's right to the principal and interest paid by him, reserving the question as to damages. The action was tried in Michaelmas Term last, and a verdict was given in Mr. Croxton's favour. The motion before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce was accordingly now renewed by Wigram and Hislop Clarke for Mr. Croxton, who claimed to be repaid the sums paid by him, and also his costs, and a further sum on account of the damage sus'ain'd in raising money to pay Hudson.

Bacon and Roxburgh, for the the official manager, contended that Mr. Croxton should not have incurred the expense of defending Hudson's action, and that as Mr. Croxton could, upon application to the Master under the 91st section of the Winding-up Act, have had the question between himself and the official manager tried by an action or issue, the costs of the appeal before the Vice-Chancellor had been needlessly incurred, and ought not to be allowed.

Wigram in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that Mr. Croxton was a trustee for the company, and in the character of trustee had borrowed money of Hudson. Hudson recovered a judgment for his debt and costs against Croxton. The Master, considering that there was no sufficient authority in the company's deed for thus borrowing the money, had disallowed Mr. Croxton's claim. The result of the action proved that the borrowing of the 1,000*l.* was an authorised act. Croxton was therefore entitled to be indemnified personally. His Honour thought that he was entitled to his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by him as a trustee in defence of the claim of Hudson, which had proved to be a claim against the company, and to the costs of the present motion and before the Master. He could not, however, give to Mr. Croxton any sum on account of damages sustained in raising the money.

Ex parte HILL, re THE MIDLAND UNION, BURTON-UPON-TRENT, ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, AND LEICESTER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint-stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

A. B. a member of the provisional committee of a projected railway company, attended meetings of the committee. At one meeting, which he did not attend, the surveyor was appointed; but at another meeting, in October, 1845, which A. B. did attend, the surveyor's report was adopted and directed to be advertised. The project was soon afterwards abandoned, and the solicitor was directed to arrange with the surveyor as to his claim of 2,625l. which he did by paying him 1,300l. and the solicitor claimed repayment of this 1,300l. from the company. The company was ordered to be wound up, and A. B.'s administratrix was placed by the Master upon the list of contributories. An appeal from the Master's decision was dismissed with costs.

This was a motion on behalf of Mrs. C. E. C. Hill, administratrix of John George Norbury, esq. deceased, that the Master (Tinney) might be directed to review his decision, whereby the name of the said C. E. C. Hill, as the administratrix of the said J. G. Norbury, was placed on the list of contributories to the above-named company, by striking her name off such list. The company was formed in 1845, and Mr. J. G. Norbury was a provisional director, and a member of the committee of management. At a meeting of the committee on the 17th of October, 1845, at which Mr. Norbury was not present, it was resolved "that 500 shares be the maximum number to be allotted to each member of the committee of management." At a meeting on the 28th of the same month, at which Mr. Norbury was present, it was resolved, "that the whole number of shares, with the exception of those originally reserved for provisional committee, be allotted to the public." On the 29th of the same month Mr. Norbury was present at a meeting, at which it was resolved, "that the report of the company's engineer, Mr. Vignoles, this day received by the secretary, be entered on the minutes, and published in the usual morning papers of to-morrow, and in the railway weekly papers, under the direction of Mr. Baxter." The report alluded to in this resolution was as follows:—

"Sir,—I have the satisfaction of reporting to you, for the guidance of the board, that the progress made in the parliamentary surveys is such, that I am now able to assure you that the whole of the necessary plans and sections will be completed in good time for lodgment on the 29th of November.—I am, Sir, your faithful servant,

"C. VIGNOLES, Engineer.
"Wm. Knight, esq. Sec. Midland Union Railway."

Some shares in the company were allotted, but not to the provisional directors, and deposits were paid upon them, but the project was soon afterwards abandoned. Mr. Vignoles' claim amounted to 2,635*l.* This claim was left to be arranged by Mr. Baxter, the company's solicitor, who paid 1,300*l.* to Vignoles, and now claims to be repaid that sum. On the 25th March, 1850, the company was ordered to be wound up. (15 Law T. 3.) Mr. Norbury died in August 1849, and Mrs. Hill, who was now placed on the list of contributories, took out letters of administration to his effects.

Hobhouse, for Mrs. Hill, referred to Besley's case, 3 De G. & Sma. 221; 2 Mac. & Gord. 176; 3 Mac. & Gord. 287; Glaholme's case, 1 De G. & Sma. 583; and Hutchinson's case, 1 De G. & Sma. 563; and contended that Mr. Norbury had incurred no liabilities, but that, if he had, no expenses had been incurred since the 29th of October, 1845; and the Statute of Limitations would apply.

Roxburgh, for the official manager, referred to Carrick's case, 1 Sim. N. S. 505; and Ex parte Tanner, 18 Law T. 233.

Hobhouse, in reply.

Monday, April 19.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, the question in this motion was, whether Mrs. Hill, the administratrix of Mr. Norbury, was liable to contribute to the debts, liabilities, or losses of the company. The evidence was scanty, but his Honour thought the Master had come to a right conclusion upon the evidence, and that the name of the administratrix was properly placed upon the list of contributories. The company consisted of persons who contemplated the formation of the railway above named. The project was abandoned before any great progress had been made in the formation of the company. His Honour said, he was bound by the authorities on the subject, and indeed by the order under which the present proceedings had been taken, to assume that there was, within the meaning of the Winding-up Act, a "company" to be wound up. It appeared that a numerous body of persons had been appointed to act as a provisional committee of the company, and from among those, ten persons, including Mr. Norbury, formed themselves into a committee of management. That committee appeared to have acted in the usual way. Frequent meetings were held for transacting such business as was considered necessary, with a view to the formation of the company. At those meetings orders were given from time to time, resolutions were entered into, expenses were incurred, and regular entries kept of what passed at those meetings. Mr. Norbury appeared to have attended at those meetings, at some of which orders were given for expenses which had been subsequently incurred. At one of the meetings of the committee of management, Mr. Vignoles had been appointed as engineer to the company, and he had been directed by them to make the neces[illegible], and a resolution was entered into to that effect. Mr. Norbury, it was true, was not present at that particular meeting, but it appeared that he was present at a subsequent meeting on the 29th of October, 1845, at which the appointment of Mr. Vignoles, as the company's engineer, was recognised, and a report made by him as to the progress of his services was adopted, and directed to be entered in the minutes, and advertised in the newspapers by Mr. Baxter, who was the company's solicitor. In respect of his employment as engineer, Mr. Vignoles afterwards brought in a demand against the company, which, under the sanction of a meeting of the provisional directors, who were acting at that time, was compromised, and 1,300*l.* was paid by Mr. Baxter to Mr. Vignoles on account of his claim. Mr. Baxter stated that the sum of 1,300*l.* was still due to him. His Honour considered that primâ facie (subject of course to investigation as to the propriety of the payment) the amount due to Mr. Vignoles, whatever was properly paid by Mr. Baxter in satisfaction of his claim, was a debt or liability of the company within the meaning of the Winding-up Acts. The question was, whether it was a debt or liability of the company towards which Mr. Norbury was liable to contribute. Lord Cranworth had very distinctly stated (Carrick's case, 1 Simon's New Cases, 505) who were, at the time of the passing of the Act, the persons liable to pay the debts incurred in the attempt to form the company. He said (p. 509): —"Evidently those who had given the orders under which the debts were incurred; or who had sanctioned the giving of such orders by others. No one could be liable unless either the creditor could say to him, 'My debt was incurred under an order given or sanctioned by you;' or unless the party liable to the creditor could say to him, 'I incurred this obligation under your engagement to contribute rateably with me.'" It was very possible in this case Mr. Vignoles could not have said (following Lord Cranworth's language) that his debt was incurred under an "order given" by Mr. Norbury. He was not a party to the order; but he thought that the parties who were liable under that order might say to Mr. Norbury that the expenses were incurred under an engagement to contribute rateably to them. Here was a limited number of gentlemen, who formed themselves into a committee of management for forming this project. They gave orders as to the mode of doing particular acts, and as to the mode of carrying it out. What the law looked to was the liability of those gentlemen upon the order given eventually, and in the last instance, without any claim of contribution from others. Was it not obvious that when gentlemen associated in objects of this kind, necessarily this Court must imply a contract between themselves that they should contribute rateably towards the expenses which were incurred under orders, which, although not given by themselves, or sanctioned by themselves, were acted upon and carried out by such of them as happened to be present. He could not entertain a doubt that, in the present case, under the circumstances, there was a contract to be implied among these ten persons to contribute rateably to the liability incurred under the resolutions of a body of whom Mr. Norbury formed a part, and therefore that the Master was right in his conclusion. The official manager must have his costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

SEYMOUR v. VERNON.

Receiver—Fire insurance—Income of tenant for life.

Where premiums had been paid by a receiver under the order of the Court, to keep up certain policies of insurance on buildings or real estate; and which premiums had been paid out of the rents and profits of the estate to which W. B. H. was subsequently declared to be tenant in tail in possession. The buildings having been burned down:

Held that the tenant in tail in possession was entitled to the amount of the policies of insurance received from the insurance office.

This was a petition of an infant by his guardian, praying the amount of certain policies received from an insurance office on certain buildings on the estate having been burned down, might be carried to his "separate account" in the cause. It appeared that a suit had been instituted for the administration of the trusts of the will of the late Lord Harcourt, and by an order made in this Court, it was ordered that the receiver of the real estates who had been appointed in this cause, should pay all the rates, taxes, premiums of insurance, and all other outgoings in respect to the Mansion House at St. Leonard's-hill, devised by Lord Harcourt's will. The first tenant in tail in possession under the will had insured the Mansion House, stables, outhouses, and other buildings at St. Leonard's-hill, in a sum of £15,000 in his own name. He died in 1847. After his death, the insurance was continued and premiums duly paid, in the first place by the trustees under the will to cover any loss that might incur to the estate, and subsequently by the receiver of the Court, who had been directed so to do. In February, 1850, the stables and outbuildings were burnt down, and the representatives of the insurer, the first tenant for life, having applied to the insurance office for the amount of the insurances, that amount, being 800*l.*, was paid to him. This sum had been paid into court to the general credit of the cause,—it having been considered that the building of the stables was unnecessary, and that it would be inexpedient to rebuild them. By the decree made on the hearing of the cause, it had been declared that the estates of the testator, including the real estate at St. Leonard's-hill, had become and were vested in the petitioner, the infant L. B. Leonard, as tenant in tail male, and the receiver was directed to pay his balances in respect of such estates to an account entitled "The account of the infant defendant Louis B. Harcourt." The petition was now presented for the object as above stated.

Leach appeared in support of the petition.

Selwyn, for the person in remainder, contrà. He contended that the payment of the premiums of the insurances had been so directed by the Court for the benefit of all parties interested in the suit, and ought to be considered as part of the general estate. If the stables had been rebuilt, it was quite clear that those buildings would have formed part of such general estate, and the burthen of the payment of the premiums would have had to be borne by each tenant for life in succession and consequently the general estate would have received the benefit of the insurance.

Messiter, for certain parties who had interests the same as the remainder-man, supported this line of argument, and cited Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268.

Leach, in reply. The insurance was a mere temporary arrangement. No one was obliged to insure. It was for the benefit of the existing tenant for life—and as the payments of the premiums had been paid out of a fund, the surplus produce of which he was entitled to, he should have the fruits of such insurance. He mentioned Re Skingsley, 15 Jur. 958.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, he thought the direction to keep down the premiums of this insurance must mean, that it was done for the benefit of all parties who, in the result of the decision, should prove to be the parties really interested, and that the outgoings, including these payments, must be borne accordingly. The ultimate result of the decree of the Court being, that the infant petitioner had become the tenant in tail, the fair construction was, that the party for whose benefit, and out of whose fund the payments had been made, being the tenant in tail, was entitled to the benefit and fruits of the insurance, which had been effected.

Order in the terms of the prayer of the petition.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE LUDLOW CHARITIES.

Salary of master—Costs.

A suit had abated, and which it was impossible, under the circumstances, to revive. No costs will be given.

Arrears of salary, which had accrued to a master of a school, who had been dismissed, whether rightly or wrongly was immaterial, will be paid to his representative.

This was a petition by the executors of a gentleman, named Arthur Willis, who had been head master of Ludlow School. Under these circumstances, Mr. Willis being head master of the school, certain complaints were made against him, of keeping the boys waiting outside the door, and of having reproved the usher in presence of the boys, thereby bringing his authority into contempt. The trustees, without hearing Mr. Willis, in his defence, dismissed him from his office. Mr. Willis thereupon filed a bill, charging, that he had been improperly dismissed, and claiming his salary, and asking for an injunction, restraining the trustees from removing him. The motion for an injunction was made before the Master of the Rolls, who granted it, expressing an opinion that the trustees had acted arbitrarily in the course they had taken. The trustees appealed against this decision, but before the Lords Justices had heard the case, Mr. Willis died. The suit consequently abated.

Malins and Renshaw submitted that the executors ought to receive the costs of the suit, which had been, so far as it went, successful. If Mr. Willis had been living, there could be no doubt he would have obtained a decree.

Bacon and Lewin appeared for the trustees, and submitted that they had a right to dismiss the defendant, and their right had been established in a court of law.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he could not give the petitioners the costs of the suit, because it had abated, and the object having perished, it could not be revived. He thought the arrears of salary ought to be paid to the executors, as the Master of the Rolls confirmed Mr. Willis as master of the school. With regard to the costs, had the Master of the Rolls adjudicated on the whole matter, he should have directed the costs to be paid; but the fact was not so, for what he said was, that there was no evidence before him to enable him to judge whether Mr. Willis had been properly dismissed, and that Mr. Willis had been dismissed without a hearing. He should therefore make an order for the payment of the arrears of the salary, and say nothing about costs.

Order accordingly.

FLOYD v. WEAVER.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Truck Act—Artificer and workman, or sub-contractor.

A man employed and working as a collier in a coal mine, dismissable at a month's notice, and paid according to the quantities got, but not bound to work any fixed number of hours, and being at liberty to employ men to assist him, is an artificer or workman within the meaning of the Truck Act.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Monmouthshire held at Tredegar, and the case stated by the judge for the opinion of the Court above was as follows:—This is an action brought to recover the sum of 33*l.* 1s. 5d. for wages. The defendant is a contractor under the Tredegar Iron Company for the getting of coal and iron, and resides at Tredegar in the county of Monmouth. About the 30th of May, 1850, he employed the plaintiff to work in what is called a stall in a coalpit belonging to the company at the following rates, viz.:—9s. 8d. a dozen for iron mine, 1s. 9½d. per ton for large coal, and 1s. 2½d. for mixed coal; and the plaintiff forthwith entered upon his work, and continued working thereunder till the month of August last. The workings of a [illegible] into the work and side-workings, where the chief part of the coal is worked. The main roads are called "headings," the side workings "stalls." During the periods of his employment the plaintiff earned altogether the sum of 58*l.* 13s. 2d. and he received 20*l.* 1s. 9d. in cash; the balance, amounting to 38*l.* 11s. 5d. was received in goods upon the credit of the defendant at a shop kept by Mr. Fothergill, in the profits of which shop the Tredegar Iron Company have an interest in the shape of a per-centage on the business done; and that balance formed the subject of this action. The defendant gave notice of set-off for the whole amount of such goods; and the plaintiff contended that the defendant was not entitled to deduct as a set-off the price of such goods from his wages. Under the agreement the plaintiff was entitled to be paid monthly, and to draw money on account at the end of every week. On the first night after the plaintiff went to work he asked the defendant for 5s. in cash, and the defendant gave him an order for 5s. addressed to Mr. John Davies, the bookkeeper at Mr. Fothergill's shop. The amount of this order he received in goods at the shop. On the following Saturday he received 3s. as "draw," that is a payment of money on account; and on the following Monday morning he asked the defendant to put orders in the shop; and from that time till the termination of his engagement orders were regularly put in every week on his account, proportionate to the amount of his estimated earnings, and he received the amount of such orders from time to time, as they were put in, in goods. The plaintiff had a pass-book from the shopkeeper, in which the value of the goods were entered as so much "cash." The goods were not specified nor any particulars given. The entries say,—December 10, cash, 5s.; December 15, cash, 4s. 3d. and so on. At every monthly pay a statement of the account between the parties was delivered to the plaintiff; this statement, which is called the pay-ticket, credits the plaintiff with the amount of his earnings during the past month, and debits him with the money paid him as draw, with the amount of the orders put into the shop, which are described as cash advanced, and with the usual charges for doctor's fund, &c.; and the balance, if in his favour, was paid him in cash; and if against him, was carried to his debit in the next monthly account; and during the period of his contract it was sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other; but more frequently the balance was against the plaintiff. The plaintiff, in his evidence, stated that he frequently expressed dissatisfaction at being paid in this manner, and that he went to the shop under compulsion. The defendant, on the other hand, deposed that it was in compliance with the plaintiff's express request that the orders were put in the shop; that he was perfectly at liberty to deal where he pleased; and that he had been told if he would do without the shop, he should regularly have 10s. a week as draw; and in corroboration of this statement, it was shewn that several persons in the defendant's employ were paid the amount of their wages in cash, and that the defendant put no orders in the shop on their accounts, but always paid them in cash; and two of the workmen swore that they had heard the plaintiff ask the defendant for orders on the shop. The defendant has no interest in the shop, and derives no benefit either directly or indirectly from the orders which he puts in on account of the men in his employ. The defendant, however, was a contractor under the Tredegar Iron Company, and it was proved that the Tredegar Iron Company received from Mr. Fothergill, the owner of the shop a per-centage upon the business of the shop which included the goods delivered to the plaintiff. Mr. Fothergill was paid for these goods by the Tredegar Iron Company, and not by the defendant, the Tredegar Iron Company at the time deducting their per-centage, and the Tredegar Iron Company only paid the defendant the cash balance which was due to the plaintiff, after deducting the value of the goods. This was proved to be the course of proceeding with regard to a large number of workmen besides the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not, by the terms of the agreement bound to work any stated number of hours, or to do any fixed amount of work, and he was at liberty to employ men to assist him, if he thought proper to do so; and accordingly he did employ, during four months of his service, one man, and during one month two men, who were paid their wages by the plaintiff in a similar manner, that is to say, by orders on the shop put in by the defendant in the plaintiff's name. The plaintiff was a working collier, working personally during the whole time of his service in the same way as other colliers in the district are in the habit of working. He was subject to be dismissed or to leave his service on a month's notice, and his service was determined by month's notice given on the 22nd July last. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that this mode of settling with the plaintiff for his wages was altogether illegal and void under the Truck Act, and that he was entitled to recover the amount of wages which he had received in goods. On behalf of the defendant it was contended, first, that the plaintiff was not an artificer within the meaning of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37, he having taken a piece of work called a "stall" to get coals by the ton, and iron mine by the dozen, and having command of his own time and by reason of his employing men under him who were paid by the plaintiff in the same manner as the defendant paid him; and that, therefore, he was a sub-contractor; 2ndly. That at the time the contract was made between the plaintiff and the defendant it was agreed that the plaintiff should be paid in weekly money draws and monthly settlements; that the orders having been put in for the plaintiff before there was any thing due to him under his contract, this was not a payment of goods in lieu of wages, as the wages must be earned and payable at the time such goods were delivered, to bring it within the operation of the Act; thirdly, that the defendant, having no interest in the shop, and having rendered himself liable for the amount of the goods supplied to the plaintiff, was entitled to set off the amount as money paid at the plaintiff's request, and was not precluded from setting off the amount by sec. 5; and, fourthly, that the plaintiff was now precluded from disturbing the settlement which had taken place from month to month between them, by reason of his acquiescence therein, the plaintiff never having disputed the monthly accounts which had been delivered to him by the defendant before action brought. The case having been tried before the judge of the County Court, without the assistance of a jury, the judge held, first, that the plaintiff was an artificer within the meaning of the Act; and, secondly, that the delivery of the goods so supplied to the plaintiff was payment, and not matter of set-off; and that the payment having been made in goods, and not in the current coin of the realm, was illegal, null, and void; and, even assuming that it was matter of set-off, and not payment, that the defendant could not set off or deduct the value of the goods so supplied in the present action, and gave the plaintiff judgment for the whole amount claimed. The question, then, for the Court of Q. B. is, is the receipt of goods by the plaintiff, under the circumstances above stated, available as a defence to this action, either as payment or matter of set-off?

Watson, for the appellant.—The question turns upon 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 37, which requires that workmen and artificers in certain trades shall not be paid otherwise than in the current coin of the realm; but the plaintiff was not a workman or artificer within that Act. He was a kind of sub-contractor, as in Riley v. Warden, 2 Ex. 59, where the plaintiff was held not to be a workman within the Act. [PATTESON, J.—The contract there was very different from this. It was a contract to execute a particular work, which the plaintiff could not perform by his own labour alone; and he was not dismissible, as here.] The plaintiff sues here for the work of others as well as his own work; and his contract is clearly not one for mere personal service.

Keating, contrà, was not called upon.

PATTESON, J.—This would be like the case of Riley v. Warden, unless, by the contract, the plaintiff was to work personally; and if the judge had that case before him, he must have come to that conclusion in point of fact. The plaintiff was to be paid so much per ton; but that would not alter the case if the contract was one for personal service; and I see nothing inconsistent with that view of the case. If it was a contract for personal service, the statute applies; if it was not, but a contract to work a portion of the mine by the labour of others, then it does not apply. The agreement is not very satisfactorily stated; but the judge must have proceeded upon the ground that it was a contract for personal service.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is impossible to say upon this case that the judge has wrongly decided. The plaintiff was to be at liberty to employ men to assist him; and he was to be paid so much per ton; but that is not inconsistent with a contract for personal service; and the provisions of this wholesome statute cannot be evaded by adopting any particular mode of paying the workman's wages. This case does not appear to fall within the rule stated in Riley v. Warden; because there the plaintiff was really a sub-contractor, who might have performed his contract altogether by the labour of others. The object of the statute was certainly to protect those who contracted for their personal labour; and the plaintiff here appears to have done so. Judgment affirmed with costs.

MEREDITH v. GITTINS.

County Court—Costs—Appeal from judge at chambers.

Where an application for costs under s. 13 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, has been refused by a judge at chambers, a subsequent application to the Court is in the nature of an appeal, and must be made within a reasonable time. The judge having dismissed the summons in June, application to the Court in January

Held, too late. Semble, it ought to be made not later than the following Term.

A rule had been obtained on the 28th January, calling on the defendant to shew cause why the plaintiff should not be allowed his costs, pursuant to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 13, although the sum recovered was only 13s. 3½d.; and the undersheriff had refused to certify. On the 11th June last a summons was taken out before Coleridge, J. at chambers, for the same purpose; but the learned judge, considering that he had a discretion to exercise according to the case of Jones v. Harrison, 20 L. J. Ex. 66 (since overruled by McDougal v. Paterson, 21 L.J. 27, C.P.; and Crake v. Powell, 18 Law T. Rep. 330), refused the application, and endorsed upon the summons the words "no order."

T. Jones now shewed cause, and objected that the present application was too late; citing Orchard v. Moxey, 18 Law T. 255, referred to in Asplin v. Blackman, 21 L.J. 78, Ex.

Pigott, contrà.—This application is made within a reasonable time. In Asplin v. Blackman, two Terms were allowed to go by; and yet the order was made. This is not in truth an appeal from the judge; it is an original application. [WIGHTMAN, J.—"No order" means summons dismissed; and from that decision you appeal.] In Orchard v. Moxey, the damages had been paid and received, so that there was an acquiescence in the order of the judge.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this application is too late. We can only hear it as an appeal from the decision of the judge at chambers, and after that decision the whole of Michaelmas Term was allowed to elapse without any application being made. Now these applications must be made within a reasonable time, and I think that they ought at all events to be made in the course of the ensuing Term. The particular circumstances with regard to the history of the decisions upon this point cannot affect the question; because, upon the same ground, it might be contended that if a decision is overruled after the lapse of seven years all the intervening cases are to be reviewed.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—"No order" sometimes means only that the judge declines to interfere, leaving the party to any other remedy which he may have; but where a jurisdiction is given in the alternative either to the Court or a judge, and application is made to the judge, then "no order" is a refusal of the application, and the matter can only come before the Court by way of appeal, which must be within a reasonable time.

CROMPTON, J.—Under the 13th section of the County Courts Act, parties may apply either to the Court or to a judge, but they cannot go to both. Then, according to Orchard v. Moxey, the plaintiff in this case comes too late by way of appeal; and Asplin v. Blackman was the case of an original application. Rule discharged.

NEVE and OTHERS, Executors, v. JOHN HOLLANDS and WIFE.

Joinder of husband and wife as defendants—Debt of the wife dum sola—Statute of Limitations—Payment.

In an action against husband and wife, on a promissory note of the wife dum sola, and the Statute of Limitations pleaded:

Held, that a payment of interest by the wife without the knowledge of her husband, within the six years, would not take the case out of the statute, inasmuch as that payment could not be evidence of a promise by her, she being under coverture, and incompetent to contract,—and even if evidence of any promise by the husband, only evidence of a separate and independent contract by him, upon which the wife would not be liable.

The declaration alleged a promise to pay by the wife dum sola, and then after marriage a promise by the husband.

Semble, that such a declaration could only be supported by rejecting altogether the allegation that the husband promised to pay.

Assumpsit by the executors of John Neve, on a promissory note for 50*l.* dated 24th June, 1837, and payable on demand. The declaration stated that the defendant, as Mary Fowler, and whilst sole and unmarried, and one John Eyton, made their joint and several promissory note, &c. and that Mary promised John Neve to pay the amount according to the tenor and effect thereof. It then alleged that after the marriage of the said Mary with the defendant James Hollands, the note being still due and unpaid, he, the said James Hollands, promised to pay the same. Third plea,—the Statute of Limitations.

At the trial it appeared that interest had been paid on the note regularly every year down to 1818, which payments were endorsed upon the note. In January, 1843, Mary Fowler married the defendant, and the endorsements on the note mentioned payments of interest, by Mary Hollands, in August, 1844, and at subsequent dates. It was proved, however, and found by the jury, that the payments made by Mary Hollands were made without the knowledge or authority of her husband. Some attempt was made by the defendants to shew that money had been transmitted by Eyton to Mary Hollands for the purpose of those payments. A verdict having been entered for the plaintiffs on the third plea, a rule had since been obtained to enter it for the defendants, or to arrest the judgment.

Crowder and Barrow now shewed cause. This case is taken out of the Statute of Limitations by the payments proved. It is immaterial that the payments by the wife were made without the husband's express authority; because they were made to discharge a liability, which he had incurred by marriage, and the wife for that purpose must be deemed to be the agent of the husband. (Pittam v. Foster, 1 B. & C. 248.) [WIGHTMAN, J.- Suppose he had expressly prohibited her from paying?] The law would not permit him to say that. Payment by one of two joint-makers will operate as against the other to take the case out of the operation of the statute, notwithstanding any such prohibition. (Whitcomb v. Whiting, Dougl.; Goddard v. Ingram, 3 Q. B. Rep. 839; Burleigh v. Stott, 8 B. & C. 36.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—What is the cause of action declared upon?] The note made by the wife. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—But the declaration states first a promise by the wife dum sola; and, secondly, a promise by the husband during the coverture.] The second promise by the husband may be rejected; but the declaration was amended by inserting it in consequence of the case of Morris v. Norfolk, 1 Taunt. 212. In truth the promise of the husband after the marriage is not to be treated as a separate promise by him alone; it is a continuation of the original promise of the wife made dum sola; and only gives expression to the legal effect of the marriage. Where husband and wife are sued jointly for a debt incurred by the wife dum sola, there never can be strictly a joint promise, that is a promise made by both at one and the same time. (Mitchinson v. Hewson, 7 T.R. 348). Further, the payments by the Eytons would take the case out of the statute as against these defendants.

Bramwell, contrà.—There is no mode of declaring, which would have enabled the plaintiffs to recover against both defendants. With reference to the Statute of Limitations, payment operates by shewing a new contract within the six years. (Tanner v. Smart, 6 B. & C. 603.) Then in this case, what is the promise made within six years? Not that of the wife, because the marriage took place before the commencement of the six years; not that of the husband, because any agency is disproved. As to the motion in arrest of judgment, if the amendment is material, and the plaintiffs rely upon a separate promise by the husband after the marriage, the wife ought not to have been joined. Morris v. Norfolk is in favour of the defendants.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the verdict on the third plea ought to be entered for the defendants. I think there is no evidence that the cause of action mentioned in the declaration accrued within six years. Now, what is the cause of action alleged? First, without the amendment, it is a promise of the wife dum sola; and what is the evidence of such a promise? None. The evidence is payment by her after coverture, when she was no longer competent to promise. As to the payments made on behalf of Eyton, they were not relied upon at the trial, and I think could not be relied upon; because there was no evidence that they were payments by Eyton. They were payments by the wife during coverture, and could not shew a promise by her dum sola. Then, looking at the amendment, that states a separate promise by the husband; and supposing the declaration in that form to be good, what is the evidence of a separate promise by him? The payments were made without his knowledge or authority. For my own part, if there had been a verdict for the plaintiffs, I should have had no hesitation in saying that the judgment must be arrested; because a joint action against husband and wife cannot be maintained upon the separate promise of the husband.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. If issue had been taken simply on the alleged promise by the wife dum sola, the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed upon that issue; but the Statute of Limitations is pleaded, and the plaintiff must shew that the cause of action accrued within six years. Now, taking the declaration as originally framed, the cause of action would appear to be the promise of the wife dum sola; and the evidence of payment after the marriage would be wholly beside the question. Then the issue being whether the wife dum sola promised within six years, the evidence is that she was married more than six years before action brought. But to cure this defect an amendment was made and a promise by the husband alone alleged. Independently, however, of the question in arrest of judgment the jury have found that the payments were made without the privity of the husband; and I think that that finding entitles the defendants to the verdict on the plea of the Statute of Limitations. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the form of the declaration; but, as it appears to me, the only way in which it could be supported would be to reject the allegation of a separate promise by the husband.

ERLE, J.—The plaintiff is bound to make out that the cause of action accrued within six years. Now the contract of the wife by the promissory note was made more than six years ago; and it is by alleging that within six years she promised to pay that the plaintiff seeks to get rid of the effect of the statute; and the evidence offered of that promise is payment by her on account of the note within that time. Payment by the maker of a note is equivalent to an express promise to pay; but supposing that the female defendant had expressly promised to pay, it was clearly during the coverture; when she was incapable of making any contract. The promise by the husband alone seems to me an entire nullity, and not to be that declared on. A payment by the husband during coverture would create a new liability; it would be evidence of a separate and original promise by him on the fresh consideration of forbearance to him, and would be different from the mere taking up of the wife's liability by marriage. As to the payments by Eyton, they were at the trial rather relied upon by the other side; but they do not appear to me to carry the case further, because, if the wife could not directly promise, neither could she impliedly promise by the acts of her co-contractor.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is an action against husband and wife jointly; and the Statute of Limitations being pleaded, the plaintiff is bound to make out a joint liability within the six years. Now, that liability could not arise from the promise of the wife dum sola, because that promise was made before the commencement of the six years; nor could it arise from the secret payments by the wife after marriage. I think that they would not bind the husband; and, at all events, they would not be evidence of a joint liability, because the wife was then incompetent to contract. This is explained by Lord Tenterden in Pittam v. Foster; and it seems to me quite immaterial whether the promise is supposed to have been made through the co-contractor or not. As to the form of the declaration, I think it is a good declaration against husband and wife on the separate promise of the wife dum sola, and that the subsequent allegation of a promise by the husband is a mere nullity. It is an immaterial allegation which could not be traversed, because without it there still remains a good cause of action against both on the separate promise of the wife.

Rule absolute.

LANE v. HILL.

Account stated—Evidence.

A mere acknowledgment that a debt is due, unless some amount is mentioned, is not evidence of an account stated, so as to entitle the plaintiff even to nominal damages (Erle, J. dissentiente).

ASSUMPSIT on a cheque, with a count upon an account stated. At the trial it appeared that the cheque was post-dated, and consequently could not be received in evidence. The plaintiff then relied upon the 2nd count, and gave in evidence the following letter from the defendant to the plaintiff:—"Oblige me by holding my cheque till Monday, and in the interim I will send you the amount in cash." A verdict was entered for the plaintiff for nominal damages; and subsequently a rule obtained to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant.

Knowles now shewed cause.—The letter contains a distinct admission that something was due, and that something cannot be less than nominal damages. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Can there be a statement of account without any item mentioned?] It is evidence of an antecedent statement of account. (Teal v. Auty, 2 Brod. & B. 99.) The difficulty pointed out in Green v. Davies, 4 B. & C. 235, does not exist here.

E. James and Paterson, contrà.—How can there be an account stated without the mention of a precise sum? Ex vi termini, a precise sum must be shewn; and it was so held in Kirton v. Wood, 1 Moo. & Rob. 253. They also referred to Trueman v. Hurst, 1 T. R. 42; and Highmore v. Primrose, 5 M. & S.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute; and that a general admission of liability to a pecuniary demand, without stating any sum, does not amount to an account stated. According to general comprehension certainly an account stated requires a real statement of accounts; and how can there be a statement of account without a single item. Here the words are, "Oblige me by holding my cheque till Monday, and I will send you the amount in cash." What amount? It may be 1s. or it may be 1,000*l*. It is put as evidence of an account having been stated; but I do not see how the plaintiff can be entitled to treat it as evidence that an account has been stated when no sum is mentioned; and I think that great inconvenience would result from allowing a verdict to be taken for nominal damages in such a case. I do not know what would be the effect of a judgment for nominal damages in this action, supposing another action brought upon a cheque properly stamped and admissible in evidence. Would this judgment be an answer to that action? It is said that it would be an answer only pro tanto; but however that may be, I think that this letter is not evidence of an account stated; and that the rule ought to be made absolute.

WIGHTMAN, J—I am of the same opinion; and besides the reason of the thing, Kirton v. Wood seems an authority in point.

ERLE, J.—I quite agree in the general doctrine; the only question is as to the application of it to the present case. It appears to me that the defendant did state an account with the plaintiff and ascertain the amount due. That was the amount mentioned in the cheque. Now, the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, and what should be the amount of damages, are two perfectly distinct questions; and as to the first, the plaintiff having lost the cheque, shews that the defendant did state an account and ascertain the amount due to the plaintiff. That is a good cause of action; but he is unable to fix the extent of the liability, and so can only recover nominal damages. In case of another action being brought, the defendant would have no difficulty in shewing by averment that the subject matter of both actions was the same.

CROMPTON, J.—My impression was, that a plaintiff could not recover on an account stated without proving a precise sum; and so TINDAL, C.J. says in Kirton v. Wood.

BEAR and OTHERS v. BROMLEY.

Mutual loan societies—7 & 8 Vict. c. 110—Registration.

An unenrolled mutual society, consisting of more than twenty-five members, and having a fund raised by subscriptions for the purpose of advancing, to members only, sums at five per cent. interest, the sum so advanced being put up to competition among the members, and the advances being made to the highest bidders, is not a partnership requiring to be registered under the Joint-Stock Companies' Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

Debt by the payees against the maker of a promissory note for 80*l*. with interest at five per cent. payable on demand.

Fourth Plea.—That the consideration for the note was money lent by a joint-stock company, that is to say, a partnership, which before and at the time of the lending consisted of more than twenty-five members, the said number of more than twenty-five not being caused by an admission subsequent on devolution or other act of law; which said joint-stock company had, &c. been established in, &c. "for a purpose of profit," to wit, for the purpose of lending money at interest and making profit thereby, and was not a banking company, school, &c. (negativing the other exceptions in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110). And the defendant further says, that in lending the said money to the defendant, the said company acted otherwise than provisionally, &c; and that the said company had not at the time of lending the said money obtained a certificate of complete registration, but the said company, illegally, and contrary to the form of the statute in such case, lent to the defendant, to wit, 80*l*. out of the funds of the said company, at interest and with a view to the profit of the said company, and in the course of carrying on the business of the said company. And the defendant further says, that he made the said note and delivered the same to the plaintiffs, they then being the trustees of the said company. Verification.

Replication.—De injuria.

At the trial before the Lord Chief Justice in London, it appeared that the plaintiffs were the trustees, and the defendant a member, of the Mutual Fund, No. 2, established at Colchester, for raising by subscriptions a sum of money, and lending the same to some of the members at interest. The society consisted of upwards of 100 members, who held shares of 40*l*. each, and when loans were about to be made by the society, they were put up at a kind of auction, and granted to the highest bidder. The premiums and the loans were payable by instalments, and went into the general funds of the society, and the ,......., .. these payments was enforced by fines. .t is unnecessary to report the rules, as they were treated as substantially the same as those reported in Silver v. Barnes, which was a similar society at Woodbridge, in Essex. The defendant objected, that the society was illegal, not being registered under the Joint Stock Companies' Registration Act, and not being within any of the exceptions in sec. 2 of that Act. Under the direction of the learned judge, the verdict was taken for the plaintiffs on all the issues, with leave to the defendant to move to enter it for him on the fourth issue.

Horn moved to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiffs, and enter it for the defendant on the fourth issue. The question is, whether this society is within the Joint Stock Companies' Registration Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2. The second section enacts that the Act shall apply to every joint-stock company "for any commercial purpose or for any purpose of profit;" and every partnership consisting of more than twenty-five members is a joint-stock company within the meaning of the Act. That such a society as this is to be treated as an ordinary partnership, is established by Silver v. Barnes, 6 Bing. N.C. 180; and Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180. The rules of this society are the same as those in Silver v. Barnes. At the termination of the society, the non-borrowing members receive a profit upon the sums they have contributed, which is derived from the payments made by the borrowing members in respect of premium and interest for advances, and also from the fines. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Does the society as such make any profit? ERLE, J.—As against the rest of the world, the society makes no profit. At the close of the society, Silver v. Barnes decides that the society makes no usurious profit, and so far is against you. WIGHTMAN, J.—The leading words of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, are "for any commercial purpose, or for any purpose of profit;" and Reg. v. Whitmarsh, 19 L.J. 469, Q.B. is in point.] It is submitted that the profits to the non-borrowing members bring this case within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I agree with the learned counsel, that this point is well worthy of being considered, but it has been fully considered and determined in Reg. v. Whitmarsh. The principle there laid down for determining whether a society is established for the purpose of profit, is to ascertain whether the society, as such, is established for the purpose of profit, and not whether an individual member may be a loser or gainer by its operations. It is quite clear, therefore, that this society, as a society, makes no profit. Some members may lose, some may gain; but the society profits nothing.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the allegation in the fourth plea, that this was a society for the purpose of profit, within the meaning of the Act, was not proved. This case is precisely within Reg. v. Whitmarsh.

ERLE, J.—The principle of Reg. v. Whitmarsh is, that where several persons or shareholders in a society carry on business substantially for the benefit of the individual members, among themselves, but not for the benefit of the society as such, such a society is not a partnership within the meaning of the Registration Act.

CROMPTON, J. concurred. Rule refused.

Saturday, April 17.

SHEPHERD v. HORSMAN.

Turnpike—3 Geo. 4, c. 126—Clerk to trustees—Agreement for letting tolls—8 & 9 Vict. c. 106.

An agreement for letting tolls recited the putting of them up to auction by the trustees, and the taking of them by the renter, and in the operative part stated that S. (the clerk to the trustees) agreed to let, &c.; and the agreement was signed by the clerk, and not the trustees.

Held, that this was a sufficient compliance with the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 55, 57, being an agreement by the clerk, and signed by him on behalf of the trustees.

Held, also, that the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 57, authorising an agreement to be made by writing for letting tolls, without being by deed or under seal, was not affected by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, which makes void all leases required by law to be in writing, unless the same be by deed.

This was an action for rent of tolls of a turnpike-road in the East Riding of Yorkshire, and was tried at the last York Assizes before Cresswell, J. and a verdict found for the plaintiff.

The plaintiff was the clerk to the trustees of the road, and the defendant was the surety of Norris, the lessee. The agreement for letting the tolls was signed by the plaintiff as clerk to the trustees, and recited that the trustees had put the tolls up to auction, and that Norris was the highest bidder, and in the operative part the agreement stated that Shepherd agreed to let the tolls for two years. It was objected that this was not a valid agreement, there being no letting by the trustees, but by their clerk. The learned judge at the trial overruled the objection.

W. H. Watson moved to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit. 1st. This agreement was not proper letting under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 55, 57 By sec. 55 the trustees are to let the tolls in the manner pointed out: "the last bidder shall be the renter, and shall forthwith enter into a proper agreement for the taking thereof, &c.; and under such conditions as the said trustees or commissioners shall think fit." And then sec. 57 provides that all contracts and agreements to be made or entered into for the letting the tolls, signed by the trustees or commissioners letting such tolls, or any two or more of them, or by their clerk or treasurer, and the lessee and his sureties, shall be valid, notwithstanding the same may not be by deed or under seal. The agreement in this case does not comply with these provisions, for it is not made with the trustees, but with their clerk. The statute ought to have been strictly followed (Bell v. Nixon, 9 Bing. 393); and the demise of the tolls should have been by the trustees, and not by their clerk. Pitman v Woodbury, 3 Ex. 4, was also cited upon this point. 2nd. The agreement is void, because, whether it is to be made by the trustees or their clerk, the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 57, requires it to be in writing, and the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, enacts that a lease required by law to be in writing shall be void unless made by deed. The words of this latter provision are general, and not confined to leases required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that there should be no rule granted. This being a lease of tolls, could, by the common law, only have been made by deed; but the statutory mode of letting them has been here pursued. The trustees are to let the tolls, and the agreement is to be signed by the trustees or their clerk. The agreement in this case recites the whole transaction,—the putting up of the tolls by the trustees, the taking by Norris, and the joinder of the defendant as surety, and it is signed by the clerk. That is a sufficient letting of the tolls by the trustees within the Act. The second objection cannot be maintained. It was not the intention of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, to repeal the provision of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 57. The general words referred to have not that effect; but their proper object is only to affect such leases as are required by the Statute of Frauds to be writing; and that statute has nothing to do with the letting of tolls under the 3 Geo. 4 c. 126.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The statutory mode of letting these tolls has been sufficiently pursued here. Sec. 57 enacts that the agreement is to be signed by the trustees or their clerk, and nowhere in terms says that the agreement to let is to be made expressly by the trustees. This was an agreement for letting the tolls by the clerk to the trustees on behalf of the trustees, and signed by the clerk. With regard to the second point, I agree with my Lord Chief Justice.

ERLE and CROMPTON, JJ. delivered similar judgments. Rule refused.

HINE v. DEWDNEY.

Stamp—Promissory note—Agreement.

"12th Feb. 1849.—Borrowed of J. H. 100l. for one or two months," signed by the defendant:

Held, that this instrument was neither a promissory note or an agreement, but a mere acknowledgment, and therefore required no stamp.

Assumpsit for money lent for interest, and on an account stated. At the trial, before Erle, J. at Exeter, the plaintiff gave in evidence the following memorandum, signed by the defendant:—"12th Feb. 1849.—Borrowed of John Hine 100*l.* for one or two months;" and obtained a verdict.

Phinn now moved to enter a nonsuit, on the ground that that document ought to have been signed as a promissory note or an agreement. If a promise to pay a definite sum at a definite time can be collected from the instrument, it is a good promissory note. (White v. North, 3 Exch. Rep. 689; Shrivel v. Payne, 8 Dowl. 441.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Here the time is uncertain] Then it is an agreement not to sue for at least one month.

CROMPTON, J.—There is nothing in this instrument to prevent him suing the very next day.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—There is no binding contract. It is a mere acknowledgment.

Rule refused.

MICKLETHWAITE v. MERRILL.

Trover—Deposit of goods—Pawn—Power of sale.

Trover for paintings, tried before Alderson, B. at York. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Unthank moved, pursuant to leave, to enter the verdict for the defendant, on the ground that he had a right to sell the pictures as a pawn to him. The plaintiff had deposited the pictures with the defendant upon a memorandum to the following effect:—"I have this day given into the care of J. M. (the defendant) twenty-six paintings, for him to hold and keep for me, and as a security for any sums which I may owe to his firm for goods supplied by them." Goods were supplied by the firm upon credit; but not being paid for, the defendant, when the period of credit had expired, sold the pictures. The rule of law is, that if the pawnor makes default at the stipulated time, the pawnee may sell the thing pawned. (Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's L.C. 100, in notis.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Do you mean that every deposit of goods as security is accompanied by a power of sale?] Yes; a power of sale is implied in every pawn; and in that respect is different from a lien.

ERLE, J.—A deposit with power to hold, and a deposit with power to sell, are surely quite different things. Very recently there was a discussion whether there was a mercantile usage in London giving such a power of sale; but it was by no means taken as clear that to every deposit of goods by way of security a power of sale is necessarily incident.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—It is quite clear that it is not. In the passage from Smith's Leading Cases the word pawn must be used to express a deposit with power of sale. Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 15.

Crompton, J. took his seat upon the bench this morning, and the usual oaths were administered to him.

PARTRIDGE v. ————.—Keating moved to set aside an order of the Lord Chief Baron for inspection of documents. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Fitzherbert moved for a rule for a mandamus to complete a certain deviation on the Frome and Weymouth line. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK AND LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Bramwell moved for a rule to shew cause why the writ of mandamus herein should not be quashed, on the ground that it was not warranted by the rule.

Rule nisi, unless the prosecutor would consent to amend the writ.

MAITLAND v. CLIFTON.—Hawkins moved for leave to add pleas. The declaration was by indorsee against acceptor of bill for 500*l.*; to which the defendant had pleaded several pleas traversing the material allegations in the declaration. The present application was for leave to plead in substance that the bill had been drawn in France, and was invalid by the law of France for not stating any consideration on the face of it, and that the plaintiff took with notice. WIGHTMAN, J.—Why were not those pleas pleaded in the first instance? Rule refused.

HAYES v. WILLIAMS.—Knowles shewed cause against a rule for a new trial obtained upon affidavits. T. Jones, contrà. Rule absolute.

DOE dem. THOMAS v. THOMAS. Struck out.

HARRISON v. DUNN.—Prentice shewed cause against a rule for a new trial obtained on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Malcolm, contrà.

Rule absolute; the costs to abide the event.

Friday, April 16.

DOE dem. DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE v. MEDHURST.—Tried before Jervis, C.J. at the Derbyshire Assizes: verdict for the defendants. Bramwell (Hayes with him) moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Rule refused.

REG. v. IRONSIDES.—Rule nisi for a criminal information. The defendant, in person, showed cause, and Macaulay in support of the rule. Rule absolute.

ARDELL v. THELLUSSON and ANOTHER, executors.—Tried in Middlesex: verdict for the plaintiff, 34*l.* Humfrey moved, pursuant to leave, to enter the verdict for the defendants. Rule nisi.

POPPY v. POPPY.—Tried at Norwich: verdict for the plaintiff by consent, with leave to defendant to move to enter the verdict for him. O'Malley now moved accordingly, and cited Lunn v. Thornton, 1 C B 379, Tupfield v. Tillman, 6 M. & G. 245; Gale v. Burnell, 7 Q. B. 850; Jones v. Bale, 7 B. & C. 491; and Petch v. Tutin, 15 M. & W. 110. Cur. adv. vult.

REYNOLDS v. TUPPER.—Tried in Middlesex: verdict for the plaintiff, 118*l.* 6s. H. Hill moved for a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against evidence and misdirection. Rule nisi.

DOE dem HUGHES v. DAVIES.—Tried in Cardiganshire, before Martin, B. Grove moved for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

Cur. adv. vult.

DOE dem. SHREWSBURY v. ROE.—Pearson moved for judgment against the casual ejector. Rule nisi.

CASTELLI v. RUE.—Willes moved for a commission to examine witnesses, particularly two of the plaintiff's, at Constantinople and Leghorn. Rule nisi.

REG. v. CALDWELL.—Huddleston applied to discharge the bail recognisances in this case. J. Gray appeared on behalf of the prosecutor, and mentioned that the defendant had not appeared, and so the condition had not been complied with; but the prosecutor would not offer any opposition to the motion, if the Court could entertain it.

Rule refused.

TALLIS v. TALLIS.—Cole moved to set aside a demurrer to a plea as frivolous, or to strike out the allegation in the declaration of which the plea was a traverse. (Cutts v. Surridge, 9 Q B. 1015) Rule nisi.

EDGE v. TASSELL.—W. S. Cross moved to issue a ca. sa. upon a judgment obtained in the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, the defendant having removed out of the jurisdiction of that court. Granted.

AVERY v. ODAMS and ANOTHER.—Rule absolute for a new trial, by consent.—Unthank, for the plaintiff, and Bramwell, for the defendants. Costs of former trial and this rule to be costs in the cause.

BEAL v. NYE.—Rule nisi for a new trial. Huddleston appeared in support of the rule, but was not called upon.

Rule absolute.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

ROGERS v. HARRIS.—Rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. Pearson shewed cause, and E. James supported the rule. Rule discharged.

Saturday, April 17.

DOE dem. KING v. GRAFTON.—Warren moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

CONNELLY v. FISHER.—Tried in Middlesex, before Erle, J.: verdict for the plaintiff, 750*l.* Barstow moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and of the verdict being against the evidence. Rule refused.

MEACH v. DAW.—Tried in Dorsetshire: verdict for the plaintiff, 360*l.* Crowder moved for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. Rule nisi.

HOWES v. BARBER.—Unthank moved to review the taxation herein. The question mooted was as to the allowance to parties to the action when examined as witnesses. Rule nisi.

GILL v. DENDY.—Lush moved to set aside the nonsuit herein. The case was entered last in the list for Essex, but, owing to the small number of entries, was disposed of before the arrival of the plaintiff's solicitor and witnesses at the assize town. Rule nisi.

ROBINSON v. JONES.—Tried at Chester, before Williams, J.: verdict for the plaintiff, 18*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* E. Beavan moved to reduce the verdict to 40*s.* Rule nisi.

THE ROCHDALE CANAL COMPANY v. RADCLIFFE.—Rule nisi to enter the verdict for the defendant on the fourth plea to the second count. Knowles, Tomlinson, and Cowling, shewed cause, and W. H. Watson, Willes, and Spinks, supported the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

DOE v. WEIR.—Tried at Gloucester: verdict for defendant. Whateley moved for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. Rule refused.

WALKER and OTHERS v. THE BRITISH GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION.—Knowles moved to enter judgment for the plaintiffs on the fourth plea, non obstante veredicto. Cur. adv. vult.

Ex parte KING.—Willes moved for a certiorari to bring up an inquisition, before the sheriff of Cheshire, for the assessment of damages under the Lands Clauses' Consolidation Act. Rule nisi.

Monday, April 19.

AMOTT v. HOLDER.—Knowles moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and enter it for the defendant on both issues. Rule nisi.

PACK v. SKINNER.—This was an action for disturbance of a right of way, tried at the last Exeter Assizes. Kinglake, S. now moved to set aside the verdict found for the plaintiff, and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection as to the proper effect of sec. 7 of the Limitation Act, with reference to a twenty years' user of the right of way in question; and also as to the evidence of immemorial user. (Bright v. Walker, 1 Cr. M. & R. 217.) [He also moved in arrest of judgment; but upon that point the rule was refused.] Rule nisi.

TIMMINS and WIFE v. GIBBINS, P.O.—This was an action for money had and received, tried at Stafford before Wightman, J. when a verdict was found for the defendant. (See Law T. April 10, p. 34.) Keating now moved, by leave of the judge, to enter the verdict for the plaintiffs for 65*l.* The female plaintiff had paid that amount into the defendant's bank at Dudley, on a deposit account, in notes of the Stourbridge Bank, which stopped payment the next day. The notes being transferred without endorsement, the transaction amounted to a sale of the notes, and the receiver must bear the loss. (Byles on Bills, p. 122.) Rule nisi.

MORISS v. OLIVER.—This was an action for wages as master of a ship; and the question was whether the defendant was liable as owner. At the trial, before Lord Campbell, C.J. at Guildhall, a copy of the registered transfer of the ship to the defendant was received in evidence, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 130*l.* Slade now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the transfer was improperly received in evidence, and that the verdict was against the evidence. He cited Tinkler v. Walpole, 14 East, 226; and Smith v. Fuge, 3 Campb. 456. The COURT agreed that the transfer would not be evidence of the ownership by itself, but it was a step in the proof; and, as there was evidence on both sides, they would not interfere with the verdict of the jury. Rule refused.

JONES v. EVANS.—Trespass q. c. f. Plea—A right of way on foot and with carriages and horses. Upon the trial before Williams, J. at Ruthin, a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Lush now moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection and misreception of evidence. The plaintiff admitted the existence of a footway; and the question was, whether the way had been used for carriages and horses. The learned judge refused evidence of reputation as to the mode of user. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, April 20.

WALKER v. THE GUARANTEE SOCIETY.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. gave judgment. Rule refused.

DOE dem. TREVANION v. LAMBE.—Crowder moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

DOE v. CLARKE. Rule nisi.

NORTHEY v. JOHNSON.—This was an action for goods sold, brought against the defendant as shareholder of a mine, for the use of which the goods had been supplied. The question was, whether the defendant was a shareholder; and at the trial before Erle, J. in Cornwall, the verdict passed for the defendant. Crowder now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF DENTON.—Indictment for non-repair of a highway, tried before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool: verdict for the Crown. Knowles, moved to enter the verdict for the defendants, and in arrest of judgment. (R. v. Mawgan, 8 Add. & Ell. 496.) Rule nisi.

CROSSTHWAITE (Administrator) v. GARDNER.—Assumpsit for work and labour, tried before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Knowles moved to enter the verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff sued as administrator upon a building contract entered into by the intestate, but part of the work had been done by the administrator since the death of his intestate. He ought therefore to have declared specially. Rule nisi.

BARROW v. ROBINSON.—This was an action for work and labour [illegible] excavating a tank, tried before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Knowles now moved to enter a nonsuit, on the ground that the written instrument which contained the terms of the agreement ought to have been stamped. The learned judge thought it was a mere proposal; but although signed by the plaintiffs only, it was an agreement. It was not signed till after the plaintiff's offer had been accepted. Rule nisi.

REG. v. WHITEHOUSE and OTHERS.—Indictment for conspiracy to defraud; tried before Wightman, J. at Stafford, when a verdict passed for the Crown. Allen, Serjt. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of surprise, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule nisi.

VAUGHAN v. STEVENS.—Case for injury to the plaintiff's reversion by depriving his house of the support to which it was entitled; tried before Erle, J. in Devonshire, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff; damages, 26*l.* 4*s.*: 15*l.* having been paid into court. Kinglake, Serjt. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection; the learned judge having allowed the jury to take into their calculation damage, not alleged in the declaration. Rule nisi.

DARE v. REYNOLDS.—Allen, Serjt. moved for a new trial in this case, which was tried before Wightman, J. at Gloucester, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Rule refused.

STUART v. THE ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN GOLD MINING COMPANY.—This was an action for refusing the plaintiff permission to sign the deed of settlement. Upon the trial, before Lord Campbell, C.J. in London, a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Bramwell now moved to enter the verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff's shares had been legally forfeited by the company, under a clause in the deed of settlement, which enabled them to do so, if the shareholder neglected to execute the deed within three months from the date of it. He contended that under that clause no notice to the shareholder that the deed was ready for execution was necessary (Banwen Iron Company v. Barnett, 8 C. B. 406); that the clause was legal; and that at all events the plaintiff, who complained of not being allowed to sign the deed, could not object to it. Secondly, he contended that the company were not responsible for the wrongful refusal of the secretary. They could only be responsible for an act done under the common seal of the company, or by a resolution of the directors, or by the appointment of a general agent. (Roe v. The Birkenhead Railway Company, 21, L. J. Ex. 9.) [ERLE, J.—If a wrong is done under the sanction of the company, or those who are in the direction of the company, are not the company liable? Yarborough v. The Bank of England, 16 East, 6, and other cases, are against you. Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We all think that there is nothing in that point.] He also moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the declaration alleged a refusal to permit the plaintiff to sign the deed of settlement; whereas, it ought to have alleged a refusal of permission to sign the deed of settlement, or a deed referring thereto, according to the Act of Parliament. [ERLE, J.—Is it not the same thing? The deed referring to the deed of settlement means only a deed containing sufficient words of reference to the deed of settlement, and prepared for the purpose of avoiding the inconvenience of carrying the deed of settlement about the country for execution. WIGHTMAN, J.—If the company offered for execution by the plaintiff a deed referring to the deed of settlement, and that is an excuse, they might plead it. Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—We all think the declaration good.]

On the first point, rule nisi.

LOWE v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Assumpsit for use and occupation; tried before Jervis, C.J. at Derby. Verdict for the plaintiff; damages, 175*l.* Macaulay moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that assumpsit for use and occupation would not lie against a corporation, and that no contract under the corporate seal or by two directors was proved. (Mayor of Stafford v. Till, 4 Bing. 75; Doe v. Taniere, 12 Q. B. 1000.) He mentioned, as a further ground of his motion, that the plaintiff ought to have proceeded for compensation under the railway Acts. He also moved for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule nisi.

DICKSON v. KAY.—E. James moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and on affidavits. Cur. adv. vult.

WILLIAMS (executor) v. LOOSE.—Assumpsit for the hire of a coach; tried before Erle, J. at Dorchester; when a verdict was found for the defendant. The only question was as to the liability of the defendant, who was one of several proprietors who horsed the coach in question, and divided the profits. The order was given by another proprietor; and the learned judge told the jury that partners might agree together that one of them should make the contracts with third persons on his own account and that if he dealt with any one who was aware of that agreement, he alone would be liable. Crowder now moved for a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence raised no such [illegible], and that the learned judge had misled the jury by leaving that point to them. The COURT thought that there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred such an arrangement. Rule refused.

LEWIS v. NICHOLSON and ANOTHER.—This was an action for money had and received, tried before Lord Campbell, C.J. at Guildhall, when the plaintiff was nonsuited. The question was, whether the defendants were personally liable upon an undertaking which they had given as solicitors to the assignees of a bankrupt, that the proceeds of a sale should be paid to the plaintiff. Shee, Serjt. now moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for 22*8l.* upon the ground,—1st, That the defendants did not contract as agents: 2ndly, that if they did, they had exceeded their authority, and were therefore liable as principals. He cited Downman v. Williams, 7 Q. B. 103; Thomson v. Davenport, 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. 223, and notes thereto; Harper v. Williams, 4 Q. B. 232; Smout v. Ilberry, 10 M. & W. 1; Ex parte Young, 2 Dea. Rep. 240. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HOWELL v. REES.—Ejectment, tried at the last Glamorganshire assizes by Martin, B. who directed a nonsuit. H. Jones, Serjt. now moved for a new trial. The lessor of the plaintiff claimed as devisee; and to shew seisin in the testator he relied upon an old lease executed by the testator, but was unable to give any evidence of enjoyment under that lease. Doe dem. Lord Egremont v. Pulman, 3 Q. B. 622, is an authority to shew that the lease was some evidence of seisin. By the COURT.—In that case the lease was admissible for a very different purpose. The lease executed by the testator himself was no act of ownership, until it was brought into life by some enjoyment under it. Rule refused.

Tuesday, April 20.

TOWERS v. WATERS.—Atherton moved for a rule to shew cause why the plaintiff should not pay the defendant his costs, notwithstanding the verdict for the plaintiff, on the ground that the plaintiff had, without reasonable cause, made an affidavit of debt in bankruptcy for a larger amount than that recovered by the verdict. The Court thought the affidavit quite insufficient to shew an absence of reasonable cause. Rule refused.

FERRELL v. GROVE.—This was an action on an attorney's bill, tried in Middlesex before Lord Campbell, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Collier moved to enter the verdict for the defendant upon the plea of "no signed bill delivered;" contending that it did not clearly appear, as to some of the items, whether they were for Common Law or for Chancery business. This was a case between London agent and country attorney, but the same rule applies. (Smith v. Dimes, 19 L. J. 60, Exch.; Frimay v. Marks, 16 M. & W. 843; Keane v. Ward, 19 L. J. 46, Q. B. By the COURT.—The rule is, that the bill must give reasonable information, and we think this bill does. Rule refused.

Re MARTER.—Kingdon moved to review the taxation of costs herein, on the ground that 22*l.* 4*s.* had been incurred by the client of Mr. Martyr, who was the provisional assignee of an insolvent, without obtaining an order of the Insolvent Court, according to ss. 42 and 156 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The bill had been referred to taxation on the application of [the creditors, and the Master had allowed the above sum of 22*l.* The creditors' assignee had been required to pay a sum into Court to meet the costs of various proceedings which had been taken; and the object of the present application was to prevent the payment of the said sum of 22*l.* out of that fund. By the COURT.—The application should be made to the Insolvent Court, which has control over the fund. As between the attorney and his client, the item is properly allowed. Rule refused.

WHITLOCK v. BRITTON.—Burnie moved for a new trial, or to reduce the damages to the sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* Rule nisi.

CRAKE v. FLAVELL.—Udall moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection by the Secondary of London, in telling the jury what amount of damages would carry costs. Rule nisi.

SHIELS v. WADGE.—Huddleston moved for a new trial in his case, which had been taken as undefended, upon affidavits explaining the defendant's absence, and swearing to merits. Rule refused.

DOE dem. WOOD v. KEIR.—Ejectment, tried before Wightman, J. at Gloucester. Pigott moved to enter verdict for the defendant as to part of the lands. Rule refused.

ROE v. MANSER.—Hawkins moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule refused.

CHATFIELD v. COX.—This was an action on a bill of exchange, to which the defendant had pleaded a special agreement accepted in satisfaction; and at the trial had a verdict upon that plea. Hawkins now moved to enter it for the plaintiff, on the ground that the instrument given in evidence in proof of the plea wanted a stamp. The question was, whether it related to the sale of goods. Rule refused.

REG. v. PRICE and OTHERS.—Mandamus to compel the defendants to do certain acts pursuant to an agreement, whereby several Welch counties combined for the erection and maintenance of a lunatic asylum. Tried before Williams, J. at Chester; verdict for the Crown. Beavan moved to enter it for the defendants on the first issue, reversing the agreement. The question was, whether the matter of the agreement was above the value of 20*l.* so as to require a stamp. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ROWLANDS v. PEARCE.—Ejectment by mortgagee. Tried before Williams, J. at Beaumaris. Lloyd moved for a rule to enter the verdict for the defendants. The question was whether certain payments, on account of the mortgage money, would take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. (Burn v. Bolton, 2 C. B. 476.) Cur. adv. vult.

Wednesday, April 21.

ROCHDALE CANAL COMPANY v. RADCLIFFE.—The Court gave judgment for the defendant to enter the verdict for him on the issue on 4th plea, and granted a rule nisi to the plaintiffs to enter up judgment thereon non obstante veredicto.

DOCK COMPANY OF KINGSTON-UPON-HULL, Appellants; THE GUARDIANS, &c. OF THE POOR IN THE TOWN OF KINGSTON-UPON-HULL, Respondents.—To be reported. Judgment for respondents.

REG. v. AVERY.—Tried before Erle, J. at the Devonshire Assizes: verdict for the defendant. Slade moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

MALLALIEU v. THE ANGLO CALIFORNIAN GOLD MINING COMPANY.—Tried at Maidstone before Parke, B.: verdict for the defendant on the third plea. E. James moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

PARIS v. SMART.—Pearson moved to deprive the plaintiff of the costs of the action, and to make him pay the defendant's costs. (Adlington v. Appleton, 2 Camp. 410.) Refused.

MARDELL v. THELLUSSON.—Shee, Serjt. made a cross motion in this case for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. THE LEEDS AND BRADFORD RAILWAY COMPANY.—To be reported. Order of justices quashed.

REG. v. WILSON and OTHERS.—To be reported. Judgment for the defendants.

BLACKALL v. BREMER.—Tried before Parke, B. at the Surrey Assizes: verdict for the plaintiff. G. Francis moved for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence. Rule nisi.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

EASTER TERM.

Thursday, April 15.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. CRESSWELL, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

ODAMS and ANOTHER v. AVERY.

Ship—Freight—Broker—Revocation of authority to receive freight.

The plaintiffs, merchants in London, shipped at New York a quantity of oil-cake on board a vessel chartered for London, of which the defendant was owner. The vessel was consigned to C. and Co. brokers in London, and the terms agreed on with the captain were, for a lump freight of 500 tons, 500l.; half to be paid in cash on delivery of the cargo, and the remainder by approved bills. Bills of lading were signed and given. The brokers, C. and Co. on the arrival of the vessel duly reported her, made out the freight-notes, and received 133l. 13s. 8d. for freight from the plaintiffs. Whilst the vessel was delivering the goods into the plaintiffs' barges, the captain, having learnt that the brokers were insolvent, refused to allow the barges to be removed with the goods until he had received an indemnity from the plaintiffs.

At the trial it was contended, that the shipowner had a lien on all the goods, whether shipped on bills of lading under the charterer or otherwise. The learned judge directed the jury that the plaintiffs were authorised to pay freight to the brokers, C. and Co. unless they had previously received notice that the brokers' authority was revoked:

Held, no misdirection.

This cause was tried before Williams, J. and a special jury, at Guildhall, during the sittings after last term. Verdict for the plaintiffs.

The action was brought to recover damages for the detention of a quantity of oil-cake, shipped at New York, for which the freight had been paid, and of which the plaintiffs held the bills of lading. At the trial it appeared that in 1850 the plaintiffs, who are merchants in London, purchased, by their agents at New York, a quantity of oil-cake, which was shipped for them on board a vessel chartered for England, called the Mary Ensell, of which the defendant, a shipowner at North Shields, was the proprietor. The vessel was consigned to Cooper, Fitton, and Co. brokers in London, and the terms agreed on with the captain were for a lump freight of 500 tons for 500l. half of which was to be paid in cash on delivery of the cargo, and the rest by approved bills. It was found, however, that the vessel would only carry 460 tons, and a proportionate deduction in the amount of freight was, therefore, agreed on between the charterer and the captain, and bills of lading were given. The plaintiffs having previously made arrangements for the necessary entries at the Custom-house, and for payment of the freight, the vessel arrived on the 20th of December. The brokers, Cooper and Co. duly reported her arrival, and made out the freight-notes, and on Saturday, the 28th of December, received 133l. 13s. 8d. for freight from parties who represented the plaintiffs. At this time the vessel was in the St. Katherine Docks, and was partly unloaded into the plaintiffs' barges; but the captain, learning that the brokers had become insolvent, refused the pass necessary for the barges to leave the dock, and ultimately only allowed them to go upon receiving an indemnity from the plaintiffs. The main question between the parties was, whether the plaintiffs, before they paid the freight to Cooper and Co. had received notice that the authority of those gentlemen to act as brokers had been revoked; and upon this point the evidence was very conflicting. The jury, however, found a verdict for the plaintiffs.

A rule having been obtained calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, Bramwell, Q.C. and Willes now shewed cause against the rule.—[There was a long and minute analysis of the evidence by counsel on both sides, the question of fact in dispute being the main one contested at the trial, namely, whether the plaintiffs, before they paid the freight to the brokers, Cooper, Fitton, and Co. (who had become insolvent), had received notice of revocation of the brokers' authority. Williams, J. had told the jury that the plaintiffs were authorised in paying the freight to the brokers unless they had received notice not to do so. This was the misdirection complained of.]—It is difficult to see what is the misdirection of which the defendant complains in this case. The contract here is in writing on the bill of lading, the effect of which is, that the consignee shall have his goods on payment of a sum stated in the bill of lading. The defendant has to contend that the goods are not to be paid for on delivery. The bill of lading is in the ordinary course of business, and according to that the consignee has merely to pay the sum therein stated to be entitled to remove his goods. But it is said he is to pay more, and that a lien attaches upon the goods. This is an ordinary case of freight payable on a bill of lading, and the defendant has no right to lien upon the goods.

Byles, Serjt. and Aspland, in support of the rule.—This case has been before two juries, and they have come to opposite conclusions on the facts. In the Q. B. the jury found there was notice of revocation on the 28th of December; in the C. P. they found there was no such notice. If this rule should be discharged and the verdict allowed to stand, we shall be in an unsatisfactory position at a new trial which must follow in the Q. B. and it would be nearly useless our contesting it further. As to the question of misdirection, there were here two freights, one under the charter-party, and another on the bill of lading. It may be that we have not a lien on all the goods in the vessel: all I have to shew is, that we have a lien on these goods until the charter-party freight is paid. How are we know who is the assignee of the bill of lading?—that may get into a hundred hands. The question, then, is, on whom does the onus lie?—on the shipowner to give notice, or on the assignee of the bill of lading to inquire? [CRESSWELL, J.—What was the contract made by the shipper of these goods as to the freight?] The contract was between the shipper and the charterer, that the shipper should pay freight to the charterer. The captain made the contract with the charterer on the part of the owner. [JERVIS, C.J.—The owner gave the captain particular authority to contract that freight shall be paid under the charter on the delivery of the goods.] The question is new: we have looked into the cases, and cannot find any in which the point has been considered. [JERVIS, C.J.—You will find cases where the question was, whether there was fraud or no fraud.] It matters not to whomsoever the goods belong, the shipowner has a lien for his freight under the charter-party upon all goods put on board his vessel. Supposing freight payable by bills, he has a clear lien till the bills are paid. If several parties ship goods on board a vessel, the owner has a lien on every parcel for the charter-freight. Saunders v. Vanzella, 4 Q.B. 274, is a case opposed to the present leaning of the Court. The owner's lien is not for freight due on the bill of lading, because that is freight due from goods owner to the charterer, but in every thing shipped for the freight under the charter-party. We say that the owner of the goods in this case stands in the shoes of the charterer. It comes to this,—Is the shipowner paid by payment to the brokers, Cooper, Fitton, and Co. Putting it the other way—Surely the shipowner is to be paid. Is he paid in this case? Could he recover freight from the brokers, Cooper, Fitton, and Co.? [JERVIS, C.J.—Notice to Odams and Co. is not the point; the revocation of authority of Cooper, Fitton, and Co. is the question here. Was or was not their authority revoked?] We contend that payment to the charterer is not payment so as to discharge the goods from the shipowner's lien. When does the shipowner become liable in trover? They must give us notice that the freight under the bill of lading is paid to the brokers, Cooper, Fitton, and Co.

JERVIS, C.J.—I am sorry the view this Court has taken of this case conflicts with that of the Court of Q. B.; still it is our duty to give our opinion on the questions at issue. It seems to me that both on the point that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and on the question of misdirection this rule must be discharged. No doubt much may be justly said upon the evidence on both sides; for it is direct conflict as regards notice; but the jury have come to a decision which is not dissented from by the learned judge who tried the cause. This Court, therefore, would not be justified in interfering to disturb the verdict unless it is clearly made out that it was against the weight of the evidence. We cannot say that it was. As regards the question of law I think the propositions contended for on behalf of the defendant is not consistent with sound principles of law. [His lordship here recapitulated the history and facts of the case, and referred to Small v. Moates, 9 Bing. 574, of which he read the marginal note.] The question here is, was the freight payable under the bill of lading paid, and if so, was it paid to the person entitled to receive it. I think it was. It is admitted that Cooper, Fitton, and Co. communicated to the shippers that by authority of the Master they were the persons to receive the freight, and they were no doubt duly authorised to do so. It therefore lay on the defendants to shew that their authority had ceased, and that notice had been given of that fact to the plaintiffs. The jury have found that there was no such revocation of authority, and the direction of the learned judge was right on this point.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of the same opinion upon both points. There was a conflict of testimony at the trial, but I see no occasion to dissent from the finding of the jury. As to the other question, namely, that of misdirection, I am of opinion that when a ship is chartered as a general ship, and the captain signs bills of lading for payment of a certain freight, the consignees cannot be made liable for anything beyond that freight. It was not disputed that the vessel was consigned to Cooper, Fitton, and Co. or that they, as the brokers, were by custom the parties entitled to receive the freight. They sent out freight-notes without any previous revocation of authority. It was, therefore, on the defendant to shew that due notice had been given to the plaintiffs that the brokers' authority to receive the freight had been countermanded. This has not been shewn. The direction of the learned judge was, therefore, right, and the verdict must not be disturbed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the ground of motion that the verdict was against the evidence, it was a question of fact for the jury. They have decided it, and I do not dissent from their finding; the verdict, therefore, must stand. With reference to the other point, Cooper and Co. had undoubtedly authority to receive the freight from plaintiffs unless their authority was revoked, and whether it was revoked or otherwise depends on the evidence, on which the jury have properly decided.

TALFOURD, J. concurred. Rule discharged.

STEBBING v. MOTTRAM.

Practice—Judgment as in case of nonsuit—Costs. Where the affidavit, on which a rule for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, has been moved, does not show the venue or state whether the cause in which issue has been joined is a town or country cause, the Court having no record to refer to, will discharge the rule with costs.

Ball shewed cause against a rule nisi for judgment as in case of nonsuit obtained last Term by Borthwick. It is objected that the affidavit on which the rule was moved is defective. It states that issue was joined in this cause on the 19th of May last—that is to say, in the vacation after Easter Term, the latter having closed on the 13th of May. It does not appear in any part of the affidavit whether the cause is a town or country cause. This or the venue ought to have been shewn. Besides this, as two Assizes had not elapsed when the rule was moved, the defendant came to the Court too soon. The practice as to stating venue has been laid down in Withers v. Spooner, 5 M. & G. 268. The marginal note there shews that an affidavit in order to ground a motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit must state the venue. There is no record before the Court by which it may be ascertained whether the cause is a town or country cause. [CRESSWELL, J.—In which Term is it stated that issue was joined?] The affidavit states that issue was joined on the 19th of May. (Ellis v. Stebbing, 5 Scott, N. R. 167; 2 Dowl. N.S. 118.) It is submitted that as the practice was laid down, in regard at least to stating the venue, so long back as 1833, and followed by all the Courts ever since, this rule should be discharged with costs. [JERVIS, C.J.—Have you an office copy of the affidavit? If you have not, you cannot be heard.] I have an office copy.

Crosse, in support of the rule.—I cannot get over the objection made to the affidavit. If the Court is to assume that this is a country cause, there is an end to the matter.

CRESSWELL, J.—Your affidavit is insufficient.

JERVIS, C.J.—This rule must be discharged with costs. Rule discharged.

Re JOHANNA CONNELL.

The Court will not grant a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of an infant, unless it be shewn on affidavit that the infant is kept against her will.

Scott applied for a writ of habeas corpus to the overseers of the parish of Lambeth to bring up the body of Johanna Connell. The application was made in behalf of a sister, who was of age. From her affidavit it appeared that the father died six years ago, leaving herself and two other children. The mother died in November 1848. One of the children, a boy, had been apprenticed; the other, a girl, had been placed by the overseers of the parish in an infant establishment, at Norwood. The parents were Roman Catholics. The deponent having an opportunity of placing her sister in an orphan asylum for Roman Catholics, had applied, through a Mr. Scott, in February last, to the overseers for permission to remove the child, who then wished to leave the asylum at Norwood. The permission had been refused; and deponent believed that such refusal was in consequence of a desire to prevent the child from being brought up a Roman Catholic.

JERVIS, C.J.—The application must shew that the child is kept against her will. This application only shews that in February last some person, of whom the overseers might have known nothing, applied for the removal of the child, who is stated to have been then anxious to go to a particular place, and did not go. For all that appears, there may now have been a change. Application refused.

STEADMAN v. CHAPPELL.

Attorney and solicitor—Practice—New trial—Costs.

An attorney brought an action for the amount of his bill. At the trial, the plaintiff put in a written retainer signed by the defendant, and the cause was proceeding as undefended, when the defendant presented himself and swore that he never retained plaintiff, and that plaintiff's name was not on the written retainer when he signed it, whereupon the verdict went for the defendant.

The Court held this a sufficient ground of surprise, the professional character of plaintiff being at stake, and granted a new trial.

The Court, in granting a new trial, on the ground of surprise, will follow the usual practice of granting the rule on payment of costs, notwithstanding the surprise was alleged perjury, by the successful party on his examination at the trial.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, an attorney, for work and labour alleged to have been done for the defendant upon retainer in defending an action of ejectment. At the trial, the case was treated as undefended until the close of the plaintiff's evidence, when the defendant presented himself as a witness on the other side, and swore that he never gave the plaintiff a retainer, and that he never employed him; but, on the contrary, that he gave a retainer, and paid the expenses of the action, to a person named Field, whom he believed to be an attorney, and who occupied chambers with the plaintiff. He further swore that the plaintiff's name which appeared on the retainer was not there when he signed it, but had been placed there afterwards without his knowledge or authority. The cause was tried before Jervis, C.J. at sittings in London. The jury having returned a verdict for the defendant, the present rule was granted on the ground of surprise.

Huddlestone (with him Edwin James, Q.C.) now shewed cause against the rule. The only ground of surprise alleged in the affidavit on which this rule was moved is, that the plaintiff could not have believed that the defendant would go the lengths of perjury which he did on examination at the trial, otherwise it is stated plaintiff would have been prepared to rebut defendant's evidence. This is not sufficient to justify the Court in setting aside the verdict of the jury. It was a simple question of credibility, the questions for the jury being, whether defendant had ever given plaintiff a retainer, and whether he had lent him 5*l.* The jury came to the conclusion that defendant's version of the story was true; and it being a question of fact, they were competent to decide it, and their finding, therefore, should not be disturbed. [JERVIS, C.J.—The Court will not grant a rule for a new trial on a mere conflict of affidavits; what it looks for are strong facts to shew that a new trial would be justified on the ground of surprise.] Yes; when a party asks for a new trial on such grounds, he must clearly satisfy the Court that he is in possession of evidence which will altogether rebut the testimony on which the case turned, and which surprised him at the trial. No such materials are furnished here; for the retainer produced cannot be accepted as conclusive here. [JERVIS, C.J.—If Steadman's was an honest case, he might reasonably say he was taken by surprise.] If this case should be sent to another jury, the result, in all probability, would be the same.

Hawkins and Joyce, in support of the rule, were not called on.

JERVIS, C.J.—We will not call on the plaintiff to support this rule. The question is not a question of mere amount, but one affecting the personal character of the plaintiff. His reputation is here at stake; there will therefore be a new trial, on payment of costs.

Hawkins urged, that as the necessity for coming to this Court for a new trial had been occasioned by what he alleged was perjury by the defendant, the plaintiff ought to have his rule without payment of costs.

By the COURT.—This cannot be acceded to. Mr Steadman can hardly hesitate between the payment of a few pounds costs, and the opportunity which this rule affords him of clearing his character as a professional man. He must take his rule on the usual terms.

Monday, April 19.

GRISEWOOD v. BLAYNE.

Share-jobbing.

An agreement for the sale and purchase of railway shares, amounting, in fact, to a bargaining for the payment of the difference, is a gambling transaction within the provisions of statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, s. 18. It is right to leave it to the jury "did either party intend to buy or sell?" and if the jury find that neither party did intend to buy or sell, that is finding that the transaction is gambling.

In this case Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. The question was, whether an agreement for the sale and purchase of railway shares, being, in fact, a bargaining for the difference, was not a gambling transaction. The declaration stated that the defendant sold to the plaintiff shares in several railways at certain prices, on the terms that they were to be delivered on a future day, and then paid for; that the defendant was not then possessed of the shares, and would, therefore, have to purchase them; that the shares rose in price, so that the defendant would not be able to purchase except at enhanced prices; that it was thereupon agreed that the bargain should be rescinded, and that defendant should sell to plaintiff so many shares at the then market-price, and pay plaintiff the difference. Mutual promises. Breach, that the difference, 711*l.* was not paid within a reasonable time. Pleas—1st. Non assumpsit. 2nd. Traverse of the bargain. 3rd. That the contract was by way of wagering on the price of the shares, and was merely colourable, and that it was never intended that the said shares should be bought and sold, but was a mere wager, and the contract was after the year 1847, the date of the Gaming or Wagering Act. [JERVIS, C.J.—You must apply for judgment non obstante veredicto.] By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 8, "All contracts by way of gaming or wagering are made null and void; and the question is, whether this is a transaction that comes within the meaning of the Act. It appeared by the evidence that the plaintiff was a stock and share jobber, and that defendant was desirous to speculate, and had contracted through his broker to sell to the plaintiff the shares mentioned in the declaration. It was left to the jury by Jervis, C.J. thus:—"What was Grisewood's intention, and what was Blayne's intention? Did either party mean to purchase or sell? If not, it is gambling transaction." Whereas it ought to have been left to the jury, was the intention of both parties so known to the other that no action would lie on the contract? A contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day, is not a gambling transaction, although the one party has not the goods, and has not contracted for them, and never means to have them (Hibblethwaite v. Macmorine, 6 M. & W. 216); and it makes no difference that both parties are in the same position, and neither party means to have them; nor even if they say so in their contract by express stipulation. [CRESSWELL, J.—If so, under non assumpsit I should tell the jury the contract was not proved.] Suppose no such stipulation, and though both parties had no intention of buying or selling, yet did not know of this in the mind of the other, this would not be a gambling transaction. [CRESSWELL, J.—In that case each would intend to give the other the power of enforcing it.] The question is, was there a mutual understanding between the parties. If there was—that is, if both understood the transaction, and expressed it to each other, it is gambling. If they did not express it to each other, it is not gambling, and it should have been so left to the jury.

CRESSWELL, J.—I am of opinion that the direction to the jury was quite right. If neither party had an intention to buy or sell, and that question was left to the jury, it was properly so left. It appeared by the evidence that the transactions in some of the shares had continued for a long time, and that there were some previous dealings as to the others, and that at last a difference was to be paid. It is assumed that the thing was then to be settled by payment of the balance. The jury were, therefore, right in finding it a gambling transaction. And I think, also, that it was within the statute.

JERVIS, C.J.—I thought there was abundant evidence at the trial to shew it was a gambling transaction. And I am sure the jury understood that I put it to them, "what did each party intend, and was their intention known to each other?"

Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, April 15.

[There being no motions ready at the commencement of business, the Court took the rules enlarged from last term.]

BELL (P. O.) v. FISK.

Byles, Serjt. on this case being called, stated to the Court that the parties were in course of arrangement, in two days their differences would probably be settled. Mr Hayes was ready to shew cause, and himself to go on, but in order to permit of amicable adjustment, he would ask the Court to order the case to stand over. The Court then made the order prayed, and the case Stands over.

STEBBING v. MOTTRAM.

Ball said he was ready, but his friend Borthwick, who was for the other side, was not in Court. It was a motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit; the defect in the affidavit being that it did not state where the venue was laid. [JERVIS, C.J.—What is your application?] I do not wish to press the taking of the rule in the absence of Mr. Borthwick. [JERVIS, C.J.—You must, or the case will be struck out.] I will then ask for judgment.

By the COURT.—Let the rule be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Master Ray stated that there were no more enlarged rules, and the Court at once proceeded to the old New Trial Paper.

ANONYMOUS.

Channell, Serjt. mentioned a case partly argued last Term, or in the sitting after Term, before the Court, with Maule, J. upon the bench. He asked whether the Court would take the case this Term, or direct it to stand over until Maule, J. should again form a member of the Court.

JERVIS, C.J.—I spoke to brother Maule about this case. We think of taking it the first Nisi Prius day in this Term. But when that would be he could not say; for he did not know where the Nisi Prius sittings would be held. The Sessions House in which the Court ordinarily sat at Nisi Prius in Term was under repair, and the Vice-Chancellor's Court, in which the Nisi Prius sittings were sometimes held, was now occupied by the Lords Justices. He was indeed informed that the commissioners for building the new Houses of Parliament had kindly provided a room five or six stories high, at the top of a tower, for the purpose, and it might be very good exercise for the young men of the profession to practise there; but whether he and his learned brethren could do so was another question. He rather thought the probability would be that the sittings at Nisi Prius would have to be postponed during the sittings in banco, for the country could not expect the judges to sit if it did not provide a court for them. This case, however, shall not be taken to-morrow; we can promise so much as that.

STEBBING v. MOTTRAM.

Crosse applied to have this case (in which the rule was discharged this morning, Borthwick being unable through indisposition to appear and support it) reopened.

Ball had consented, and the Court permitted the reopening. The case is reported suprà.

Saturday, April 17.

GRAHAM and ANOTHER v. CHAPMAN.

This was a part heard case; the question being whether the assignment of all a trader's goods for a by-gone debt was or was not an act of bankruptcy.

Byles, Serjt. and Aspland were heard. This case lasted great part of the day. At its conclusion the Court intimated that they would take time to consider their judgment. Cur. adv. vult.

COMBE v. BALL and ANOTHER.

Spicer moved for a distringas to compel an appearance. The defendant is John Dean Paul, of No. 4, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, and the process-server had in vain endeavoured to serve him. He made the necessary calls and appointments at the house of the defendant, and was informed by the servants that defendant was from home and could not be seen. The usual statement of belief that defendant was keeping out of the way to avoid service was made in the affidavit. [JERVIS, C. J.—Read that part of the affidavit which relates to search for an appearance.] The affidavit states that "search has been made in the proper place, and that defendant has not appeared according to the exigency of the said writ."

JERVIS, C. J.—That will not do.

Rule refused.

GASSIOT v. CARPMAEL.

This was an action to recover the sum of 52*l.* the value of a horse alleged to have been killed through the defendant's negligence. The cause was tried before Parke, B. at the last Surrey Assizes, verdict for the plaintiff.

Shee, Serjt. now applied for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. I do not expect the Court to grant this rule unless the learned Judge who tried the cause will say that he was dissatisfied with the verdict. The facts were these. It appeared that in April last a cartload of manure, which had been previously ordered, was shot down by the carter in the Tulse-hill-road, near the defendant's premises, about six o'clock in the evening. The defendant's gardener was gone home, but the carter having pulled the bell, a maid servant looked out of the window, and made a gesture which he interpreted to mean that it was all right. A little while afterwards, the police requested that the manure might be removed, and this was partially done; but about nine o'clock, as the plaintiff was going by in his brougham, the coachman, not seeing the obstruction, drove over it, and upset the carriage. No great damage was done to the carriage, and it was driven home; but about an hour after arriving there, one of the horses died suddenly; and it being proved that the death was occasioned by an injury sustained by falling over the manure, the present action was brought to recover the value of the horse. The jury found for the plaintiff, but it was now contended that a new trial should be granted, inasmuch as the manure had been delivered too late for the defendant to remove it that evening, and, therefore, if any one were responsible, it was the person who delivered it; and, moreover, because, if there had been any negligence by the defendant, there had been at least equal negligence on the part of the plaintiff's coachman.

The COURT, after having communicated with Parke, B. and, as that learned judge wished for time to refer to his notes of the trial, intimated that judgment would be postponed for the present.

JUPE v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

This cause was called on, and ordered to stand over. Stands over.

Re YATES.

Russell applied to strike an attorney off the rolls, at his own request. The affidavit complied with all the requirements of the practice, distinctly stating that no proceedings were pending, or were contemplated, against the attorney. Rule granted.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, April 16.

CROUCH v. NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Cowling moved for a rule to show cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants. The plaintiff had sent a package, in which as a small parcel of gold studs, by the defendants as carriers. When the package was opened the studs were missed. The question was whether the defendants were liable, they having given a notice that they would not be liable for goods in a package, the contents of which were not declared, and that notice not having been complied with. Rule nisi.

ANDERSON and ANOTHER v. HILLIES and ANOTHER.—Hugh Hill moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendants, or why the verdict should not be reduced by 24*l.* 10s. The plaintiff, a ship broker had by means of a bill enabled the master of a ship, who, with the defendants, was also part owner, to transmit money to a stranger abroad. The question was, was this such a payment as to make the defendants liable, the master and other part owner being now dead. The other point was technical as to the form of admissions.

Monday, April 19.

AUSTEN v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.—Watson moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants, or why there should not be a new trial. This was an action on the case against the defendants as common carriers, for negligently carrying some horses of the plaintiff. The jury found that the defendants had been guilty of gross negligence. It was now contended that the defendants were relieved from their liability as common carriers, by reason of the ticket given to the plaintiff, on which was a notice that the company would not be responsible for any alleged defects in the carriages unless complaint should be made before the time of leaving the station, nor for any damages, however caused, to live stock travelling upon their railway, or in their carriages or trucks. This, it was argued, was a special agreement, and not a mere notice

Rule nisi.

HEAP and ANOTHER v. BARTON and ANOTHER.—Knowles moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiffs should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants. The defendants had taken some stables from the son of a Mr. Howard, who had mortgaged them to the plaintiffs. An ejectment was brought by the mortgagees. The plaintiffs subsequently undertook not to issue a writ of possession till a day named, on condition of the defendants not appearing to the action. After the day of the demise laid, but before the day named in the undertaking, the plaintiffs removed tenant's fixtures. It was contended that they were in by permission of the landlords, and had therefore a right to remove them after the end of the term; and that they would not, under such circumstances, be taken to have abandoned them to the landlords. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HIND v. MAYOR AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF MANCHESTER.—Sir A. Cockburn moved for a rule to show cause why a writ of haberi facias possessionem should not be set aside or delayed.

Rule granted and proceedings stayed.

HEDLEY v. SURREY GAS ASSOCIATION.—Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the defendants should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the plaintiff or for a new trial. After argument the matter was arranged.

BOGG v. PEARSE and ANOTHER.—Montagu Chambers moved for a rule to shew cause why the nonsuit should not be set aside and a new trial granted. Rule refused.

Tuesday, April 20.

SMITH v. WINTER.—This was a cause tried before Jervis, C.J. Miller, Serjt. now moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for 1*l.* 6s. 6d. on an issue of set-off. Rule nisi.

BOGG v. PEARCE.—Lush mentioned this case again to the Court; a difficulty had been found in drawing up the rule of yesterday. JERVIS, C.J.—You may draw up the rule in such a form as to involve the point you intend should be raised. Leave accordingly.

COSTANS v. EVANS.—This cause was tried before Wightman, J. at the last assizes for Gloucester: verdict for the plaintiff; damages 48*l.* Keating, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and also for misdirection. This was an action of trespass for seizing and taking plaintiff's goods; to which defendant pleaded the general issue. The question at the trial was whether the rent distrained for was due or not. Rule nisi.

WINTLE v. DAVIES.—This action was tried before the Sheriff of Middlesex: verdict for the defendant. Macnamara now moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff, if the Court should be of opinion that payment proved was not payment in law. The sheriff's notes do not contain all the facts. (Margetts v. Cowley, 2 Scott's N. R. 583; Linney v. Johnson, 2 M. & W. 386.) The plaintiff was a wine-merchant in London, and defendant a tailor at Wolverhampton. The latter ordered six gallons of gin of plaintiff through one Baker, who professed himself an agent of plaintiff. The gin was sent to defendant with an invoice. When called upon to pay, the defendant set off a debt for goods supplied to the agent Baker. For the defence it was urged that defendant had a right to do this, Baker being a factor and having disposal of the goods supplied. JERVIS, C.J.—The evidence was, that defendant well knew that Baker was a mere agent. Rule nisi.

MESSER v. PARKER.—This action was tried before Jervis, C.J. at the sittings after term in London. Verdict for defendant on 2nd, 4th, & 6th issues; and for plaintiff in the remaining four issues. Charnock, now moved to set aside the verdict for defendant on the above four issues, and to enter them for the plaintiff. It appeared that the plaintiff, who is an optician, received an intimation from the defendant, the well-known carrier, that a packing-case belonging to him was at the defendant's warehouse, and he therefore went there to make arrangements for its removal. On arriving at the warehouse, he was requested by a clerk to accompany him to another part of the premises to see the case, and upon proceeding there he fell through a trap door communicating with a cellar, and left open for the purposes of the defendant's business. The consequence of the fall was that the plaintiff was severely injured, and it was to recover compensation for these injuries that he brought his action. The learned judge, who tried the cause, however, thought that upon the pleadings the action would not lie, and directed a verdict for the defendant on all the material issues. In support of the present motion the learned counsel now contended that as the warehouse in question was a public office, and as the public generally and in this case the plaintiff in particular, were invited to go there, the defendant was liable for any accident that occurred there through the defendant's negligence.

Rule nisi.

DOE dem. ROBERTS v. MOSTYN and OTHERS.—This was an action of ejectment tried in North Wales, before Williams, J. Verdict for the plaintiff. Vaughan Williams now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and entered for the defendants, and why execution should not be stayed. The case will be reported next week. Rule refused.

PARKINSON v. MUSGROVE and ANOTHER.—This was an action against the sheriffs of Middlesex for an illegal distress, tried before Jervis, C.J. at the sittings after term Verdict for defendants. The plaintiff now moved in person for a new trial on affidavits negativing parts of the evidence given at the trial. CRESSWELL, J.—There is no the least ground for disturbing the verdict in this case. JERVIS, C.J.—This was a very vexatious and improper action Rule refused.

Re BANNERMAN.—Knight moved the Court for leave to be granted to a Mrs. Bannerman to execute a deed of conveyance, under the Fines and Recoveries Act, of some property to which she is entitled, her husband being insane and confined in a lunatic asylum. She became possessed of the property under the wills of John Bacon and Lady Johnson. [By the COURT.—We presume this is a proper application, and that every thing is regular.] Knight.—Yes. By the COURT.—You may take a rule.

Leave granted.

DOE dem. BENTHALL v. ROE.—Colquhoun moved for a rule for judgment against the casual ejector. There would be no necessity for mentioning this were it not that we did not move in the term within which we should have come for this rule. JERVIS, C.J.—In this Court the practice is, in such cases, to grant a rule to shew cause only.

Rule nisi.

ANONYMOUS.—J. Brown made absolute a rule for a suggestion to deprive plaintiff of costs, under the County Courts Act, moved a long time ago, no cause shewn.

Rule absolute.

The Court went into the Special Paper:—

ADDISON v. THE MAYOR, &c. OF PRESTON.—Henderson (G. Denman with him) was heard for the plaintiff. At close of plaintiff's case the Court rose. Part heard.

Wednesday, April 21.

ROBINSON v. GILL.—Cowling argued for defendant. Welsby for plaintiff. To be reported. Cur. adv. vult.

ABRAHAMS v. DENNIS.—Byles, Serjt. applied for a rule to show cause why the defendant should not pay the costs of proceedings subsequent to an undertaking by his attorney for settling the action. Rule nisi.

GLADSTANE and OTHERS v. ALLEN and OTHERS.—Channell for the plaintiffs. Part heard.

WILLIS v. LORD CANTERBURY.—Smith shewed cause why the order for special jury should not be set aside. The order was obtained on the ground that it was necessary in order to learn what were the proper charges in a tailor's bill. Order set aside.

ADDISON v. MAYOR, &c. OF PRESTON.—Special case. Held that the defendants were not liable to this action, which was one of debt. To be reported.

REG. v. THE RECORDER OF LEEDS.

Ex parte BARKER.

Order of affiliation—Appeal—Notice of recognisance.

Hardy moved for a rule calling upon the Recorder of Leeds and Jane Tasker to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding the said recorder to enter continuances and hear two appeals against two orders of affiliation, whereby Mark Barker was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children. The following were the circumstances under which this application was made. It appeared that the woman having been delivered of twins, she applied to justices for a summons against the putative father. Upon the hearing of the case on the 27th of December last, the justices adjudged the said Mark Barker to be the putative father, and verbally, at that time, made an order that he should pay 1s. per week for each child. Immediately upon this, the putative father gave verbal notice of appeal. Two orders were subsequently regularly drawn up and served, and the putative father duly entered into recognisances as required by law, but the notice which he gave the woman of his having done so, was in the following form:—

Borough of Leeds, in the county of York, to wit. } As attorneys for and on behalf of Mark Barker, of Leeds, in the county of York, woolsorter, we do hereby give you notice that the said Mark Barker has entered into a recognisance before Charles Gascoigne Maclea, esquire, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said borough of Leeds, in the said county of York, to try an appeal at the next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, to be holden at Leeds, in and for the borough of Leeds, against an order of affiliation made on the 27th day of December last, whereby the said Mark Barker was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children, of which you, Jane Tasker, had then lately been delivered. Dated the 5th day of January, 1852.

Yours, &c.

FERNS and ROOKE,

Attorneys for the said Mark Barker.

To Jane Tasker and to John Hope Shaw, esq. and Darnton Lupton, esq.

Upon the appeals coming on for trial at the Leeds Sessions, it was objected, on the behalf of the respondent, that the notice of recognisance was bad, there being no such order as that described, whereby the appellant was adjudged to be the putative father of two bastard children; the recognisance speaking also of only one appeal, whereas there were two. Against this objection it was contended, that the notice of recognisance was sufficient to convey to the woman all that it was necessary she should know. The learned recorder, however, thought the objection was good, and refused to hear the appeals.

It was now contended that the recorder was wrong, that the notice was sufficient, and that he ought to have heard the appeal. (Reg. v. Holborow, 3 New Sess. Cas. 723; 14 Law T. 201. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF HARTLEPOOL.

Municipal Corporation—Non-election of auditors and assessors.

Cleasby moved for a mandamus commanding the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Hartlepool to proceed to the election of auditors and assessors for the borough, they having neglected to do so on the 1st of March, as required by the Municipal Corporation Act. Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF BANBURY.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

REG. v. ROBINSON.—Cowling moved to make absolute the rule herein for a quo warranto against Mr. Robinson, for exercising the office of Alderman of Newcastle, no cause shown. Rule absolute.

REG. v. STREET and OTHERS.—In this case a certiorari had been obtained to remove into this court the certificate of allowance of a poor-law auditor, in order that the same may be quashed for the disallowance of some items for law expenses, and a return having been made, Poulden now moved to quash the certificate. Rule nisi.

GLYN v. WILSON and OTHERS.—Willes moved, on the part of the defendants, for a rule calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why a rule obtained for a mandamus to examine witnesses in India should not be set aside.

Rule nisi.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY, and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Thursday, April 15.

BARBAT v. ALLEN and ANOTHER.

Objection to witness—Discretion of judge—Withdrawal of evidence—Evidence of defendant's wife—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, ss. 1, 3.

Where an objection to the admissibility of a witness is taken and decided on by the judge, and afterwards withdrawn, the judge may refuse to allow such withdrawal; and per Pollock, C.B. he may refuse to allow any such waiver, even though made before his decision.

The Law of Evidence Amendment Act does not make the wife admissible as a witness for her husband in civil cases.

This was an action on promises, tried before Pollock, C.B. at the sittings after last Michaelmas Term. Verdict for the plaintiff for 26*l.* 8s. The declaration was for work done and materials provided, and for divers journeys and attendances of the plaintiff in and about the business of the defendants; there were also counts for money paid and on an account stated. The defendants pleaded—1. Non-assumpsit. 2. Fraud and covin. The plaintiff, a Frenchman, had been employed by the defendants to go to Paris for the purpose of inducing customers to come to certain hotels they had established in London during the Exhibition last year; and on the trial the counsel for the defendants proposed to call the wife of the defendant Allen to prove that the person introducing the plaintiff (the defendants' manager and agent) had made use of expressions shewing fraud. The plaintiff's counsel objected, and the Lord Chief Baron refused to receive the evidence. Subsequently the plaintiff agreed to withdraw the objection, but the judge refused to admit the evidence. In Hilary Term, Giffard obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of such rejection of evidence.

Hertslet now shewed cause.—The waiver of the objection taken to the reception of the evidence of defendant's wife can be no ground for a new trial. The Court cannot put the parties in precisely the same position they held on the former occasion. That waiver was made for the purpose of buying peace, and to prevent the defendants having a ground for a new trial, as no case had then arisen on the construction of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99; and if this rule were made absolute, the plaintiff could again, on the new trial, object to the admission of this evidence; so that no end would be gained. The Court will not try a cause by rules created by the parties, but will adhere to the strict law of evidence; and a consent to withdraw an objection cannot interfere with the discretion of the judge. If parties were allowed to make rules for themselves by consent, a case might occur in which they might consent to take the evidence of a person ignorant of the nature of an oath; but no judge would receive such evidence. Evidence of this kind had always been held inadmissible, as being contrary to public policy, and therefore the maxim, "Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto" does not apply. It is laid down in Buller's N. P. 286, that the evidence of husband and wife shall not be received for each other, because their interests are absolutely the same; nor against each other, because it is contrary to the legal policy of marriage. In Davis v. Dinwoody, 4 T.R. 678, Lord Kenyon said, "Independently of the question of interest, husbands and wives are not admitted as witnesses either for or against each other; from their being so nearly connected, they are supposed to have such a bias upon their minds that they are not to be permitted to give evidence for or against each other:" and Buller, J. said, "That is now considered a settled principle of law." There is a case of Barker v. Dixie, Ca. Tem. Hardwicke, 264, very similar to the present. There, the defendant was willing that the plaintiff's wife should be examined, and Lord Hardwicke, C.J. said, "The reason why the law will not suffer a wife to be a witness for or against her husband is, to preserve the peace of families; and therefore I shall never encourage such a consent:" and she was not examined. (Hall v. Hill and Ux. 2 Strange, 1094; 2 Taylor on Evidence, 905; Rex v. Frederick and Tracy, 2 Strange, 1095; and 2 Starkie on Evidence, were also cited.) With respect to the construction of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, it will be argued on the other side, that as the evidence of husband and wife for or against each other is particularly excluded by the 3rd section in criminal cases, and nothing is said about civil cases, that therefore in the latter such evidence is admissible; but the Court will not, on a mere inference of this sort, and without an express enactment, admit evidence which it has always hitherto been considered desirable, for the sake of the peace and happiness of families, to exclude. The opinion of the late Lord Chancellor on the proper construction of this Act is shewn by his judgment in Perciral v. Caney, 18 Law T. Rep. 150. Lord Truro there said,—"The long-established rule of law is, that a wife cannot be examined for or against her husband; and no alteration has yet been made in that established rule of law. It is a rule founded on a principle which is more valuable even than the administration of justice,—the necessity of preserving the confidence and happiness of domestic life." That was a judgment delivered on the 26th of January, after the Law of Evidence Amendment Act came into operation. For these reasons it is submitted the rule ought to be discharged.

Giffard, in support.—The wife is admissible as a witness for her husband under any circumstances. But first, as to the construction of the new Act, the 1st section repeals a certain portion of Lord Denman's Act; then the 3rd section says, that "nothing herein contained shall in any criminal proceeding render any husband competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife, or any wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband;" therefore, criminal cases being alone mentioned, this evidence is admissible in civil cases. "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." The words of the Act are to be construed so as to give effect to them all. The reason why such evidence was not admitted, was on the ground of interest, and this Act, by repealing a part of Lord Denman's Act, and admitting the parties to the suit, has destroyed that objection, since the interest of the husband and wife are identical; the evidence of the wife cannot, therefore, on the ground of interest, be any longer excluded. Then, as to the other ground that has been urged,—the sacredness of the conjugal relation. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The law considers that domestic happiness is worth more than arriving at the truth: it is the same with the relation of attorney and client. No doubt much might be obtained by examining the attorney; but the law says it is more desirable to sacrifice that means of getting at the truth, than to destroy the confidence that ought to exist between the parties.] The third section decides the question. In the case of O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, 4 M. & G. 440, the question was, whether the widow of A. was admissible as a witness in an action of trover by his personal representatives, for the purpose of shewing that she pledged the goods with the defendant by her husband's authority; and Talfourd, Serjt. argued that the admission of such evidence would have the worst consequences, and he contended that it would violate the sacredness of conjugal communications; and Maule, J. said, "The rule can scarcely stand upon that ground. If the question had arisen between third parties, the widow might clearly have been called to prove that she pledged the plate with her husband's consent or by his authority. That puts an end, therefore, to the sacredness of conjugal communications as the foundation of the rule contended for." [PARKE, B.—The old law was, that husband and wife were not admissible for or against each other. Then, does the new Act render such evidence admissible? The 1st section clearly does not: it repeals a part of Lord Denman's Act, so far as relates to parties to the suit, but leaves the husband and wife incompetent. The only question then is, whether the 3rd section renders such evidence admissible. That section comes in by way of proviso, and provides that nothing contained in that Act shall, in criminal cases, render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against each other; but in criminal suits the wife may be a single party to the suit, which is not so common in civil suits.] All the arguments shutting the husband's mouth are in favour of the defendant. The husband may himself now give evidence; and I contend that the wife may also; because the true reason for the non-reception of such evidence was, interest; and that is now removed, their interests being identical. (He cited in support the judgment of Tindal, C.J. in Worrall v. Jones, 7 Bing. 399; Gilbert's Law of Evidence, 130, 4th edit.; Taylor on Evidence, 872; Aflalo v. Fourdrinier and Another, 6 Bing. 306; Pipe v. Steele, 2 Q.B. 736; Co. Litt. 6 b.) Then as to the question whether such evidence may be received by consent: in the case of Pedley v. Wellesley, 3 C. & P. 558, Best, J. said he would admit such evidence on consent; and he said Lord Mansfield had permitted a plaintiff to be examined with his own consent, which he (Best, J.) thought was right. Take the case of an attorney. An attorney may give evidence of any fact not coming to him in his capacity of attorney. May it not be so here? In this case the wife of the defendant was to be called not to state any communication made to her by her husband, but a statement made by a third person. At all events, her evidence may be received in matters unconnected with conjugal confidence. For these reasons, it is submitted, this rule should be made absolute.

PARKE, B.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. If the question had been merely whether, when the parties had waived an objection to the admissibility of a witness, the judge could refuse to receive his evidence, I should have paused before deciding that the Lord Chief Baron was right, although I am not prepared to say he would have been wrong. But in this case it was clearly in the power of the judge, after the objection had been taken and decided on by him and afterwards withdrawn, to refuse to allow the plaintiff's counsel to waive the objection so decided on. The only question then is, whether this evidence ought to have been received under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99; and I am clearly of opinion, on looking to the provisions of that Act, that it never was so intended. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, enacts that no person offered as a witness shall thereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest, &c.; and it afterwards proceeds to provide, "that this Act shall not render competent any party to any suit, action, or proceeding individually named in the record, or any lessor of the plaintiff or tenant of premises sought to be recovered in ejectment, or the landlord or other person in whose right any defendant in replevin may make cognisance, or any person in whose immediate and individual behalf any action may be brought or defended, either wholly or in part;" now so much of that Act as I have read is repealed by the new Act; but the section proceeds, "or the husband or wife of such persons respectively;" and this latter part is left unrepealed, and consequently they remain as incompetent as before. The only question is on the third section, which enacts that nothing therein contained "shall in any criminal proceeding render any husband competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife, or any wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband." And it is argued on the principle, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius," that, therefore, in civil cases such evidence is to be received; but it cannot raise such an implication, and the third section was, in my opinion, introduced to make the matter more sure than it was before. The law, therefore, stands as settled by the first section, which leaves husband and wife as incompetent to give evidence for or against each other as ever.

PLATT and MARTIN, BB. concurred.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I also concur in the judgment of the Court, and think the rule ought to be discharged; but I still remain of opinion, that whatever the counsel in the cause may consent to, it is the duty of the judge to see that the whole law, including the law of evidence, is properly administered; and frequently, I think, he would be justified in calling upon parties to adhere more strictly to the law. Strictly speaking, all objection to the admissibility of a witness ought to be taken on the voire dire; and I have known judges say,—"Sir, you are now too late, and I will not admit your objection;" but by the present practice, a witness may be objected to at any time, subject to the discretion of the judge. It is not competent for parties to make their own law, and to request the Court to administer it. Counsel might consent between themselves, that a person who was not aware of the nature or obligation of an oath should be examined, or a person without being sworn; but surely the judge could, in his discretion, object to receive such evidence. As to the other question, I am of opinion, that, under the new law of Evidence Act, the evidence of the wife is inadmissible. There are other things in the world as desirable as obtaining the truth, and the peace of families is one of them. To secure this, the Legislature thought fit, as I think rightly, to sacrifice one of the means of arriving at the truth; namely, by the examination of the wife. The history of this Act was given by Lord Truro, in one of his judgments, in which he said, that when the bill was before the House of Lords, he moved that the clause which gave the Courts of Law the power of examining the wife, be struck out, and it was struck out accordingly. In another clause, there was, however, an enactment to prevent the reception of the evidence of the wife or husband in the trial of criminal offences. That portion of that clause, by an oversight, and in consequence of the late hour at which the bill was discussed, had been permitted to remain. For these reasons I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. Rule discharged.

REG. v. ELIZABETH JONES.

Vagrant Act—Conviction—Reputed thief—Frequenting a street.

Does the stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, render any reputed thief who is found frequenting any street with intent to commit felony, liable to be punished as a rogue and vagabond: or, is the clause limited to public streets, highways, &c., leading to rivers or canals, or highways adjacent to places of public resort?

The defendant had been convicted and sent to the Westminster House of Correction as a rogue and vagabond, under the 4th section of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, and the conviction alleged that on, &c. the defendant being, &c., was frequenting a street, called Regent-street in, &c. with intent to commit felony.

Huddleston moved for a Habeas Corpus to bring up the body of the said E. Jones, in order that she might be discharged on the ground that the conviction was informal and bad. The question turns upon the construction to be put upon the stat. 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4 (the Vagrant Act). This case had been before Crompton, J. at Chambers, who referred the matter to the Court, and as the point has before arisen in the Court of Q. B., and a difference of opinion there existed among the learned Judges of that Court, it was deemed proper to make the present application to this Court; the case alluded to in the Court of Q. B. is, Re John Brown, 18 Law T. Rep. 238. The words of the statute are:—"Every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or any quay wharf, or warehouse, near or adjoining thereto; or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto; or any public resort or any avenue leading thereto; or any street, highway, or place adjacent with intent to commit felony, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond." This conviction does not allege that at the time of apprehension the party was in a highway, &c. leading to a river, or quay, &c., or adjacent to a place of public resort, nor does it state the street to be a public street or place of public resort.. A similar question was some time since before Patteson, J. at Chambers, who had subsequently written his opinion upon the subject; that opinion was in the following terms:—"I am of opinion that the words, 'leading thereto,' must be coupled with 'street and highway,' as well as with 'avenue,' and that the offence is confined to streets and highways leading to a river, &c. In the repealed statute, 3 Geo. 4, c. 40, no doubt can be raised, for 'leading thereto' is coupled directly and unequivocally with 'streets and highways.' The same construction must prevail as to the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, for the Legislature never could have intended, by the alteration of a word or two, rendering the sense only somewhat doubtful, to introduce an entirely new and different offence. Prisoners must be discharged.—J. Patteson." The 5 Geo. 4 was not passed for the purpose of amending, but only of renewing the 3 Geo. 4, c. 40, which was about to expire; and the intention of the Legislature was, in the 5 Geo. 4, to refer to roads, streets, and highways, leading to canals or places of public resort; in the earlier part of the same section, the words shewed that the offences there described referred to all highways; but in the provision as to reputed thieves, the statute was restricted to certain particular highways. It would seem to appear that the Legislature wished to protect the valuable property on quays and canals, and navigable rivers, which was much exposed to depredation. The second objection to the conviction is, that it declared that this person did frequent a certain street, with intent to commit a felony, but it did not say with intent to commit felony there. Fletcher v. Calthrop, 6 Q. B. 880, shews that the word there should be inserted in the conviction; that was a case under the Night Poaching Act. [MARTIN, B.—The 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, does not say that the felony is to be committed there.] Nor did it in the case referred to.

Rule nisi, on the first point only.

FREGARN v. BARNS and BARTON.

Constables' duties—Parish constables—County constables.

When a warrant is directed to a parish constable only, can it be properly handed over to and executed by a county constable?

This was an action for false imprisonment, tried before Talfourd, J. in Wiltshire, when the plaintiff was nonsuited, but the damages were assessed at 15*l.* in case the Court should be of opinion the nonsuit was wrong, and leave was given to the plaintiff to move to set aside that nonsuit and enter a verdict in his favour for the 15*l.* if the Court should be of opinion the plaintiff was so entitled.

Kinglake, Serjt. moved accordingly.—The whole question turned upon the validity of the arrest. The plaintiff insisted the arrest was improper, for this reason,—the plaintiff was accused of an indictable offence, and the warrant for his apprehension was directed simply, "To the Constable of Dancy, in the said County." There was a constable of Dancy regularly appointed; but this warrant, instead of being executed by him, was handed over to the defendant Barton, who was only a county constable, and who, under the circumstances, therefore, had no power to execute the warrant in the manner he did, or at all, and the arrest was improper. The 5 Geo. 4, c. 18, s. 6, and the case of Rex v. Weir, 1 B. & C. 288, shew the clear statement of the law at that time. Then the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, repeals the former statute, but contains a similar section in substance and to the same effect, relative to this point as was in the previous Act. It was contended by the other side that under the Act for the appointment of constables, the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 8, and the general powers therein contained, the county constable may do the act required.

MARTIN, B.—They have, doubtless, the power to execute the warrant in some way or other, provided it be properly directed to them; but here it appears to have been directed to the parish constable of Dancy, and to him only. Rule nisi.

CLAY and NEWMAN v. SOUTHEN.

Two members of a company, which company was not registered, nor had availed themselves of the Joint Stock Companies Act, entered into a contract in their own names, although the contract appeared to be for the benefit of the company:

Held, that the two members who had so entered into the contract in their own names, may alone sue and be sued thereon.

This was an action of indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, tried before Platt, B. when the plaintiffs obtained a verdict for £203. 13s. with leave reserved to the defendant to move to a nonsuit, if the Court should be of opinion the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, the only point being whether the plaintiffs, who were members of a joint-stock company, yet without having availed themselves of the Joint Stock Companies Registration Acts, should have sued in their own names, or in the name of the company.

Alexander, Q.C. now moved accordingly. Although the contract here was entered into by or on the behalf of the plaintiffs, it was for the benefit of the company of which they were members, and the partners therefore were the proper parties to bring the action; the plaintiffs, being merely their agents, were not entitled to sue. [PARKE B.—Was there not a similar case to this some short time since? Gray, amicus curiæ.—Yes, the name of it was Williams v. Marsden]. Williams v. Marsden is nowhere reported, but Mr. Phipson who was in that case, and is in this, informs me the contract there was altogether a different one to the present: here the consideration is from the company. [PARKE B.—Where the contract is with the parties to the action, have they not the right to sue? The proprietors appear to be a fluctuating body of persons, so that it would be almost impossible to know who they all were.] That is their own default, they may have availed themselves of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts. Lucas v. Beal, 20 L. J. 134, C. P., is applicable, and probably it would be best to procure the actual agreement in Williams v. Marsden.

PARKE, B.—The plaintiffs are the actual contracting parties here in the contract, and the principle is so plain that I do not think it necessary to look into any other contract to decide this; on the face of the contract, they are the actual parties to it and may sue,—the rule is general either that they themselves may sue in their own names, or in the name of the company they represent, of which they are members, shewing that they were the agents duly authorized to enter into such a contract on behalf of the company, and I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs may sue and be sued upon this contract.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. Lucas v. Beal is a different case.

MARTIN, B.—I am also of the same opinion, and the contract seems to me to have been drawn so for the express purpose of suing in their own names if they pleased. I think they are entitled to do so, and of being sued also if it had been necessary.

Rule refused.

Thursday, April 15.

FOWLES v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—This was an action on the case against the defendants as carriers. The declaration alleged a contract to carry certain goods from Bristol to Brompton; that they were, whilst in the course of such carriage, and in the possession of the defendants, thrown down and broken: it also alleged negligence, and contained a count in trover. The first plea was, Not guilty, and that the goods were not delivered and received for the purposes alleged in the declaration. There were also numerous other pleas. At the trial a verdict had been entered for the plaintiff, and the defendants had obtained a rule to set aside the same and enter a verdict for the defendants. Kinglake shewed cause; Butt, contrà. The question was, whether the allegations contained in the declaration were supported by the evidence, as it appeared that the company, by the printed conditions on the back of the receipt for carriage, confined their liability to the limits of their line of railway, and that the evidence proved that these goods had been broken at Brompton whilst being removed by a carrier to the plaintiff's residence there. The Court thought this was a fatal variance, and directed a verdict to be entered for the defendants on that issue. Rule absolute.

BLUCK v. GOMPERTZ. Cur. adv. vult.

OXLEY v. COLLINS.—Lush moved for judgment on a warrant of attorney. Granted.

WISE v. COLLETT.—Humfrey moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict found for the defendant in this case should not be set aside and entered for the plaintiff. The action was brought on a bill of exchange, and was tried before Pollock, C B. The defendant pleaded that the bill was given for a gambling transaction. At the trial the defendant began, and it became necessary to identify the bill in question. No notice to produce had been given, and the plaintiff, therefore, refused to produce it. James, for the defendant, then called the plaintiff's attorney, and asked him whether the bill was not in court. Humfrey objected; but his lordship decided that the question might be put and it was then admitted that the bill was in court, but that the plaintiff refused to produce it, as no notice to produce had been given. The defendant's counsel then asserted his right to give secondary evidence; and the Lord Chief Baron, after consulting the other judges, admitted the secondary evidence, reserving leave to the plaintiff to move to have the verdict entered for him, if such ruling was wrong. It was now contended that the object of the notice to produce was properly laid down in 1 Stark. on Evid. 404. It is there said, that "proof that the adversary or his attorney has the deed or other instrument in court, does not supersede the necessity of notice; for the object of the notice is, not merely to enable the party to bring the instrument itself into court, but also to provide such evidence as the exigency of the case may require to support or impeach the instrument."

Rule nisi granted.

BRADSTREET v. HAMMOND.—Tried at Norwich before Lord Campbell, C.J. when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff on both the issues joined, and a verdict for the defendant on what it was now contended was a mere suggestion, with leave reserved to move to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for four guineas. Byles, Serjt. now moved accordingly. The action was in replevin for taking certain goods at Vauxhall, in the county of Norfolk. Pleas—1. Non cepit; 2. Cepit in alio loco. The seizure was for poor-rate, and the question arose, whether the churchwardens and overseers were entitled to distrain in this place, that is to say, whether this house was situated in Norfolk or Suffolk. Rule nisi granted.

KEY v. COTTESWORTH. Postponed.

HILL v. PHILP. Postponed, that copies of letters may be furnished by defendant.

FRANCIS and WIFE v. DANMAN.—Needham moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment signed herein, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, with costs, on the ground of irregularity. Pleas were delivered on the 13th March, and judgment signed on the 16th. The defendant was under terms to plead issuably. The question was, whether one of the pleas pleaded was an issuable plea. Rule nisi granted.

PHILLIPS v. GOLDSMID.—Willes moved for a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the peremptory undertaking given herein should not be enlarged.

Rule nisi granted.

SAME v. SAME.—Needham moved for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Rule absolute if Willes's motion fails.

GRIFFIN v. HUMFREYS. Postponed.

Friday, April 16.

SUTTON and OTHERS v. HEATH.—Keating, Q.C. moved to set aside the plaintiff's verdict for 365*l.* 9s. tried at Stafford before Wightman, J. and for a new trial, on the ground of surprise upon affidavits. Rule nisi.

SAUNDERS v. DAVIS and WIFE.—Grove moved in this case, tried before Martin, B. at Cardigan, to set aside the defendant's verdict, as being against the evidence and the summing up of the judge. It was an action for money lent, and upon an account stated. Rule nisi.

COPNER v. COPNER.—Tried in Middlesex, before Platt, B. and was an action of assumpsit on two promissory notes. The verdict was found by the jury for the plaintiff, and the defendant having obtained a rule to set aside that verdict, and have a new trial, Davis shewed cause. The question was whether, under the circumstances, a payment made by the defendant's wife was a sufficient payment to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Anderson v. Anderson, Holt's Nisi Prius, 521; Pellithorpe v. ——, 2 Esp. 511; Burn v. Bolton, 2 C. B. 476; Waters v. Tomkins, C. M. & R.; and Cleave v. Jones, and Willes v. Newnham were cited. [PARKE, B. mentioned Foster v. Bates.] Butt and Hindmarsh, contrà, not called upon.

Rule absolute for a new trial; costs to abide the event.

FLORY v. DENNY.—Tried before Adams, Serjt. at Bury, Suffolk: verdict for the plaintiff for 153*l.* 5s. with liberty to move for a nonsuit. O'Malley now moved accordingly. This was an action of trover for a moveable windmill and appurtenances. Pleas—Not guilty, and not possessed. The question was as to the validity of a mortgage, and it was contended that no valid assignment could take place without a deed or delivery. Cur. adv. vult.

HOLMES v. SIXSMITH.—Tried before Cresswell, J.; verdict for the plaintiff. Wilkins, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a nonsuit. Rule nisi granted.

MORGAN v. GAUNTLETT.—Tried before Cresswell, J. at Durham. Wilkins, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict found for the plaintiff was perverse.

Rule nisi granted.

MONTAGUE v. CATER.—Tried before POLLOCK, C.B. at Guildhall; verdict for the plaintiff. Bramwell moved to enter a verdict for the defendant. Rule nisi granted.

Tuesday, April 20.

M'KINNON v. PENSON.—Knowles moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that no cause of action was disclosed on the declaration. Rule nisi granted.

Ex parte E. JENNINGS, Gent. One, &c.—James moved, on behalf of one Blackstone, for a rule calling on Jennings to shew cause why he should not account for 2,000*l.*, 200*l.* and 50*l.* received by him on behalf of Blackstone, and pay over the balance due to him. Rule nisi granted.

WHITMORE v. MORGAN.—Tried before Martin, B. and a special jury at Guildhall: verdict for the plaintiff. James moved, on an affidavit of facts which had occurred since the trial, for a new trial.

Rule nisi granted, to come on as a motion.

NEALE v. LEVY.—Tried before Parke B. at Maidstone. James moved to set aside the nonsuit, and for a new trial.

Rule nisi granted, to come on as a motion.

SELLS v. BOWES.—MEGUISSON v. LADY GLAMIS.—Tried before Parke, B.: verdict for the plaintiff. James moved to enter a verdict for the defendant pursuant to leave reserved. Replevin.—Avowry.—Rent due and in arrear. Pleas in bar. Non tenuit.—Rien in arrear. The question was the same in both cases, and was, how far a parol demise operated as a demise of tithes. Rule nisi granted.

HILL v. PHILP.—This case, which was tried before the Chief Baron at the sittings in Middlesex after last Term, when a verdict was returned for the defendant, has several times been brought before the Court. It was an action brought against the keeper of a lunatic asylum for cruelty and improper treatment, and there was also a count in trover. The Lord Chief Baron told the jury that if the wife of the plaintiff gave the directions contained in certain letters produced, and the defendant's opinion went honestly with hers, the defendant was justified, and not liable to an action. That, it was contended, was wrong; and there was also a question raised as to whether the defendant was justified in delivering certain books and papers of the plaintiff to his wife. James moved for a new trial, on the grounds of misdirection, improper reception, and rejection of evidence. Rule nisi granted.

GANT v. GROOM.—Tried before Coleridge, J. at Chelmsford: verdict for the plaintiff. Shee, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Granted.

SAME v. SAME.—Shee, Serjt. also moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the declaration was insufficient.

Rule nisi granted, Channell, Serjt. to have similar rules in the case moved by him.

COLQUHOUN v. SILVESTER.—Tried before Lord Campbell, C.J. at Derby: verdict for plaintiff, for 206*l.* Macaulay moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was perversely against evidence.

Rule nisi granted.

WARD v. WARD.—Verdict for plaintiff; damages, 40s. Macaulay moved to enter a verdict for the defendant. The action was in trespass. Plea—Right of way by prescription.

EXCHEQUER.

He contended that nonuser by a tenant could not affect the reversioner. Rule nisi granted.

JOLLY v. HANCOCK and ANOTHER.—Tried before Wightman, J. at Stafford: verdict for plaintiff; damages, 30*l.* Alexander moved to enter a verdict for the defendant. The action was to recover a deposit paid on the purchase of an estate, and the question arose whether the certificate on the examination of a married woman, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, must be given up to the purchaser, or whether the memorandum of the commissioners on the back of the deed of acknowledgment was sufficient. Rule nisi granted.

PERRY v. DOIDGE and ANOTHER.—Tried before Erle, J. Devon: verdict for plaintiff; damages, 25*l.* Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. This was an action of slander, and the only question was whether the communication was privileged. Cur. adv. vult.

BRADSTREET v. HAMMOND.—In this case, Palmer moved for a cross rule to set aside the verdict entered for the plaintiff on two issues joined, and to enter a verdict for the defendant on the third issue, which the plaintiff contended was a mere suggestion. Rule nisi.

PONTING v. WATSON.—Tried before Talfourd, J. at Somerset Assizes: verdict for plaintiff, for 20*l.* Slade moved for a new trial. Action for libel and malicious prosecution. The question was, whether malice was established, and whether the law was not put in motion by the magistrates and not by the defendant. Rule nisi granted.

COE v. PLATT.—Tried before Cresswell, J. verdict for the defendant. Atherton moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter the verdict for the plaintiff. The question arose under 7 Vict. c. 15, s. 21, and was, whether an upright shaft connected with and worked by an horizontal shaft, the former being in motion, but not for manufacturing purposes, and the latter being in motion for manufacturing purposes, was within the meaning of that section. Rule nisi granted.

EVANS v. ATTWOOD.—H. Davison moved for across rule for a new trial, in the event of Crowder succeeding on the rule obtained by him. Granted.

GIBSON v. MARSDEN.—Brewer moved for a rule to compute. Granted.

COLBERT v. BRITTAIN.—Pulling moved for a distringas. Granted.

SAME v. SAME. Granted.

MEYLER v. KEIRAN.—Fisher moved to rescind order of Platt, B. This was an action on an Irish judgment, and the order was to set aside defendant's application for security for costs, the plaintiff undertaking to deduct any costs from the amount of the judgment recovered against the defendant. It was now argued that the judgment might be assigned. (9 Geo. 2, c. 5, Irish stat; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 19 L.J.; Limerick, &c v. Fraser, 4 Bing.)

Rule to shew cause why, if the plaintiff should not assign the judgment, or a part of it, as security, he should not find security for costs, granted.

Saturday, April 17.

ATKINSON v. STEVENS.

Judgment for the defendant, on the ground of the insufficiency of the declaration, with leave to the plaintiff to amend on payment of costs.

PELICHET v. LOADER.—Tried before the Lord Chief Baron, at the sittings in Middlesex after last Term: verdict for the plaintiff. Knowles moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. The declaration charged the defendant, an attorney, with negligence in putting out 350*l.* the money of the plaintiff. The defendant and his father had always acted as a friend of the plaintiff, and had never been in the habit of making her any charge. The money had been lent to Sir Gregory Lewin, on the security of his promissory-note, accompanied by the deposit of certain shares in the Sheffield and Retford Banking Company, and the Sheffield and Manchester Railway Company. The Lord Chief Baron had left these question to the jury—1. Had defendant been employed as an attorney? The jury found he had. 2. Could the defendant have made out a bill? The jury found he could, and have required payment; and, 3. Was there such negligence as he was responsible for as an attorney? The jury found there was. It was now contended that the question of employment as an attorney never arose; that the declaration did not charge the defendant as attorney, and that therefore the true question was not left to the jury. Rule nisi granted.

JACKSON v. CHICHESTER.—Tried at Liverpool before Cresswell, J.: verdict for the plaintiff. This was a scire facias on a judgment for 200*l.* The defendant pleaded a discharge under the Insolvent Act, in Ireland. In the schedule, the plaintiff was described as "Mr. Jackson, merchant-tailor, Casson-street, Liverpool, England—about 100*l.* contracted 1844. Mr. Jackson holds my bill for about 60*l.*" The defendant's names were George Augustus Hamilton Chichester, and he was insolvent under the name of Hamilton Chichester. The judge thought the identity of the plaintiff, and his debt in the schedule of the defendant as the insolvent, was not made out, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff, reserving leave to move to enter it for the defendant if the Court should think differently. Watson now moved accordingly. He cited 3 & 4 Vict. c. 107, s. 57; Forman v. Drew, 4 B. & C. 15; Wood v. Jowett, 8. V. 20; Reeves v. Lambert, 8 V. 214. Rule nisi granted.

EVANS v. ATTWOOD.—Trespass. Tried at Cardigan, before Martin, B.: verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 60*s.* Crowder moved to enter a verdict for the defendant. The only question was, whether the plaintiff had such a title as would support an action of trespass. Rule nisi granted.

FOQUET v. MOOR.—Tried before Talfourd, J: verdict for the defendant. Kinglake moved to set aside the verdict, and enter the same for the plaintiff, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, there being no evidence to go to the jury; or for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule nisi granted.

THOYTS and ANOTHER (Assignees of GODDARD, an Insolvent) v. HOBBS.—Tried before Wightman, J. at the last assizes for Berks: verdict for plaintiff for 400*l.* Keating moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. This was an action for money had and received. Plea—General issue. The question arose on the validity of a bill of sale to the defendant, executed by Goddard fifteen months before his insolvency. The judge, on referring to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 19, had directed the jury that if at the time the insolvent made the bill of sale he did it with a view to petitioning the Insolvent Debtors Court at any time when the necessity should arise, they would find for the plaintiff. Rule nisi granted.

Monday, April 19.

OSGOLD v. COLLIS.—Tried at Winchester before Erle, J. Crowder, Q.C. moved to set aside the defendant's verdict, and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

HADEN v. LANCASTER. Cur. adv. vult.

HARTLEY v. HADLEY.—Sir A. Cockburn moved in this case (tried before the Chief Baron in Middlesex) to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, on the ground of misdirection and that the verdict was against the evidence. The action was for the infringement of a patent. Rule nisi.

GRAY v. LUTHWAITE.—Murphy, Serjt. moved in this case (tried before Alderson, B.) to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, as being against the evidence, and for a new trial. Rule nisi.

Wednesday, April 21.

VINCENT v. ZULUETA.—Bramwell moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to reduce the plaintiff's verdict by 1,400*l.* Rule refused.

OLIVER v. ABBOTT.—H. Hill moved herein. To stand over for inquiry.

PASCOE v. HILL.—Shee, Serjt. moved to set aside the defendant's verdict as being against the evidence. The cause was tried in Middlesex before Martin, B. and as he thought it quite a question for the jury, which they had decided, he was not dissatisfied with it. Rule refused.

ROSKRUGE v. CADDY.—Tried in Cornwall before Erle, J. The defendant obtained a verdict, with leave reserved to the plaintiff to enter it for him for four guineas. It was an action of replevin, avowry for rent in arrear, with pleas denying the tenancy and of any rent in arrear. By an agreement of the 24th September, 1849, defendant agreed to accept the plaintiff as his tenant for seven years (this was void as a lease, not being by deed in compliance with the statute), at the rent of 80*l.* a-year, but to be varied according to the price of corn. Plaintiff, in the second year of his tenancy, was distrained upon for rent up to Midsummer, which was clearly wrong, the tenancy being a yearly tenancy, commencing at Michaelmas, and the rent payable at that time. Defendant, finding he was wrong, abandoned part, and sold beasts of the plough, although more than sufficient to satisfy all the rent could have been otherwise taken. On the 30th September, 1851, he distrained again, and that is the distress complained of. The avowry did not set out the rent as variable according to the price of corn, or the agreement upon which the land was held; for although it was void as a lease, yet the holding must be taken to be upon the terms contained in the agreement as a tenancy from year to year. The avowry was, therefore, clearly bad. This was raised at the trial, but there no amendment was made, although an opportunity was offered, the rent also was uncertain, and it was doubtful whether a distress under the circumstances could be taken. Rule nisi.

SAME CASE.—Collier, moved for a cross-rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and cited Daniel v. Gracey, 6 Q.B. Rule refused.

BRANDON v. SEWELL.—Humphrey, moved to set aside the defendant's verdict obtained before Martin, B. in Middlesex, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, and on affidavits. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. BENHAM v. BENHAM.—Collier moved in this case, pursuant to leave given at the trial in Hampshire, to set aside the verdict found for the lessor of the plaintiff: the question arose upon the construction of the will of William Beavan. Rule nisi.

ALLCHIN v. EAST UNION RAILWAY COMPANY.—Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the plaintiff's verdict for 1,095*l.* and for a new trial, on the ground of irregularity and misdirection, or to arrest the judgment. Rule refused.

SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE LONDON AND SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Sir A. COCKBURN moved to set aside the plaintiffs' verdict pursuant to leave.

Rule nisi. The Court suggested that it had better be made a special case.

LANDMAN v. ENTWISTLE.—Sir A. COCKBURN, moved to set aside the defendant's verdict pursuant to leave, and to enter it for the plaintiff for 350*l.* The plaintiff was an engineer, and had brought this action against the defendant, as one of the directors of a railway between Greenwich and the north of Kent, for services rendered by the plaintiff as engineer. Rule nisi.

BARON and OTHERS v. ROSCOW and ANOTHER.—Atherton, moved in this case, tried before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool, to set aside the defendants' verdict, on the ground of surprise, and on affidavits. Rule nisi.

NORMAN v. MARCHANT.—Hawkins moved, under the County Courts Act, that the party here be now entitled to his costs, the Courts of Q.B. and C.B. agreeing in opinion the word "may," in the Act, should be interpreted as "must." Rule nisi.

BROWN v. WARD.—Welsby moved to set aside the defendant's verdict pursuant to leave to enter it for the plaintiff for two guineas, the amount of the replevin bond. Rule refused.

WARD v. BROMHEAD.—Crasby moved to enter satisfaction on the roll. Rule nisi.

WILKES v. KAYE.—Phipson moved in this case, tried at Stafford, to set aside the defendant's verdict, on the ground of surprise and on affidavits; it was an action of trespass. The COURT suggested an arrangement, as the expense of the motion, new trial, &c. would probably exceed the value of the land. Rule nisi.

ROLAND v. BOYCE.—Tried before the undersheriff of Middlesex. Lush moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection; the action was by the payee or maker of a note for 10*l.* Pleas—As to 3*l.* 5*s.* payment before action; to the further maintenance of the action - payment of the residue, with the costs of the action to the time of payment; the debt had been paid, but it appeared all the costs had not. Rule nisi.

MELLERSH v. RIPPEN.—Lush moved, pursuant to leave, for a new trial, on the ground that the notice of dishonour given in the action by the indorsee and drawer of a bill was insufficient; he referred to Beachum v. Cash, 1 Dowl. & Ry. N.P. Rep. 3. Rule refused.

Jan. 26 and 28, and April 19.

MILLER v. SALOMONS.

Jews—Members of Parliament—The form of oath required of members before sitting in the House of Commons.

The oath of abjuration required by statute 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, to be taken by Members of Parliament on taking their seats in the House of Commons, must be taken in its entirety, as set out in that statute. Where, therefore, a Jew claimed to take, and did take, such oath, which was binding upon his conscience, but omitted the words "on the true faith of a Christian," and afterwards sat and voted in the House of Commons:

Held (by Pollock, C.B. Parke and Alderson, BB.), that although the oath was so taken by the Jew, because that form of oath alone was binding on his conscience, yet he was liable to the penalties imposed on all who should presume to sit and vote as members without having taken the oath of abjuration in its entirety as set out in that statute. Martin, B. dissentiente.

The action was in debt for three penalties of 500*l.* each, alleged to have been incurred by the defendant by reason of his having sat and voted three times as member for Greenwich, without having previously taken the oath of abjuration in the form prescribed by law. The defendant pleaded that he did not owe the money, and the cause came on to be tried before Martin, B. at the sittings after last Michaelmas Term, when a special verdict was agreed upon. The special verdict found that the name of her present Majesty had been substituted in the form of the oath tendered to the defendant, by the authority of the House of Commons, in lieu of that of King William, and that the defendant had taken that oath, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian," after having taken the oaths of allegiance and supremacy on the Old Testament, as the form of oath binding on his conscience, and that he had then sat and voted.

Channell, Serjt. (with whom was M'Namara) for the plaintiff. The defendant had not, under these facts, taken the oath of abjuration as required by law, and was, therefore, liable in the penalties sought to be recovered by the plaintiff. He would premise that it could not be disputed that the statutes authorising the oath of abjuration were still in force, and that the defendant, though a Jew, was bound to take it. There were only two questions here—first, assuming that the defendant was bound to take this oath could he be properly sworn on the Old Testament? and secondly, assuming him to have been so sworn properly, as he omitted the words "on the true faith of a Christian," could he be said to have taken the oath at all? In arguing these two questions the attention of the Court would be directed to two classes of statutes—those, first, which imposed on members the duty of taking the oaths of abjuration and supremacy; and, secondly, certain other statutes exempting certain classes from the necessity of taking them, either in part or in whole; these again being subdivided into those affecting Jews alone, or in common with other subjects, and those which applied to other classes alone, such as Quakers, Moravians, and Roman Catholics; and, finally, he should draw attention to the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, which was general in its character. Observing this division, the first statute he would cite was the 1 Eliz. c. 1, the object of which was to restore the supremacy to the Crown. The 19th section of this Act gives a form for the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and concludes with the peculiar expression "So help me God and the contents of this book;" the oath being termed a "corporal oath upon the Holy Evangelists." Then came the 5 Eliz. c. 1, which repeats the same form of oath, the 16th section referring to the oath required of members. The argument from these statutes is, that the oath required by members was a Christian oath, to be taken by Christians on the Holy Evangelists. The 3 Jas. 1, c. 4, followed, which contained the germ of the present oath of abjuration. The 13th section speaks of it as an oath to be taken on the Holy Evangelists, and the persons taking it are required to be such as confess, or do not deny, that they have taken the holy sacrament within twelve months. The 15th section gives the form of oath very similar to the present oath, concluding with the words "on the true faith of a Christian," and it was called the oath of "obedience and allegiance." [MARTIN, B.—What was to become of Jews, then?] They were not contemplated at that time as being likely to offer themselves to take such oaths. The plaintiff contends that the oath is imposed by statute with respect to Christians alone; that it must be taken on the Holy Evangelists, and by Christians who had taken the sacrament. It is true that members of Parliament were not there included in terms, but the 7 Jac. 1, c. 6, extends the oath to them, as also to all subjects, and the 30 Car. 2, c. 2, superadded the necessity of signing a declaration against Transubstantiation. Pausing here to inquire into the position of a member of Parliament in those days, it will be found that he had to take the oath of supremacy and allegiance, and to subscribe the declaration against Transubstantiation. Can any one doubt, then, that the Legislature had imposed a Christian oath, to be taken by a Christian—Christianity, then, as now, being a part of the law of the land? or that the Legislature meant to exact a test of Christianity from those required to take such an oath under such forms and circumstances? [Alderson, B.—I cannot understand how any one can deny the Transubstantiation in the Lord's Supper who does not admit the Lord whose supper it is.] It was difficult to conceive such a state of things, and it followed that the Legislature meant to impose an oath on Christians; and that being so, it is for the defendant to shew that the statute so imposing that oath is repealed as far as he is concerned. The 1 Wm. & M. c. 1, then followed, which repealed the 13 Car. 2 as to the members, and substituted other oaths, but they were to be taken in the same manner and form as the former oaths had been. The 6th section, in giving the oath, omits the words, "on the true faith of a Christian;" but the oath being required to be taken as the other was, is not the less a Christian oath. The 1 Wm. & M. c. 8, is said to have abrogated the former oaths altogether; but it is odd that the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 9 (not referred to in the discussions which have taken place elsewhere), still mentions them; and the statute of Wm. & M. c. 8, while it declares that no one shall be called on to take the repealed oaths, gives in the 3rd section new oaths, which by the 5th section are required to be taken before the same person as the former oaths are, and gives a form of oath of allegiance and supremacy very much in the same sense, concluding, "so help me God," and omitting the words, "on the true faith of a Christian." So matters stood till the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, which imposed the oath of abjuration in the form now required, though it has undergone alteration to the names of persons in whom the succession to the Crown was limited down to the 6 Geo. 3. In no other respect has it been altered, that change being rendered advisable on the death of the Pretender. This form is given in the 10th section, and the 9th section gives the penalty. This was followed by the 1 Anne, stat. 1, c. 22, and the 6 Anne, c. 7, which latter again altered the oath with reference to the Electress Sophia and Prince George, the 20th section giving the oath with a blank for the name of the sovereign, concluding with the expression "on the true faith of a Christian." This was succeeded by the 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, which carried out the alterations contained in the statute of 6 Anne, and introduced three oaths, namely, of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and in the 16th section gave the penalties now sued for. That Act enacts that no member shall sit or vote till he shall have taken this oath, together with the declaration against transubstantiation, in such a manner and form as it had been formerly taken; so that there has not been any real alteration. On the death of the Pretender in 1765, the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, was passed, which gives the oath as before in substance, and requires it to be taken as before. We say that under this Act the defendant was called on to take this oath of abjuration in its entirety, and that as he did not so take it he is liable to these penalties. The next class of statutes are now to be passed in review, and among them stand first those affecting the Jews themselves. Of these no printed copies are accessible save those in the library of the Inner Temple and the Parliamentary Rolls; but it is necessary to refer to them minutely, because great stress is laid upon them on behalf of the defendant. On examination, however, it is not apprehended that they will defeat the view taken of the other Acts by the plaintiff. The first of these is the 9 Geo. 1, c. 24, which was passed under these circumstances:—The statutes imposing the oath of abjuration on all subjects were followed by others which relieved parties who registered their estates from the penalties of the Abjuration Acts; and then comes the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, which extends the time for taking such oaths and making such registration, and exempts certain persons from registering. Up to a certain point this is purely an Act of indemnity, there being a provision applicable to Quakers, and then follows a clause relating to Jews, and permitting them to take those oaths, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian." It will be argued that this is a conclusive exemption in favour of Jews; but it is not so, for its benefits are confined to the oath prescribed by 9 Geo. 1, which required it to be taken by all the king's subjects above eighteen years, at Quarter Sessions, or the alternative of registration. The true effect, then, of this Act is that the Legislature for that limited purpose permitted Jews to take this oath in that form, but it goes no further, and gives no general exemption to Jews from taking the oath in the form required of members of Parliament. The next statute is 13 Geo. 2, c. 7, for the naturalisation of foreign Protestants, where the same provision is made as to Jews; and that shews again only a limited exemption for a limited purpose. To this as to all other statutes the same observation refers. The oath required of members is a Christian oath, and is not affected by these peculiar provisions. Then come the Acts relating to Quakers, an examination of which will shew the great care and accuracy used by the Legislature when seeking to exempt certain classes from oaths imposed on all generally by former Acts. The 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 1, is the first of these, and gives a penalty against all Quakers refusing to take oaths; but that was followed by the Toleration Act (1 William & Mary, sess. 1, c. 18), the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 34; 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 6, making perpetual the permission to Quakers to affirm, which was carried out further by 8 Geo. 1, c. 6; the 22 Geo. 2, c. 4; and 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, which extended the former Acts to criminal as well as to civil cases; and, finally, the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 49, passed in 1833, allowed Quakers to affirm in all cases where by any Acts an oath was required before. [Martin, B.—Mr. Pease had been elected before that Act, and had taken his seat.] Yes; but he was liable to penalties if he had voted without taking the proper oaths, though no action was brought, and he was no doubt well advised in seeking to protect himself. It has not been argued that Quakers were not exempt; they have been referred to expressly to shew with what care the Legislature expresses itself when it seeks to exempt any class from the necessity of taking these oaths. The real importance of the Act of Wm. 4 is, that it introduces into the affirmation the assertion of the affirmant being a Quaker, thus explaining its object and foundation. The next statute is the 10 Geo. 4, c. 7, which expressly repeals the necessity for signing the declaration against transubstantiation, and qualifies Roman Catholics to sit as members in other respects. The last Act is the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, which is entitled "An Act to remove Doubts as to the Validity of certain Oaths," and is that on which the defendant will, no doubt, rely. But it does not repeal the oath of abjuration. The contention of the plaintiff is not that in Courts of Law, where the statute law does not impose any particular form of oath, a Jew or Christian may not take an oath in that form which he declares to be binding on his conscience, and it is not intended to dispute the authority of Ormichund v. Barker, as reported in 1 Atkins, 19, but simply its application to the present case. The plaintiff's case is, that this oath of abjuration is a Christian oath, to be taken by a Christian, and if the Legislature has imposed a particular form of oath, none but the Legislature can alter or dispense with it. It has been shewn that the first Act required the oath to be taken on the Holy Evangelists, and on the true faith of a Christian. The oaths of allegiance and abjuration were the same. Then came the declaration against transubstantiation, all which must mean, if it means anything, that the oath was required to be taken by a Christian, who was called upon, in the most solemn way, to pledge his veracity by avowing his true faith as a Christian, and pledging his belief in Jesus Christ. No one could take such an oath who did not so believe and pledge himself, and though the oath was altered by 13 Wm. 3, it was still to be taken in the same manner and in the same forms as before. The first argument, then, is that this is a statutable oath intended to be a Christian oath—which cannot be altered in any way. Now, how is this affected by the case referred to of Ormichund v. Barker, where it was held that a Gentoo might be sworn after the fashion and form of his nation? It is contended that that decision does not impeach the assertion that this particular oath is a Christian one, but only decides that a Gentoo may be sworn and give evidence in India in the manner which is binding on him. In the next place, does the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, at all affect the position of the plaintiff? Certainly not. It contains no allusion to any repeal of former Acts, and rather points to oaths in courts of law, where it may be that oaths of abjuration may be taken by officers, and to which cases the Act may well refer, without affecting the oath of members. And every word may receive effect in that statute without holding that it repeals the former Acts. The words omitted by the defendant he will contend were not of the essence. But if it can be shewn that they were so when the Acts were passed, the question will arise whether the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, has repealed them, and the defendant's duty will be to satisfy the Court of that proposition. It is said that those Acts were aimed at Papists. Be it so. That only shews that the Legislature strove to the utmost to pledge every member to the Protestant faith, and the very places in which the words omitted by the defendant are found shew their importance, and that they were meant to form part of the oath itself. Whether, indeed, Jews were in contemplation at that time is immaterial. The question is, what was the law at the time? Everybody was just before that bound to attend worship in his parish church, and to subscribe the declaration against transubstantiation. It may be that there is Christianity without Protestantism, but there cannot be Protestantism without Christianity. It is based on it; and Christianity was, therefore, well made the test of qualification to all offices whatever. The Test Act was repealed, doubtless, but that affords no argument that this oath should be repealed. This is, indeed, the question in this case. But the defendant may urge that the 6 Geo. 3, on which we sue, has exempted Jews, because it says that the oath shall be taken with all the "benefits and savings," as in the former Acts, and that in the interval the 9 Geo. 1 and 10 Geo. 1 had passed. But they were temporary Acts, and had ceased to exist; and even if otherwise, it must be remembered that they had a particular object while the exemption there relied on does not go far enough. The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to judgment.

Sir F. Kelly (with whom were Willes and Goldsmid) appeared for the defendant.—He ventured to submit that there were several grounds on which the action could not be maintained; and he would first remark that it was an action for penalties founded on penal statutes, which the Courts had ever adopted the practice of construing in favour of the subject when they were involved in any doubt. It was, moreover, an action on statutes which, if in force at all, would apply to certain classes of her Majesty's subjects with fearful effect. Jews were privileged to serve in Parliament; but if this action were to succeed, and these penalties were to be enforced, the result would be that Jews might be called upon by their countrymen to take their seats in Parliament at the risk and peril of taking oaths not binding on them, or they would be driven to relinquish those seats. On the contrary, these statutes, he submitted, ought to be so construed as to give the greatest possible amount of liberty of conscience to the subject. In order to decide for the plaintiff, the Court must be satisfied clearly that the words apply to the defendant, and that the Legislature plainly intended to apply the penalties to such a case. Such a construction amounts to a disqualification of all Jews; it amounts to a disqualification to sue, to be executor or guardian, and imposes on them the most fearful penalties and disabilities. The Court will not, therefore, enforce that construction of these Acts for which the plaintiff contends, unless they see that the words of the Acts apply expressly to this case; and on behalf of the defendant he begged to submit four distinct and specific grounds on which he hoped to satisfy the Court that they ought to give him their judgment. In the first place, he would contend that the 6th of Geo. 3, c. 53, was no longer in force to impose the oath of abjuration on members of Parliament. On the death of George III.—or, at all events, on that of George IV.—the power to administer it ceased in the officer of the House of Commons, by whom the verdict found that this oath was tendered to the defendant. That officer had no power to take upon himself to alter the oath prescribed by the 6th of Geo. 3, but the oath ought to be given in the whole terms as prescribed therein. That oath was one of abjuration of the descendants of the Pretender in favour of "our sovereign Lord King George," and it would be found that on every occasion when that oath was changed, the Legislature itself had interfered by an express enactment. Therefore, there was not now, in the absence of any such interference by the Legislature, any authority to administer that oath substituting "Victoria" for "George." In the next place, the defendant, if this oath be still in force, was at liberty to take it omitting the words in question, on the ground that wherever the Legislature imposes on any man the duty of taking an oath, it not only authorises but requires him to take it only in that form which is binding on him—swearing indeed to the whole substance, but in such form of language and with such ceremonies as he declares to be binding on him. If any other rule prevails it is where the form is devised as a test of any particular principles. Thirdly, the defendant would contend that under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, he was by necessary implication authorised and bound to take the oath as he did; and fourthly, and finally, it would be argued that under the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, which had not expired when 6 Geo. 4 was passed, but was in force, the authority to administer the oath was kept alive and terminated in 1766, or beyond the statute 6 Geo. 3, c. 53; thus giving a meaning and force to it which, as is contended by the defendant, is qualified by 10 Geo. 1. Before entering on these points, it was impossible not to express surprise that the plaintiff's counsel should have assumed in argument, that the oath of abjuration was still required by law to be taken, when the very essential point of the case denied that proposition. As to the first ground put forward for claiming the judgment of the Court, it is clear that the several Acts referred to must be viewed according to the particular times and circumstances at which they were passed. The form in which the Legislature framed the oath in the statute 6 Geo. 3, for altering the oath of abjuration on the death of the Pretender, shews this. The plaintiff argues that there is a power to alter an oath; but the defendant relies on Lord Coke, who in his 2nd Institute, when commenting on the statute of Westminster, defines an oath, and says no oath allowed by statute or common law can be altered but by Act of Parliament. The Commons of England have agreed by their representatives to the imposition of a particular form of oath here, for which there is no authority by Act of Parliament. The allegation that "Victoria" was substituted for "George" ought to rest on the authority of an Act of Parliament, but the House of Commons alone has no power so to alter any oath. Even if there were no dispute as to the succession, no such power can be exercised; but suppose the case of a disputed succession to the Crown of these realms—suppose the birth of twins, Albert and Edward, and it was impossible to decide who was the elder of the two, the House of Commons might then by altering the oath take upon themselves to decide the question. The name of the sovereign is of the very essence and substance of the oath. All the Acts on this subject, down to 6 Geo. 3, shew that each was meant to be but temporary, and on each change of reign a new Act was passed to alter the oath in accordance with that altered state of things. The statute of 13 Wm. 3 is applicable only to his reign; so that of 1 Anne to hers, and 6 Anne provides for the substitution of "Sophia" or "George," according as the fact might be, a blank being left, and in the event George succeeded to the throne, whereupon the blank was filled up with his name. In his reign no new Act was wanted, and the oath so remained unaltered in form till 6 Geo. 3, when the change was made by reason of the death of the Pretender. On this statute this action is founded, but that Act prescribes the taking of an oath "in the form therein set forth," and in no other. The only legal authority existing is to administer an oath that "King George is the rightful Sovereign of these realms." Can that form be altered without an Act? [ALDERSON, B.—Your argument is, that the oath remained operative during the reign in which it was imposed, and no longer.] Unquestionably, and it is certainly debateable, whether it be the true contention or not. If it be doubtful, the defendant is entitled to judgment on this point, upon the well-recognised principle of construing penal statutes. No doubt there is some weight to be given to the long practice of using this oath, but that should rather be attributed to inadvertency than to mistake. All that can be said of it is, that every one became so accustomed to administer the oath in the name of King George, reign after reign, that they took upon themselves afterwards, when a William ascended the throne, to alter the name of the sovereign. The next Act is the 10 Geo. 1,—the Roman Catholic Act—which, though it may be cited against the defendant, is in fact in his favour. The oath there prescribed was made perpetual and applicable to all the succeeding reigns, so that the necessity for altering the oath in each reign is borne out by this very statute; and it is therefore clear that an oath once imposed by an Act can only be altered by the same power. The statute giving this oath to George, must receive its primal meaning in this case, and it cannot be read as imposing an oath in favour of George and all his successors in all time to come, which is the contention of the plaintiff here. That oath was temporary, and if the object of the Legislature of the day was satisfied with the primâ facie meaning of the words, why should we now take upon ourselves to extend that limited construction, and that, too, in order to impose a penalty on the subject and a restriction on liberty of conscience? On the one hand are the plain words of the Act and the practice of the Legislature to change the oath in every reign; and opposed to those is nothing but the practice of the House of Commons, for thirty years, to administer the oath without any such authority as the defendant contends to be necessary, and that practice creeping in only because no one's attention was ever drawn to the question. On this first ground, therefore, it is contended that the 6 Geo. 3, is not applicable to the defendant, and that there was no authority to administer to him this oath in any shape. The second proposition was, that under the Act of 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, upon which this action was founded, the oath of abjuration might be taken by a Jew with the omission of the words "on the true faith of a Christian." This depended, however, upon whether the provisions of 10 Geo. 1 continued and remained in force at the time the Act of 6 Geo. 3 was passed. The plaintiff supposed that the Act 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, had expired; but he would shew, that by a series of Acts to 6 Geo. 3, which imposed the oath now required to be taken, the Act of 10 Geo. 1 had been kept in force. The 6 Geo. 3 enacted, that from and after the 4th of June, 1766, the oath of abjuration prescribed in 10 Geo. 1 should be taken and subscribed within a limited time, but with benefit of the same savings, provisoes, and indemnities contained in any Acts then subsisting. The question was then, whether the Act 10 Geo. 1, which allowed the omission from the oath of abjuration, when it was taken by a Jew, of the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," had ceased and expired, or whether it had been continued, and was in force at the time of passing the 6th of Geo. 3, c. 53. [POLLOCK, C.B. inquired for a printed copy of the Act 10 Geo. 1, c 4, and was informed by Sir F. Kelly that no copies could be obtained at the Queen's printer's, although there was a copy in the library of the Inner Temple.] The oath of abjuration which, in its present form, was introduced by the 1st of Geo. 1, c. 13, was repeated in the 9th Geo. 1, c. 24, which extended the time allowed for taking the oath. A further extension was afforded by the 10th of Geo. 1, c. 4, the 17th section of which allowed the oath of abjuration to be taken by Jews, with the omission of the words "on the true faith of a Christian." The provisions of the 10 Geo. 1, amounted to a legislative declaration that the words "on the true faith of a Christian" were no necessary or essential part of the oath of abjuration. The oath of abjuration consisted of many parts, as a declaration of allegiance and obedience to the reigning sovereign, an abjuration of the right and title of the Pretender and his family, &c.; but it did not contain as any part of the thing sworn to the fact or statement that the party swearing was a Christian, nor was it the meaning and intent of the Legislature to impose that oath, or any part of it, upon any person as a test of Christianity. If the oath had been intended as a test of Christianity, it was impossible that the Legislature should have authorised its administration to a Jew. There was a series of Acts after the 10 Geo. 1, from the 2 Geo. 2, c. 31, to the 6 Geo. 3, c. 7, enlarging the time allowed for taking the oath of abjuration, which was, by the last-named Act, extended to the 24th of November, 1766, so that the time thus allowed was carried beyond the passing of the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53; therefore, the 10 Geo. 1 having sanctioned the omission of the words "on the true faith of a Christian," when the oath of abjuration was taken by members of the Jewish religion, and all the succeeding Acts referring to the same identical oath, the effect of these Acts was, that from the time of the 10 Geo. 1, the oath of abjuration, as taken by members of the Jewish religion, would be taken with that omission; whenever the law of this country imposed upon any subject of the realm the duty of taking an oath, the law not only permitted but required that that oath should be taken in such manner and form as to bind the conscience of the swearer. The oath of abjuration was not one which might or might not be taken, according to a person's pleasure or interests, but in many cases it became a matter of necessity on the part of members of the Jewish religion to take this oath, and the question was whether the law which compelled a Jew to take the oath compelled him to take it in a way which would subject him to the guilt at once of blasphemy and of perjury. It appeared from 1 Geo. 1, c. 13, and from the recital of the other Acts of Parliament, that their sole object was to secure the person and government of the sovereign, and the succession to the crown, and to extinguish the hopes of the Pretender and his family, and that these Acts had no religious aspect or tendency whatever. It was, in the first instance, provided that all persons holding public offices should publicly take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and afterwards it was enacted that these oaths should be taken by all members of the House of Commons before they could sit and vote. It must be borne in mind, that though it was competent to any man to accept or reject an office of profit, a person elected a member of the House of Commons became a member of Parliament, with all the duties and liabilities, as well as with all the privileges of the position, whether he would or no. A person so elected could not reject the office; he was a member by the election, and was subject to the jurisdiction of the House, even though he might have been returned against his own will. [POLLOCK, C.B.—A person does not become a member of the House of Commons until he has taken his seat.] He begged, with great respect, to differ from his lordship. He apprehended that, although a member of Parliament was, by the express terms of the statute, prevented from voting till he had taken the oaths, he was in every other respect whatsoever as much a member of Parliament before he had taken the oaths, whether with regard to duties, liabilities, or privileges, as he was after he had taken the oaths. It was stated in Dwarris on Statutes, supported by references to Hatsell, that, notwithstanding all the forms which were introductory to a member taking his seat in the House of Commons, a person, when returned—though he might not have taken his seat—was to all intents a member, except as regarded the right of voting, and was entitled to the same privileges as every other member. He begged their lordships' attention to the 10th and 11th sections of the Act 1 Geo. 1, c. 13. The 10th section empowered two justices of the peace, or any other persons specially appointed by the Crown, to administer and tender the oath of abjuration to any person or persons whom they might suspect to be dangerous or disaffected to his Majesty, and if the person to whom the oath was so tendered should refuse to take it, such person should be judged a Popish recusant convict, and liable to the penalties of præmunire. So that not only at the time when the Act was passed, but at the present day any two justices of the peace, if they suspected that any member of the Jewish religion was disaffected, might call upon him to take the oath of abjuration, and if he refused to take it, he became liable to the penalties of præmunire. The 11th section of the Act was, however, still stronger. It provided that two or more justices of the peace might, without any cause at all, summon any person to appear before them to take the oaths mentioned in the Act; and if such persons should not appear before the justices, or at the Quarter Sessions, they should be esteemed and adjudged Popish recusants convict. The question their lordships had to determine, then, was, whether it was the intention of the Legislature, and whether it was the true legal effect and construction of the Acts of Parliament, that this oath, when tendered to a member of the Jewish religion, should be sworn in such manner and form as might be conformable to and binding upon the conscience of the swearer. If the Court held that the oath must be taken by Jews with the words "on the true faith of a Christian," either the Jew must take the oath, using those words, and so commit blasphemy and perjury at once, or he must refuse to take the oath, and so be liable to all the penalties imposed upon Popish recusants convict. It was absurd to suppose that the Legislature, when imposing an oath of loyalty and allegiance which persons of all classes were to be compelled to take, could have intended to frame that oath in such terms that one class, at least, of the community would be unable to take it. Any one who looked into the recitals or enactments of the various Acts of Parliament from the Reformation to the present time must be convinced that all the oaths and tests which were imposed were directed solely and exclusively against Papists, and that it was never the intention of the Legislature to affect the Jews at all. After analysing the oath of abjuration, and contending that the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," formed no part of the oath or thing sworn to, he said, if it could be shewn that the Legislature intended to impose this oath as a test of Christianity, and intended that the person taking it should swear himself to be a Christian, he would admit that these were words of substance, and ought not to be rejected. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Unless the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" were the form of oath, there was no form at all, for in the stat. 6 Geo. 3, the addition of the words "So help me God," did not occur.] He was just about to mention that fact. In the 6 Geo. 3, which contained the oath as it was now administered, and upon which exclusively this action was founded, there was no form of swearing at all, unless they took the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" to be the form of oath. If the construction contended for on the other side were the true construction, the Acts of 1 Geo. 1 and 6 Geo. 3, amounted to this—that the Legislature were determined to make all the king's Jewish subjects swear they were Christians, or suffer the penalties of a præmunire. He referred to the works of Bishop Sanderson and Puffendorff for definitions of the distinction between the thing sworn to and the mere asseveration or words of swearing; the Legislature of this country, in exacting these oaths from Jews as well as Christians, must have intended that the form of swearing should be such as would bind the conscience of a Jew. He contended that the principle he was now maintaining had been established in the case of Ormichund v. Barker, namely, that when the law permits or requires an oath to be taken, such oath must be taken in a form and manner binding upon the conscience of the party swearing. The law of England admitted every description and form of words and every description of acts and ceremonies which might be necessary, according to the religious belief of the swearer. The Acts of Parliament to which he had referred were to be construed with reference to the mischief which the Legislature intended to remedy, and he would ask whether that mischief was anything but the hostility of the Roman Catholics and others who favoured the claims of the Pretender to the throne of England? If the Court held the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," to be part of the thing sworn to in the oath, it must follow that the Legislature intended that, besides swearing allegiance and abjuration, all persons who took the oath should swear themselves to be Christians. If that were not the intention of the Legislature, the words in question must be mere words of asseveration, by which the party taking the oath pledged his conscience to the truth of his declaration. The only remaining point on which he would address the Court was that arising under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, which was entitled "An Act to remove Doubts as to the Validity of certain Oaths," and the first observation he would make on that statute was, that it was declaratory of the law as it then stood. [Alderson, B.—I take it that if the defendant had been elected, and had taken his seat when the 9 Geo. 1 was passed, he might have taken the oath under the 10 Geo. 1, without the words "on the true faith of a Christian."] That would, no doubt, have been so, but he would not further advert to the construction of those statutes. The present object of his argument was to shew that under the 1 & 2 Vict. the defendant was relieved from the necessity of taking the oath with those words. That Act provided, that, "In all cases in which an oath might lawfully be administered to any person in any court of law or equity, or on appointment to any office, or on any occasion whatever, such person was bound by the oath, provided the same should have been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as such person might declare to be binding." The only construction which this Act could fairly receive was that oaths ought to be now administered only in such form as was binding on the parties taking them, and that it was competent to all who were required to take any oaths so to take them. This statute, then, virtually repealed the Acts imposing any particular form of oath, and that would entitle the defendant to the judgment of this Court. The oath was to be taken by every one at the requirement of two justices of the peace, and it would be for the Court, looking to the form of it, to say whether the Act and the oath should be read so as to favour liberty of conscience, and thereby to do justice, or so as to introduce into this country the most intolerable tyranny which could be devised. For these reasons, therefore, he submitted that the defendant was entitled to the judgment of the Court, and that these penalties could not be recovered.

Channell replied.—He should recall to the recollection of the Court the principal points which he had submitted to them in his opening. These were twofold. He first objected that the oath was not properly taken on the Old Testament; and, secondly, that the oath was a Christian oath, and that, not having been taken in its entirety, it had not been taken at all as required by law. He had suggested that these questions should be viewed in the spirit of the times when the oath was imposed on members by the Legislature, and having ascertained that spirit and the nature of the oath, the Court should then proceed to inquire whether the oath had been altered or repealed by subsequent legislation. Much stress had been laid on the case of Ormichund v. Barker by the defendant; but the Court would remember that he never flinched from that case. He knew the use to which it had been put elsewhere, and what had been said about it; but all that was answered by the fact that that decision applied to a country and to a state of things where no precise form of oath existed, and yet where it became necessary to administer an oath in some form to a witness—that could not be better done than in such form as that witness should declare to be binding on his conscience, and the case was so decided. But it presented no authority for saying that an oath couched in a form devised and prescribed by Act of Parliament with a view to Christianity could be taken legally in any other form and with any other ceremonies than those prescribed by that Act of Parliament. Such was the substance of the argument for the plaintiff, and the question it raised was, whether the 6 Geo. 3 was to be considered a dead letter or not, or whether "Victoria" should be substituted for the word "George." Now, every Act on the subject spoke of kings, not as individuals, but in their corporate capacity; and it was most absurd to say that these Acts did not so relate to them. The Act for the relief of the Roman Catholics of Geo. 4 spoke of the oath of abjuration as being "now by law required;" and the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, which relieved Quakers, also contemplated its existence under a William; so that the argument as to the cesser of the oath fell to the ground. Authorities, too, shewed that this objection was a futile one. They were, Reg. v. Green, Vent. 171, and 12 Coke Rep. 350. Then came the question, was this a Christian oath required to be taken in a particular form? and, in considering that question, he wished broadly, distinctly, and clearly to claim the right to examine contemporaneous Acts of the Legislature. He had a right to see what was done just before and after the passing of the Act requiring the oath of abjuration in its integrity, as a means of testing the meaning of the Legislature in passing that Act. That had not been used elsewhere, nor had the other side attempted to meet it here to-day. We must look at the spirit of the day to determine what the Legislature meant. Such an inquiry was all-important on the question whether this oath was or was not meant to be a Christian oath. Those contemporaneous statutes shewed that the oath was required to be taken on the holy Evangelists; that it contained the test of the "true faith of a Christian," and was accompanied by the necessity of subscription to the declaration against transubstantiation. All these things taken together shewed to demonstration that the oath was meant to be a Christian oath, and, unless we are to be met by the assertion that there is no such thing possible, we say that it is impossible to deny that this oath is such. Assuming that it is such an oath, the more important question remains, whether it can be taken without the words, "on the true faith of a Christian." Now these words are part and parcel and are of the essence of the oath, which is a statutable one. The defendant contends they are not part of the oath, because the Legislature never could be supposed to have compelled any man to commit blasphemy; but the answer to that is, that the Legislature does not impose on Jews any obligation to take this oath. All that they say is, if you presume to sit without taking a particular oath certain consequences shall follow. It is impossible to advert to the legislation of those days without recognising in it the spirit of persecution. Penalties were imposed on all who refused to take oaths in the abstract, and also on those who abstained from the parish church, and did not take the sacrament; and, though those restrictions were gradually altered, they evince the spirit of the age, and throw light on the meaning of imposing a particular form of oath. Though the Jews were relieved from taking that oath at the Quarter Sessions, where it was obligatory on all persons to take it, it by no means followed that the oath of a member, which was optional, and not obligatory, was also to be altered. It might well be that the Legislature, in dealing with the Parliament which was to govern a Protestant country under a Protestant succession, should, when imposing an oath on members, select a form which could only be taken by Christians, and an examination of 10 Geo. 1 shewed that the alteration was only "for the purposes of that Act;" so that the exception there really proved the rule. For these reasons it was contended that the oath was a Christian oath, and must be taken in its entirety; and, assuming that the Court would give judgment for the plaintiff, it only remained for him to say that, as to the second and third counts, he should enter a nolle prosequi. The declaration went for three penalties; but, as the finding of the jury in the special verdict was distributive, and the three votes were given on one day, the defendant could only be liable for one

Martin, B. said—This is an action to recover penalties alleged to be forfeited by the defendant under the statutes 1 Geo. 1, sess. 2, c. 13, s. 17, and 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 1, by reason of his having voted in the House of Commons without having taken the oath of abjuration contained in the latter statute. The declaration stated that the defendant was duly returned to serve in Parliament as a burgess for the borough of Greenwich, and that he voted in the House of Commons without having taken and subscribed the above oath, and thereby forfeited the sum of 500*l*. There were two other similar counts, but they were abandoned, in order to raise the substantial question in controversy between the parties, and avoid any technical difficulty by reason of more than one penalty being recovered for alleged offences against the statutes committed on the same day. The plea was nil debet. The cause came on for trial at the sittings after last Michaelmas Term, when a special verdict was found, which stated that the defendant was duly elected and returned to serve in Parliament for the borough of Greenwich, and whilst he was a member voted in the House of Commons. That he was a British-born subject of the Jewish religion, and that the form and manner of taking an oath binding on the conscience of a Jew in cases where the words of the oath are to be repeated by the person taking the oath is, that he takes in his hand the Old Testament and repeats the words of the oath, and at the conclusion says, "So help me God," and then kisses the book; and that this form of taking an oath was and is binding upon the conscience of the defendant. That before he voted he came to the table of the House in the usual manner, and demanded to be sworn to the oaths required by law in the manner and form above-mentioned, upon the Old Testament, alleging it to be, as in truth it was, the form which was binding upon his conscience. That he then took the oaths of allegiance and supremacy in the form and manner aforesaid upon the Old Testament, and proceeded to repeat the oath of abjuration contained in the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, substituting the name of Queen Victoria for that of King George, down to the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," which he deliberately and intentionally refused to repeat, and then added the words—"So help me God," and kissed the book. That the Speaker objected that he had not taken the oaths in the manner required by law, and requested him to withdraw, which he did not do, and declared that he had taken the oath in the form binding upon his conscience, which the special verdict finds to be the truth. The verdict then proceeds to state what took place with respect to the signature of the roll, and concludes by submitting to the Court whether the defendant had lawfully taken the oath of abjuration. The case was argued before us last Hilary Term, and it was contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the oath was a Christian oath, and could only be made by a Christian; that it could not be lawfully taken without repeating the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," which, as it was argued, were a necessary and essential part of the oath. Four points were made on behalf of the defendant:—First, that the oath was not now obligatory to be taken at all; that the obligation expired on the death of King George III. or, at all events, upon the death of George IV. and that there was no lawful authority to substitute the name of the reigning sovereign. I think this point is not tenable, and that the name of King George is introduced into the form of oath in its corporate character, and represents all his successors. See the case of The Parliament of Ireland, 12 Coke's Reports, 110, and Rex v. Green, 1 Ventris, 170. Secondly, that the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" were repealed by the stat. 10 Geo. 3, c. 4, to which I shall have occasion hereafter to refer. I also think this point not tenable. Thirdly, that by the true construction of the statutes an obligation is imposed upon all her Majesty's English subjects, whether Christian or Jew, to take an oath binding upon their consciences, pledging them to the several matters contained in the oath prescribed by the stat. 6 Geo. 3, c. 53. That the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" were not intended by the Legislature as a religious test at all, but were inserted for an entirely different object and purpose; and that when the person taking the oath is not a Christian, he not merely may, but ought to omit these words, and take the oath in the form binding upon his conscience; and that the oath so taken is made in a lawful manner, and relieves the taker from all penalties which are consequent upon the refusal or neglect to take the oath. This is the substantial question in the case. Fourthly, it was argued that the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" may be omitted by virtue of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105. In the argument both the learned counsel concurred that, in the case of Ormichund v. Barker, 1 Atkins, 21, the true nature of an oath, and the law of England in regard to it, were rightly laid down and established; and both also expressed their concurrence in the doctrine of Lord Coke in the second "Institute," pages 479 and 718, viz. that a new oath cannot be imposed, nor an existing oath altered, except by authority of Parliament. The case of Ormichund v. Barker was decided by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, assisted by the two Chief Justices and the Chief Baron, and has always been considered of great authority. The question was, whether the deposition of a Gentoo witness taken in India, on an oath administered to him in the form binding upon persons professing the Gentoo religion, was admissible in evidence in a suit in the Court of Chancery in this country. The form of administering the oath was that the witness touched with his hand the foot of a Brahmin, whilst another priest touched the hand of the latter. In the arguments and judgments in that case, the law and practice as to the administration of oaths to Jews was much discussed, and from the authorities there cited it appeared that the Jews were resident in England before the Conquest, and then took oaths; and an instance was cited from Wilkins's Saxon Laws of a writ issued to summon sex legales homines et sex legales Judæos to make a jury. Various other authorities were there cited to shew that oaths were administered to Jews before their banishment, which took place in the reign of King Edward I. (1 Maddox's History of the Exchequer, 261). It is there stated also that it is supposed that they were not by law permitted to return until the time of the Commonwealth; but, however this may be, there is no doubt that for a very long period of time there have been in England very many Jews, British-born subjects, equally entitled to the protection and subject to the control of the laws precisely in the same manner as the Christian subjects of the realm. The doctrine laid down by the Lord Chancellor and all the other judges was, that the essence of an oath was an appeal to a Supreme Being in whose existence the person taking the oath believed, and whom he also believed to be a rewarder of truth and an avenger of falsehood, and that the form of taking an oath was a mere outward act, and not essential to the oath, which ought to be admininistered to all persons according to their own peculiar religious opinion, and in such manner as most affected their consciences. The present oath of abjuration itself is contained in the statute 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 1, but this statute was passed in 1766 merely for the purpose of making an alteration in its form, which became necessary in consequence of the death of the old Pretender, who died in 1765, and in order to ascertain its true construction it must be considered together and in connection with the stat. 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13. This latter statute was made upon the accession of the House of Hanover, and contains the three oaths, viz. of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration; and, as has been already observed, the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, merely alters the form of the latter oath, but makes no alteration in its substance. It was submitted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in his very able argument, that in order to arrive at the true construction of these Acts of Parliament, it was necessary to go back to the old statutes, which originally imposed Parliamentary oaths, and attentively consider their provisions and requirements, and he referred us to the stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, as the first statute bearing upon the subject. That was entitled "An Act to restore to the Crown the Ancient Jurisdiction over the Estate, Ecclesiastical and Spiritual, and for abolishing all foreign Powers repugnant to the same." The Act begins by reciting the statutes of King Henry VIII. for the extinguishment of all foreign powers and authorities, and the repeal of these statutes by an Act in the reign of Queen Mary, and proceeds to repeal the latter Act, and re-enact the former. This Act of Queen Elizabeth is obviously directed against the Pope and see of Rome, and has no relation whatever to Jews, who, as has already been observed, were then banished the kingdom. By the 19th section, all ecclesiastical persons, and all judges, justices, mayors, and other public officers, were required to make an oath upon the Evangelists of the Queen's supremacy. The words "upon the true faith of a Christian" were not contained in this oath. It concluded with the words "So help me God, and the contents of this book." Had this statute continued in force until the present time, the requirement that the oath should be taken upon the Evangelists would have raised a question somewhat similar to that in the present case; for although it was holden in the case of Robeley v. Langston, 2 Keeble, 311, that a Jew sworn upon the Old Testament was sworn upon the Evangelists, it seems to me that the opinion of the Lord Chief Baron in Ormichund v. Barker, that an oath upon the Old Testament was not an oath upon the Evangelist, is the better opinion. This statute did not extend to members of the House of Commons, but by the 5 Eliz. c. 1, s. 16, it was extended to them, and they were required to take the oath of supremacy before the Lord Steward. It is also obvious that this statute was solely directed against the Pope and the See of Rome. It begins by reciting "the hurts, perils, and dishonour befallen to the Queen, and the whole estate of the realm, by means of the jurisdiction and power of that See, and the danger then existing from the fautors of the said usurped powers, at that time grown to marvellous outrage and licentious boldness, and then requiring more sharp restraint and correction of laws than hitherto;" and every section of the statute is directed to the single object of the protection of the Queen and State against the Pope and persons of the Roman Catholic religion. The next statute to which we were referred by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, was the 3 Jas. 1, c. 4, and it was stated by him to contain the germ of the oath of abjuration. I concur with him in thinking that this statute has an important bearing upon the present question. The words, "upon the true faith of a Christian," first occur in it, and if the object and intention of the Legislature in inserting them was to create a test of Christianity, they then would be of the essence of the oath therein contained; but if they were inserted for an entirely different purpose and object, and were not intended as a test of Christianity at all, but as a test of, and security for, loyalty and obedience, they would then seem to be not of that essential nature. The Act is entitled, "An Act for the better discovering and repressing of Popish Recusants." It was passed immediately after the Popish plot, and begins by reciting, "that it was found by daily experience that many of his Majesty's subjects who adhered in their hearts to the Popish religion were religion were by its infection, and by the wicked counsels of Jesuits and others, so far perverted from their loyalty and allegiance as to entertain treasonable conspiracies, as appeared by the late attempt to blow up the King and Parliament, undertaken at the instigation of Jesuits and others by their scholars taught and instructed for that purpose." It then proceeds to make enactments directed against Popish recusants, and by the 13th section enacts, that for the better trial how his Majesty's subjects stand affected in point of their loyalty and due obedience, it shall be lawful for the bishop in his diocese, or any two justices of the peace, to call upon a great number of persons therein described, to take an oath upon the Holy Evangelists; "the tenour of which oath," the statute says "hereinafter followeth." The form is:—"I, ... B. do truly and sincerely acknowledge, profess, testify, and declare in my conscience, before God and the world, that our Sovereign Lord King James is lawful and rightful King of this realm, and of all other his [illegible] dominions and countries;" which is the same as beginning of the present oath of abjuration. It then proceeds to deny the authority of the Pope "to depose the king, or dispose of any of his kingdoms or dominions, or to authorise any foreign prince to invade them, or to discharge any of his subjects of their allegiance." It then proceeds, as in the oath of abjuration, to pledge the taker to bear "faith and true allegiance to his Majesty, his heirs and successors, and him and them to defend to the uttermost against all conspiracies and attempts whatsoever which should be made against his or their persons, their crown and dignity, by reason or colour of any sentence of excommunication, or deprivation, or otherwise, and to do his best endeavour to disclose and make known unto his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, all treasons, and traitorous conspiracies, which he should know, or hear of, to be against him, or any of them." And concludes thus, in the very words of the conclusion of the present abjuration oath:—"And all these things I do plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear, according to these express words by me spoken and according to the plain and common sense and understanding of the same words, without any equivocation or mental evasion or secret reservation whatsoever; and I do make this recognition and acknowledgment heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true faith of a Christian: So help me God." It is apparent from this as well as many other Acts of Parliament, that an idea then, and long afterwards, prevailed that Roman Catholics were in a different condition with regard to oaths from persons of other religious denominations, and that the Jesuits taught that the Pope had power to grant absolution from oaths, and to dispense with the performance of and adherence to them, and that the Roman Catholics themselves made these Parliamentary oaths with mental evasions and secret reservations, which were supposed to have the effect of nullifying their obligation; and the conclusion of the oath is expressly directed against this supposed state of things. Now, Jews were not then resident in the kingdom, so that it is clear that the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" were not inserted with any hostile objects towards them; and the statute expressly declares that the oath was imposed for the better trial of the loyalty and obedience of his Majesty's subjects; and it is perfectly obvious to my mind that the words were introduced into the oath, not as a test of Christianity, but in order the more effectually to bind and affect the conscience of Roman Catholics. They were, according to their then, and present, opinion, the most perfect Christians, and I think these words were added in order to create the most sacred and binding obligation upon them, and for no other purpose. The Jews were never thought of, and, indeed, the Legislature, in all probability, never contemplated that there were any subjects of the kingdom who were not Christians. Members of Parliament were not included in this statute, but by statute 7 James 1, c. 6, they, and a great variety of other persons, were required to take the same oath. The next statute mentioned by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, was the 30 Charles 2, stat. 2, by which it was enacted that no person should vote in the House of Commons until he took the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and made the declaration against transubstantiation therein contained. It was by means of this declaration that Roman Catholics were so long excluded from Parliament. No person of that religion could conscientiously take it, and it continued to be required to be made until the Roman Catholic Relief Act in 1829. Now, this was an Act of Parliament creating a direct religious test, and that the Legislature well understood how to create religious tests is evident, as well from it as from the Corporation Act, 13 Charles 2, sess. 2, c. 1, by the 12th section of which no person could be chosen to the principal offices in the corporations who had not taken the sacrament according to the rites of the Church of England within a year before his election; and the Test Act, the 25 Chas. 2, by which all persons bearing offices and places of trust under the Crown were required to receive the same sacrament within three months after their appointment. The next statute referred to was the 1 Wm. & M. c. 1, which enacted afresh the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, expressly naming therein King William and Queen Mary, and provided that they should be taken by all members of Parliament, together with the declaration against transubstantiation, within the same time as limited by the statute 30 Chas. 2, last mentioned. A question here arises, whether there was any oath or declaration at this time to be taken or made by members of Parliament which a Jew could not take, and it seems to me that there was none. The words "upon the Evangelists" do not occur in either of the last-mentioned Acts of Parliament, and there was nothing in the oaths of allegiance and supremacy themselves to prevent their being taken by a Jew. Indeed, these oaths remain in the same form at the present time, and the defendant was permitted to take them without ob- [illegible] the Old Testament, at the table of the House of Commons. The declaration against transubstantiation is expressly declared to be for the purpose of disabling Papists from sitting in either House of Parliament. It was not at all directed against Jews, and it seems to me that a Jew might have made it with truth. The next statute referred to by the learned counsel for the plaintiff was the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, and it is by it that the original oath of abjuration was imposed. It is probable, as was suggested by the learned counsel, that it was to a considerable extent taken from the oath prescribed by the 3 Jas. 1, c. 4, but it certainly is the original oath of abjuration. The legislative measures with respect to it are as follow: By the 1 Anne, stat. 1, c. 22, the oath is altered in form by substituting the name of Queen Anne for that of King William, but the same persons are required to take it, and are subjected to the same penalties in case of neglect or refusal. By the 6 Anne, c. 7, s. 20, the oath was altered to meet the state of things expected to arise upon the death of the Queen without issue. By the 1 Geo. 1, c. 13, on the accession of the House of Hanover, the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration were re-enacted; and by the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, as has already been observed, the form of the oath of abjuration was altered to meet the state of things consequent upon the death of the old Pretender, and the penalty is due, if at all, by virtue of these two latter statutes. The ordinary rule for the construction of statutes is that laid down in Haydn's case, 3 Coke Rep. 7, viz.:—First, ascertain what was the common law; secondly, what was the mischief for which the common law had not provided; thirdly, what was the remedy provided by the statute; and, fourthly, what was the true reason of the remedy. This still continues to be the rule. In Lyde v. Barnard, 1 Mod. Mal. 99, it was laid down by the Court in their judgment that "Words in a statute may be construed in a sense different from the ordinary one when the Act is intended to remedy some existing mischief, and such a construction is required to render the remedy effectual, for an Act must always be construed to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy." In Bacon's Abridgment, tit. "Statute," it is said that "A thing which is within the letter of a statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the makers." And again, "The construction to be put upon a statute is that which best answers the intention of the Legislature, and whenever this intention can be discovered it ought to be followed, although such construction seems contrary to the letter of the statute." Now, to apply the above rule to the present case. First, as to the common law. The only oath imposed by the common law upon the subjects of this realm is the oath of allegiance, which originated in the old feudal oath of fealty, and this oath all persons capable of taking an oath at all can lawfully take. Next, as to the mischief intended to be remedied by the statutes which contain the oath of abjuration. To my mind it is clear that the evil against which all these statutes were directed was the existence of persons disaffected to the succession of the Crown, as altered at the Revolution. The Act of the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, which contains the original oath, is entitled, "An Act for the further Security of her Majesty's person, and the Succession of the Crown in the Protestant Line, and for extinguishing the Hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and all other Pretenders, and their open and secret Abettors." The words of the oath are in substance as follow, and clearly show the same thing:—"I, A. B. do truly and sincerely profess, testify, and declare, in my conscience, before God and the world, that our Sovereign Lord King William is lawful and rightful King of this realm, and of all other His Majesty's dominions and countries thereunto belonging. And I do solemnly and sincerely declare that I do believe in my conscience that the person pretending to be Prince of Wales during the life of the late King James, and since his decease pretending to be, and taking upon himself, the style and title of the King of England by the name of James 3, hath not any right or title whatsoever to the Crown of this realm, or any other the dominion, thereunto belonging. And I do renounce, refuse, and abjure any allegiance or obedience to him, and I do swear that I will bear faith and true allegiance to his Majesty King William 3." The oath then proceeds to pledge the person taking it to defend the King, to disclose all treasons and traitorous conspiracies known to him, and to support to the utmost of his power the limitation and succession of the Crown as it stood limited by the Acts of Settlement, and concludes with the same identical words used in the oath contained in the statute 3 Jac. 1, before mentioned. The statute 1 Geo. 1, s. 2, c. 13, is entitled, "An Act for the better Security of his Majesty's Person and Government, and the Succession of the Crown in the Heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the Hope of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret Abettors," which is in substance the same title as that of the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6. By the 1st section the three oaths, viz. of allegiance, of supremacy, and of abjuration are re-enacted, and merely altered in form to meet the state of things consequent upon the accession of the House of Hanover.

By the 10th section two justices of the peace may tender the oath to any person whom they may suspect to be disaffected, and every person neglecting or refusing to take it is to be esteemed and adjudged a Popish recusant convict, and to forfeit, and be proceeded against as such. This involved the incapacity to hold any office or employment, to keep arms for his defence, to come within ten miles of London, to bring any action at law or suit in equity, to travel above five miles from his home unless by license upon pain of forfeiting all his personal property; and if required by four justices so to do to abjure and renounce the realm, and in the event of not departing within the time limited, or returning without the king's license, is to be guilty of felony and suffer death as a felon. By the 11th section, to the intent and purpose that no person may avoid taking the oath, two justices are authorised to summon any person before them to take it. By the 17th section, any member of the House of Commons voting without having taken the oath, in addition to the consequences before mentioned, and the penalty sought to be recovered in this action, is declared incapable to be the guardian of a child, to be an executor or administrator, to take any legacy or property under any deed of gift, or to vote at any election for a member to serve in Parliament; in short, is utterly deprived of the protection of the law and of the most common and ordinary natural rights of all mankind. It is to be observed that in all the preceding statutes the oath of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration were required to be taken by persons holding certain offices, and in certain professions only, and that there was no legislative obligation upon the subjects of the realm generally to take them, but by the 10th and 11th sections of the last Act, the most extensive powers are given to two justices to compel all persons whom they may think disaffected or dangerous so to do under the most severe penalties. And I certainly think that whatever is the proper and legal form of administering the oath of abjuration to a Jew not a member of the Legislature, is the proper and legal form of administering it to a Jew who happens to be one, and that it cannot be lawful to omit the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," in the former case and to insist upon them in the latter. Next, as to the remedy proposed to be provided. To ascertain this rightly, it seems to me absolutely necessary to consider what was the prevailing state of opinion, with regard to political oaths, at the time when those statutes passed; and it is to my mind clear from the perusal of them, that from the reign of Queen Elizabeth down to that of King George III. it was considered by the Legislature to be a matter of the utmost benefit and advantage to the Crown and State that the subjects of the realm should take these oaths (of which the oath of abjuration was one), and that, not as a mere matter of form, but that the person taking them should be really bound in his conscience to the matter therein contained, and under a religious obligation to perform and abide by them; and I think the remedy provided, and meant to be provided, by the statute was, that persons should be compellable to take this oath of abjuration, and as a natural and legal consequence, as it seems to me, to take it in a manner and form binding upon their consciences, and thereby secure to the Crown and the Government the benefit and advantage arising from, and consequent upon, an oath to the above effect. At this time Jews were living in England in very considerable numbers, and in common with the other subjects of the realm, were liable to be called on to take the oath, and their neglect or refusal to take it subjected them to the penalties which I have mentioned. Now, to permit a Jew to make—much more to insist upon his making—an oath "upon the true faith of a Christian," seems to me to be absurd; but if these words be omitted, and the Jew be called upon and required to take the oath without using them, then, according to the finding of the special verdict, it would be obligatory and binding upon him to the fullest extent, and would secure to the Crown and Government the entire advantage and benefit contemplated and intended by the statute. It therefore seems to me that a construction which admits of the omission of these words in the case of a Jew is required to render the statute effectual, and directly tends to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. If, however, it was intended by the Legislature that these words should be of the substance and essence of the oath, and that no one except a Christian should be admissible to take it, it was undoubtedly competent for them so to enact, and the oath could not be lawfully taken except they were used; but I think that there was no such intention. At this time there was no oath or declaration required which would have prevented a Jew from sitting and voting in Parliament, and I observe nothing whatever in the Act which has any tendency to shew that the Legislature desired or wished to exclude them. The whole frame of the statute is directed against persons opposed to the new limitation of the Crown, and who were truly believed to be principally Christians of the Roman Catholic religion, and I think the words "on the true faith of a Christian" were inserted in the oath, not as a test of Christianity, but for an entirely different object—viz. for the purpose of framing an oath in a form the most effectually binding upon the conscience of the Roman Catholics. I have already alluded to the then existing opinion, that persons of the Roman Catholic religion took oaths with mental evasions and reservations, which it was supposed relieved them from their obligation, and I think it clearly appears from the concluding paragraph of the oath that the real motive for the introduction of these words was to bind their consciences in the most solemn manner. The 11th section of the statute also shews that the statute itself was mainly directed against Roman Catholics, for one of the penalties thereby imposed was, that any member of the House of Commons voting without having taken the oaths shall be deemed and adjudged "a Popish recusant convict." It is obvious that the Legislature never intended that a Jew should be so designated, when it is considered that the offence of "recusancy" was purged by the "convict" making an acknowledgment of sorrow for not having attended Divine service according to the rites of the Church of England, and denying that the Pope has any power in this kingdom. There is another rule for the construction of statutes, which was enunciated by the late Mr. Justice Burton in the case of Warburton v. Loveland, 1 Hudson & Brooke's Irish Rep. 648, and which will be found in the judgment in Becke v. Smith, 2 M. & W. 195. It is as follows:—"It is a very useful rule in the construction of a statute to adhere to the ordinary meaning of the words used and to their grammatical construction, unless that is at variance with the intention of the Legislature, to be collected from the statute itself, or leads to any manifest absurdity or repugnance, in which case the language may be varied or modified so as to avoid such inconvenience, and no further." This rule has very frequently been relied upon of late years, and especially in this court; and in the judgment in Becke v. Smith was stated to have been adopted by it. Now, to apply this rule to the present case, what was the intention of the Legislature, to be collected from the statute itself, imposing the oath of abjuration? Upon this point I cannot think there is room for much difference of opinion, and that the intention was that all members of the Legislature, and almost all persons holding offices in the State, and all persons whatever suspected of disloyalty to the new succession, should be liable to be called on to take the oath, and should be bound in their consciences, by a religious obligation, to the several matters contained in it. In the case of Jews this intention can be fully effected, and all inconveniences avoided, by so far varying or modifying the language of the oath as to omit the words "on the true faith of a Christian;" for the special verdict finds that the Jews are bound by the oath when these words are omitted. Again, I do not think there can be any difference of opinion but that a Jew is liable to be called on to take the oath by virtue of the 10th and 11th sections, and it certainly seems to me a manifest absurdity, and quite repugnant to the statute, to allow him to take the oath upon the true faith of a Christian, and that this absurdity and repugnance is avoided by requiring him to take the oath, omitting these words; which form and manner of taking it is found by the verdict to be binding upon him. As I have already said, in my opinion, if this be the lawful form of administering the oath to a Jew not a member of the Legislature, it is a lawful form of administering it to one who is; the statute making no distinction between the one and the other. These are highly penal statutes, and ought to receive a just and reasonable construction. What is such a construction as is consonant with justice and reason, is a point upon which men's minds will much differ; but to mine it does not appear consonant to either to hold that a Jew—who is certainly liable to be called on to take the oath, and who, as is found by this special verdict, is perfectly capable of taking and being bound by it, and who is willing to take it in a form and manner binding upon his conscience, and who merely refuses to use the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," which are not at all applicable to him, or, in my opinion, intended by the Legislature so to be, and which if used by him would render the oath null and absurd, if not worse—is, by such refusal, incapable of suing either at law or in equity, to be guardian of his own children, to be confined within the limits of five miles from his home, to be incapable of keeping arms for his defence, or of having property bequeathed to him, and, at the discretion or caprice of four justices of the peace, to be liable to be banished, and in the event of his returning to the kingdom without the leave of the Crown, to suffer death as a felon. As I have already intimated, I am of opinion that upon the true construction of the statute, and in order to effectually carry out its object and intention, a Jew ought to take the oath of abjuration, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian;" and it appears true that a construction the other way, which of necessity leads to the consequences I have just mentioned, is not in accordance with what I consider to be the principle and practice of the law of England. As before observed, the stat. 6 Geo. 3, c. 53 merely alters the form of the oath and subjects persons neglecting or refusing to take it to the consequences as enacted by the former statute. There was another statute, the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, which was relied upon by both the learned counsel as supporting their respective views. It was contended by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, that the 17th sec. of that stat. proved that the words "upon the true faith of a Christian" could only be omitted from the abjuration oath by an express enactment of the Legislature. On the other hand, it was argued by the learned counsel for the defendant—first, that the section continued in force until the present time; or, secondly, if it did not, inasmuch as there never was any intention of the Legislature to oppose any impediment to Jews taking the abjuration oath, that the omission to continue the enactment proved that the Legislature did not consider the use of these words by a Jew essential to the due taking of it. This statute appears to have been enacted under these circumstances:—by a stat. of the 9 Geo. 1, c. 24 (which passed in 1722), persons who neglected to take the oaths prescribed by the 1 Geo. 1, c. 6, before the 25th December, 1723, were obliged to register their estates, and the stat. 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, was made to amend this Act, by enlarging the time for taking these oaths until the 8th of November, 1724, and in the 17th section it was enacted that whenever any subject of his Majesty professing the Jewish religion should present himself to take the oath of abjuration "in pursuance of the above recited Act, or this Act," the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," shall be omitted, and such persons were to be sworn in like manner as Jews were admitted to be sworn to give evidence in courts of justice. These Acts of Parliament appear to be the foundation of a class of statutes which very soon became annual, and continue to the present time, known by the name of the "Indemnity Acts." This provision with respect to Jews is not to be found in any of them except in the statute above mentioned. I agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiff that this section, in its terms only, extends the oath prescribed to be taken by virtue of the statute itself, and the stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 24, recited in it; but I do not think that the argument on either side is much advanced by reason of this 17th section. It is quite notorious that Acts of Parliament are frequently made, and that much more frequently sections are introduced to meet objections and set at rest doubts, without such consideration as to whether they be doubts really well founded or not; and, considering the class of persons by whom the oath is to be administered, it might well be that the Legislature thought it desirable, in the case of Jews, to expressly dispense with the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," although, upon the true construction of the Act by persons skilled in the law, the use of such words ought to be omitted. On the other hand, as was contended by the learned counsel for the defendant, the omission of this enactment in the subsequent Indemnity Acts may have a tendency to shew that the continuance of it was deemed unnecessary, and that Jews might lawfully take the oath without using the words; for there is no reason whatever to suppose that the Legislature at all desired to impose any difficulty upon Jews in respect of this oath. The arguments on both sides on this point do not appear to me to be of much weight. There was another Act of Parliament referred to by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, the 13 Geo. 1, c. 7, being an Act for naturalising such foreign Protestants and others (the others being Quakers and Jews) as should settle in the American colonies; and by the 3rd section of that Act it is recited that by reason of the words, "upon the true faith of a Christian," Jews may be prevented from receiving the benefit of the Act, and it is enacted that these may be omitted in like manner as by the 17th section of the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4. The argument from this section is the same; perhaps not so strong as that I have already referred to, and is open to the same answer. There were a variety of other statutes mentioned, beginning with the 13 & 14 Car. 2, with respect to Quakers. It is clear, from the provisions of this Act, that at that period Quakers were supposed to be a sect dangerous to the state, and their objection to take an oath (which they then and still object to take upon religious grounds) is treated as a crime. In course of time, however, the utter groundlessness of any suspicion that dangerous political principles were held by Quakers became apparent, and by various Acts of Parliament, cited by the learned counsel, they have been placed on the same footing as all the rest of her Majesty's subjects, and permitted to affirm in all cases where persons not objecting to take oaths are called upon to make them. I do not think that these statutes much assist in arriving at the true conclusion upon the present question. The fourth point made by the learned counsel for the defendant was, that the defendant was authorised to omit the words "upon the true faith of a Christian," by virtue of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105. I do not think that this statute has of itself such an effect; in truth, it merely enacts that the defendant was bound by the oath as taken by him, and would be liable to any temporal punishment consequent upon his swearing falsely to it; but in reality this special verdict finds that the defendant was so bound, and I think he would be liable to any penal consequences consequent upon this oath being false without the aid of this statute. There is, no doubt, considerable difficulty in duly considering the present question, arising from the circumstance that at the present day very many (probably the greater number of persons) are disposed to consider that the taking of these Parliamentary oaths creates no real binding obligation upon the conscience, and is a matter of no importance; but it was not so considered when the statute 1 Geo. 1 was passed. It is obvious from it, and a variety of other statutes passed in the reign of Queen Anne, that the Legislature attached a very great importance to the religious obligation imposed upon the conscience by taking them, and deemed that an immense public benefit and advantage was thereby obtained for the Crown and Government. And as a Jew, by omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian," may be placed under the conscientious obligation created by taking the oath of abjuration, I think I best carry out the intention of the Legislature, and give the true legal construction to the statute, by holding the legal form of administering the oath to a Jew is to omit these words, and that I thereby render the statute more effective by suppressing the mischief and advancing the remedy contemplated by it. For these reasons I am of opinion that the defendant lawfully took the oath, and is entitled to the judgment of the Court.

ALDERSON, B.—My brother Martin has fully stated the pleadings and the findings of the jury in this case, and it is not necessary, therefore, that I should repeat them. On several points in this case there is no difference of opinion on the Bench. We all agree in thinking that, of the four points made by Sir F. Kelly, three, at all events, cannot be supported. The only point on which we entertained any doubt, and on which I regret to find we are not now agreed, is whether, in taking the oath of abjuration, Mr. Salomons, the present defendant, was bound to have added the words, "on the true faith of a Christian," to those which he did consent to utter and attest by his oath; or whether, by designedly and of purpose omitting those words, he is in fact to be deemed not to have taken that oath at all, and so to have incurred the penalties contained in the 16th section of 1 Geo. 1, c. 13. It is on this point alone, therefore, that I shall deliver my judgment, and I am obliged to say that I differ from my learned brother in his view of the case, and have come to a clear opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. The real question is, whether these words are a part, and an essential part, of this oath, and are to be used by all who are required to take it, unless they have some special privilege for omitting them, expressly given by the Legislature. I take the principles on which our decision is to rest to be quite undisputed. Where an oath is to be taken in order to establish affirmatively or negatively any proposition by a witness, I agree that Omichund v. Barker, Willes, 538, has settled that it ought to be taken in that form and upon that sanction which most effectually binds the conscience of the party swearing. Thus, a Jew is to be sworn upon the Book of the Law, and with his head covered, a Brahmin by the mode prescribed by his peculiar faith; a Chinese by his special ceremonies, and the like. But it is also clear, and expressly admitted by Willes, C. J. in his judgment, referring to Lord Coke's authority on the subject, that in the case of oaths of office or of qualification, where the very form of the oath as well as the oath itself is prescribed by the Legislature, there the directions of the Legislature must be literally followed, and the oath must and can only lawfully be taken in the prescribed form, until that form be altered by the same authority which appointed it. The question, therefore, here is, has the Legislature required the oath of abjuration to be taken in a prescribed form, and are the words "on the true faith of a Christian," a part of that prescribed form? Now, it is to be observed—and it is of the greatest importance to advert to this—that the Legislature uniformly speak of "the oath of abjuration" where they require it to be taken; they do not use the indefinite article, but the definite one. The inference is inevitable, that they contemplate the allowance of but one oath of abjuration in one form, to be used by all persons required to take that oath. Whatever form of oath, therefore, was required to be taken by the Roman Catholic, the same form was to be adopted by the Protestant, whether Churchman or Dissenter; and the same (unless there be some special provision made, as in some cases there is) must be taken by the Jew or the Turk, or any other religionist who may be liable to take the oath as a qualification for office, or for any other required purpose. Unless this were so, the Legislature would never have fixed a form, but would have said that such persons must take "an oath" of abjuration "to the substance and effect following," and not "the oath" of abjuration "in the tenour following," as they have done. It seems to me that the legitimate result of my brother Martin's reasoning is, therefore, to make the Legislature, by a somewhat forced construction, use this indefinite mode of expression; whereas they have clearly used a definite one; so that it would follow, according to his view of the case, that they must be supposed to have allowed one form of the oath of abjuration to be used by Jews, another by Roman Catholics, and, possibly, another by persons of a different persuasion. This, however, is a conclusion so contrary to the words they have used, that I cannot bring myself to adopt it. If there be, in the absence of any special exception expressly made by the Legislature, but one form of the oath of abjuration to be adopted by all, we must proceed to inquire whether those words are an essential part of that form. I proceed, therefore, to examine how this clause first got into the oath of abjuration. It is not found in the oath prescribed in the reign of Elizabeth, but is first found in the 3rd of James 1, c. 4, which was passed upon the discovery of what is called the Gunpowder Plot. It is a curious fact, only lately brought to light by the publication of a manuscript from the Bodleian Library at Oxford by Mr. Jardine, that one of the main proofs used by Lord Coke when he laid that case before the jury was the production of a little book found in the chamber of Francis Tresham, one of the conspirators mentioned in the Act, called A Treatise on Equivocation. This treatise, corrected in the hand of the Jesuit Garnet, and having the imprimatur of Blackwell, the then arch-priest of England, discusses the question how far a person called upon, as he thinks unjustly, to make a declaration or promise, or to depose or swear to a fact within his personal knowledge, may lawfully equivocate by using ambiguous words or reserving mentally a sense of the words used different from that outwardly expressed by him, without incurring the sin of lying or the guilt of perjury. The question is there resolved in the affirmative, that he may lawfully do this, and among other propositions it is affirmed that even if he be required by the form of the oath tendered in terms to swear "without equivocation or mental reservation," he may still equivocate and mentally reserve without danger to his soul. But in that treatise there is one exception to all this. No person is allowed to equivocate or mentally reserve without danger, if he does so, of incurring mortal sin, when his doing so brings apparently his true faith towards God into doubt or dispute. For, though he may lawfully, on proper occasions, omit to avow his true faith, he must never, by what he says or swears, bring apparently his true faith into doubt or dispute with others. Now, this treatise being before the Government of James 1, and in the hands of his Attorney-General, and used at the trial of the Gunpowder Plot, we find in the same year, 1605, that in a statute enacted mainly to the same plot, these words,—"On the true faith of a Christian,"—are, for the first time, added to the oath of obedience then framed, and for the obvious purpose, as I think, of preventing effectually all such equivocation, by conclusively fixing a sense to that oath, which by no evasion or mental reservation should be got out of, without (even in the opinion of the Jesuit doctors themselves) incurring the penalty of mortal sin. They were therefore, I think, not merely a part of that oath, but the most effectual and stringent provision in it. I do not therefore call this properly an oath intended as a test of Christianity, which it was not, nor as a mere test of obedience, but an oath intended as a test of obedience, and framed so as to be a test against all equivocation also. But this, though the fact, to which I have referred, is a very curious confirmation of the view I take of the importance of the words on which this case turns, is not necessary to my opinion. It would be quite sufficient, I think, to affirm that the Legislature have said expressly, as they do, that an oath is to be taken "the tenour of which oath hereafter followeth," for "the tenour" implies that all the words which follow thereafter are part of the oath itself. It is to be observed that in all the course of legislation on this subject either these words, "the tenour of the oath," or equivalent expressions, are throughout used by the Legislature. I will shortly refer to them. In the first place, this same oath of obedience was by 7 Jac. 1, extended and applied to the members of the Legislature, and to all persons enumerated, who exercise any functions or hold any offices in the State. No one reading this Act can, I think, doubt that the Legislature meant this enactment to be general, and without any exception of persons, whatever may be their religious opinions. The 30 of Car. 2, c. 25, sec. 1, left these oaths untouched, adding, however, a declaration against transubstantiation. It is unnecessary to refer to the intermediate Acts of the 1 Wm. & M. c. 8, s. 1, more particularly. I come to the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, which first established the oath of abjuration, and there the words are, that the persons required to do so shall take "the oath as hereinafter mentioned," setting out expressly the form, including and ending with the words "on the true faith of a Christian," introduced before into the old oath of obedience. This form of oath was not only to be taken, but subscribed also, which shews, I think (for there is no trace of double subscriptions to be found), that one form only was to be allowed and adopted, without addition or omission. With certain alterations in the reign of Queen Anne, applicable only to altered circumstances, and therefore not material to be adverted to, things remained up to the 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, when the three oaths, of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, were for the first time put together, and the Legislature there expressly require them to be taken "in the words following," and then set forth the oath of abjuration containing the words "on the true faith of a Christian." Now, how is it possible to give effect to the expression "in the words following," if we do not use all the words which follow? I cannot see how this difficulty is to be got over by construction. Lastly, we come to the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, on which this case depends; by which it is provided that the oath of abjuration (the Legislature still using the definite article "the") shall be administered in such a manner and form as hereinafter set down and prescribed (that is to say, &c.), and then, as before, the oath is set out, ending with the same words "on the true faith of a Christian." Now, when I find the Legislature beginning with "the tenour of the oath," and going on with "the oath as hereinafter mentioned," then saying "the oath in the words following," and finally, "the oath to be administered in such manner and form as is hereinafter mentioned and prescribed;" and find also that all these expressions are followed by a form containing these very same words, how am I to escape from the conclusion that those words do form a part of the oath prescribed? But it is argued that to apply it to the Jew involves an absurdity, and that, according to what has been not improperly called the golden rule of construction, we must modify the literal construction of these Acts so as to get rid of the absurdity. I add (and I hold it to be part of the rule), only so far as is absolutely necessary to get rid of the absurdity. But let us see whether it is absurd to apply these provisions to the Jew as well as to the Christian. The Legislature did not require the first oath of obedience to be taken by all, but only by such persons as were reasonably liable to suspicion by two justices of the peace acting judicially, or by persons who had omitted to do certain acts. It may be, and it perhaps was, unjust in the Legislature so to enact; but we must take good care, in applying the golden rule, not to confound injustice with absurdity. The reason of the rule is, that the absurdity induces us to conclude that the Legislature did not intend. I am afraid if we say that in old times such as those of the Gunpowder Plot—the Legislature must be held not to have intended what now we judge to be unjust, we shall ourselves be guilty of the grossest absurdity. I am afraid that I should, if that were the proper principle to be adopted, be obliged to hold that almost all the penal statutes had no operation at all, for I think that the most of them were grievously unjust. I can see nothing in this, or the subsequent Acts containing the oath of abjuration, to induce me to believe that the Legislature did not intend literally what they said expressly, —viz. that those Acts and this oath were to apply to and to be taken by all the classes of persons therein named, of whatsoever form of religion—Catholic, Protestant, Quaker, or Jew, they might be—and in the very form set down. And I am confirmed, as I think conclusively, in this, by finding that where, on its being brought before them, the law was found to press unfairly on any of those persons, the Legislature has, from time to time, relieved them by dispensing with the swearing, and allowing the Quakers to affirm, and by dispensing with these very words of the oath, "on the true faith of a Christian," in the case of the Jews in certain cases. That dispensation, unfortunately, does not extend to this case; but its limited existence seems to me to shew conclusively the opinion of the Legislature itself on this point. The words of the 13 Geo. 2, c. 7, s. 3, are very remarkable. The Act recites, "Whereas the words 'upon the true faith of a Christian' are contained in the latter part of the oath of abjuration, and whereas the persons professing the Jewish religion may thereby be prevented from receiving the benefit of this Act;" and it enacts, that when a Jew proposes to take the oath, those words shall be left out; and it also refers to the limited indulgence as to those same words given the Jews, relieving them from the difficulties imposed by those same words. That Act was passed in the 13th of Geo. 2. It is entitled "An Act to oblige 'all persons being Papists in Scotland,' and all persons in England, to take this oath of abjuration in its terms." Now, this recital clearly shews that Jews in England were included in the term "all persons," as indeed could not well be doubted, and that but for those indulgences they were always bound to take the oath of abjuration, including those words. And this Act was passed in 1739, when Lord Hardwicke was Chancellor, and Sir Dudley Ryder and Sir John Strange were Attorney and Solicitor-General; and the Acts of 9 & 10 Geo. 1 were passed when Lord Macclesfield was Chancellor, and Lord Raymond and Lord Hardwicke respectively Attorney and Solicitor-General. But it is now said that these Acts were wholly unnecessary, and that these great lawyers ought to have known it, and we are now, in the year of the Lord 1852, to awake from a sleep into which those great lawyers and the whole Legislature of those periods fell, and in which all persons ever since have remained, from 1739 down to the time of this argument. For it is in our own recollection that the present Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench gave relief by an Act of Parliament, leaving out these very words in the case of Jews. I cannot, therefore, believe this to be a reasonable conclusion. And besides, this argument really goes too far; for its legitimate extent ought to be to exempt Jews from taking any oath of abjuration under any circumstances whatsoever, seeing that, as it is contended, it is absurd that they should take any oath thus framed, and no other oath is expressly provided for them by the Legislature. No one surely can suppose that the Legislature intended this result; and, indeed, Sir F. Kelly did not even venture to argue to this extent. But let us now for a moment concede that there is an absurdity in requiring all such persons, under all circumstances, to take such an oath, and that under some circumstances it would be impossible to suppose that Jews were to be called on to take it. Then I say that the golden rule only requires us to stop where the absurdity stops. It cannot surely be absurd to say that the Legislature may have really intended to require such an oath from all men, Jews or Christians, who take office, or propose to exercise important legislative functions. If so, then it follows that the utmost that can be done would be to say that these Acts as to Jews must be, in construction, confined to the cases of their taking office, or proposing to exercise legislative functions, and that, in the other cases alone, they are not bound to take the oath at all. But such a construction, even if adopted, which I think would be wrong, could be of no service in the present case. I am therefore of opinion that these words do form a distinct and essential part of the oath, because they interpret and give a peculiar and stringent sense to the previous words of the oath, and are, in fact, incorporated in and form part of each sentence in that oath; so that, without them, no part of the oath has exactly the same meaning that it has when they are added to it. I believe that they were advisedly, and on great consideration, originally adopted (perhaps on Sir E. Coke's advice), and that they have been found effectual, and for that reason retained ever since. I think, therefore, that the oath is not taken at all if these words are omitted by the person swearing, and that Mr. Salomons has therefore voted without previously taking the oath of abjuration. I do most sincerely regret that I am obliged, as a mere expounder of the law, to come to this conclusion; for I do not believe that the case of the Jews was at all thought of by the Legislature when they framed these provisions. I think that it would be more worthy of this country to exclude the Jews from these privileges (if they are to be excluded at all—as to which I say nothing) by some direct enactment, and not merely by the casual operation of a clause intended apparently in its object and origin to apply to a very different class of the subjects of England. I regret also that the consequences are so serious, involving disabilities of the most fearful kind, in addition to the penalty sought to be in this action recovered, and, in fact, making Mr. Salomons for the future almost an outlaw. It is to be hoped that some remedy will be provided, for these consequences at least, by the Legislature. My duty is, however, plain. It is to expound, not to make, the law; to decide on it as I find it—not as I may wish it to be. It seems to me that the law on this point is quite clear, and that the judgment must be for the plaintiff.

PARKE, B.—The question of the defendant's liability to penalties for voting in the House of Commons after their speaker was chosen, and before the defendant had taken the oath required by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 53, though it necessarily occupied much time in the argument, appears to me to lie in a narrow compass. It depends mainly on the construction of that statute giving the form of the oath of abjuration, which every one, by the express words of the Act, who is required to take and subscribe to it must do, "according to the form therein set down and prescribed," within such time limited, in such manner, and with such observance of the same requisites, and with benefit of the same savings, provisoes, and indemnities as by any Acts then subsisting are directed and enacted; and in case of neglect or refusal, the statute provides that every one shall be liable to the same penalties and disabilities as are by law established. Those are, with respect to members of Parliament, the penalties imposed by 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, s. 10, the penalties for which this plaintiff proceeds. The form of oath is set out in 6 Geo. 3, c. 53. It has been already sufficiently adverted to, and I shall only state, as material to the present argument, the concluding words; and they are:—"And all these things I do plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear, according to the express words by me spoken, and according to the plain common sense and understanding of such words, without any equivocation, mental evasion, or secret reservation whatever; and I do make this recognition, acknowledgment, abjuration, renunciation, and promise, heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true faith of a Christian." Three questions arise on the construction of this Act. The first and by far the most important one is, whether the conclusion of this oath is only a part of the ceremony of administering the oath, or a substantive part of the oath itself. The second, of much less consequence, whether, by reason of the oath naming King George only, it ceased to be requisite after his death. The third, whether any exemptions were given by any statute in force at the time of passing the 6 Geo. 3; for to such exemptions it is contended that the defendant would be entitled. The first of these questions, on which it may be truly said that the case almost entirely turns, was ably argued on both sides. It is this,—What is the meaning of the words the Legislature have used in the concluding part of the formula of the oath? Are they a part of the oath itself, or merely the mode of administering it? Applying the established rule, and reading them according to their ordinary sense and their grammatical construction, I cannot bring myself to doubt that the words at the end of the oath are to be repeated by the party taking it, and he is to make use of these expressions: "And I do make this recognition, acknowledgment, abjuration, renunciation, and promise heartily, willingly, and truly, upon the true faith of a Christian." Nor can I doubt as to the meaning of those words. They cannot possibly mean that the party taking the oath swears that he makes it "heartily, willingly, and sincerely, upon the true faith" of any other person than himself. They cannot mean that he makes it with as much regard to truth, and with the same degree of faith, that any other person who is a Christian would do. They must mean that he swears with the true faith of a Christian, as he himself is, and, therefore, none but a Christian can take the oath. This appears to me to be the natural, plain, indisputable sense of the words used, and, consequently, unless they are for some just reasons to be qualified or altered, the oath must be taken in those very words, wh. . it cannot be except by a Christian. And, further, every person who is enjoined and required to take the oath of abjuration must take it in the above-mentioned form, by 6 Geo. 3, c. 54; and by the 1 Wm. 3, c. 6, s. 10, no member of the House of Commons shall vote in the House of Commons, or sit there during any debate after the Speaker is chosen, until he has taken the oath in the manner prescribed by the last-mentioned Act. It is impossible that an enactment can be more distinct and clear that every member of Parliament must take the oath in the form and manner so prescribed, or be liable to the penalties. No one by the express words of the statute can be exempted. It is, however, true that words which are plain enough in the ordinary sense may, when they would involve any absurdity or inconsistency, or repugnance to the clear intention of the Legislature, to be collected from the whole of the Act or Acts in pari materiâ, to be construed with it, or other legitimate grounds of interpretation, be modified or altered so as to avoid that absurdity, inconsistency, or repugnance, but no further (an instance of which in this Act of Parliament I shall hereafter advert to); for then we may predicate that the words never could have been used by the framers of the law in such a sense; and the main argument of the learned counsel for the defendant was that, if the words in question were read as part of the oath, it would be followed by such absurd, or at least by such manifestly unjust, consequences, as to lead to the conclusion that such could not have been the meaning of the words, and therefore that they ought to be modified or altered in a certain degree, and for the sake of avoiding that absurdity or injustice, in order to make sense of them they ought to be read, not as part of the oath, but as the mere mode of administering it, which precise mode would not be obligatory at common law, and certainly not since the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105. The absurdity or injustice is stated to be this,—That every man who is elected to be a member of Parliament is bound to serve, and cannot excuse himself, and this enactment, understood in its ordinary sense, would prevent him from so doing. Again, it is said a form of oath with a similar provision is required by the statute of the 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, in all cases where the oath of abjuration is required by existing Acts, and one of them, the 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, requires it to be taken not only by all civil and military officers, schoolmasters, &c. but authorises two or more justices of the peace, or a person appointed by the Privy Council, or by a commission, to tender it to any person whom he or they shall suspect to be dangerous or disaffected to his Majesty or his Government; and upon neglect or refusal the person so neglecting or refusing is to be deemed a Popish recusant convict, and as such to be proceeded against; and it is said that it would be a flagrant injustice to construe the oath to apply to persons who were not Christians, and could not therefore take the oath, and that to avoid that injustice in this one case the latter words ought in all cases, when the oath is required to be taken, to be construed not to be part of the oath itself. But I think it quite impossible to maintain that there is any absurdity or any such manifest injustice in the provision that an oath shall be taken in the terms in question as to justify an alteration of its plain words in the present case. We must construe those Acts of Parliament without allowing ourselves to be influenced by any of the political feelings of the present day as to the proper policy to be pursued with respect to her Majesty's subjects professing the Jewish faith. Looking at these provisions of the Legislature in a judicial spirit, which we are bound to do, how can we say that it is a flagrant violation of natural justice and a manifest wrong to make a provision which has the effect of preventing all but Christians from being members of the Legislature of a Christian country? Whether it is a politic measure or not to exclude them is not within our province to inquire, and it would be very wrong in us to offer, or even to hint any opinion. There is no reason, therefore, on the ground of inconsistency or absurdity, to modify or alter the language of the oath in the case of members of the Legislature, which alone is the present question, and the only case in which practically the question is likely to occur. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether there would be any reason to modify or alter it in the other cases provided for by the 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, on the ground of the supposed manifest injustice of exacting an oath from Jews which they cannot conscientiously take, and, upon their refusing to take it, to punish them as Popish recusants. Such a circumstance would practically never occur. The power given by the statute to two justices of the peace, or a commissioner, to tender the oath to all such as they or he should deem dangerous or disaffected to the king or his government (obviously meaning the abettors, secret and open, of the Pretender), it is highly improbable would ever be exercised against a Jew or a person not a Christian, who in those times were few in number in Great Britain, and who were very unlikely to be engaged in plots on behalf of the Roman Catholics to subvert the Protestant succession. If a Jew or any person not of the Christian faith should be guilty of conduct such as to lay him open to just suspicion of being so engaged (and it is only in cases of suspicion on just grounds that it is to be presumed that two justices of the peace or a royal commissioner would act), he would have himself to blame for subjecting himself to the discretionary power of those persons to have the oath prescribed by the statute administered to him. The conferring this power in any case was, undoubtedly a strong measure as applied to Christians, and was enacted only in consequence of the danger of the Protestant constitution; and though the measure, if enforced against a Jew who could not conscientiously take the oath, would be one of still greater severity, it is impossible to say it would be so flagrantly unjust as to enable one judicially to pronounce an opinion, that it could not have been the meaning of the Legislature in such a prescribed case that the oath should be administered in the prescribed form. If it be too severe, it is for the Legislature to mitigate its severity by altering the form of oath, not for us to interpret plain and clear words in a mode directly contrary to their ordinary sense, to avoid what may be thought a hardship. But, even admitting that there would be ground for a modification in such an improbable though possible case, the same reason does not apply to a member of Parliament, the only one now under consideration; there is no absurdity or injustice in requiring an oath that none but a Christian can take from every member of the Legislature, and consequently no ground for modifying or altering the terms of the oath as administered to any member on offering to take his seat; adeo quæ frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur. If, in the vast majority of possible cases, in all of ordinary occurrence, the law is in no degree inconsistent or unreasonable, construed according to its plain words, it seems to me to be an untenable proposition, and unsupported by authority, to say that the construction may be varied in every case because there is one possible but highly improbable one in which the law would operate with great severity, and against our own notions of justi The utmost that can be reasonably contended is, that it should be varied in that particular case so as to obviate that injustice—no further. Because it would be hard to impose the oath in the terms prescribed in the case of a Jew suspected of disaffection by two justices, is that any reason why it should be altered in every other case, th ugh the express words may be insisted on in all such cases, the cases of ordinary occurrence without ny injustice? If we find a single extremely rare case, in which, on account of its apparent inconsistency, we can judicially predicate that the Legislature never meant the oath in its precise terms to be applied, can we conclude that they did not mean it in any other case? I think it clear we cannot. If this argument were to prevail, Roman Catholics themselves would be exempt from taking the full oath, and might legally insist upon the omission of the final words. It is then contended that the sole object of the Legislature in directing this oath to be taken was to affect Roman Catholic subjects—not to exclude Jews; and, therefore, that the enactment ought to be so construed as not to apply to them, which would be effected by holding the last words to be a part of the formula of administration only. It is, indeed, true, as a matter of history, that the occasion of prescribing this particular form of words was the danger which Parliament apprehended from a particular class of Christians, whose loyalty they doubted and whose sincerity they suspected, and, therefore, directed this oath to be taken in a manner which afforded a more perfect test of both, and a superior sanction to one in a less stringent form. But it is a fallacy to argue, that because the immediate object of the Legislature was to give a more binding effect to a Christian oath, not to exclude the Jews and others than Christians, therefore they meant all such to be admitted, and, consequently, that the terms of the oath ought to be modified so as to carry that object into effect, and to permit all not of the Christian faith to take the oath in a form binding on their consciences. Nothing was further from the contemplation of the Legislature. The truth is, they never supposed that any but Christians would form a part of either House of Parliament. The possibility that persons of the Jewish persuasion should be peers, or be elected Members of Parliament, probably entered into their contemplation as little as that of Mahomedans or Pagans being placed in either category. Both of these are, in effect, on precisely the same footing in this respect as the Jews, and the argument applies equally to all. In enacting a provision aimed at a peculiar class only of Christians, the Legislature have, in the most positive terms, required an oath from every member of the Legislature which none but a Christian can take; and this enactment must have the effect of closing both Houses of Parliament against every one but a Christian. To alter such strong words the clearest proof would be required of the intention of the Legislature to allow all who were not Christians to be admitted. But a case may be supposed where it might be done; for instance, if it appeared by the terms of the Act itself, or those in pari materiâ, that it was, notwithstanding the positive words, the object of the Legislature that all those not Christians should be admitted; for instance, to put the strongest case, supposing that there were a recital in the Act that all persons of whatever religion ought to be admitted to Parliament, and directed that an oath should be taken in the form in question, there would be an inconsistency and repugnance in the Act itself in imposing an oath in those precise terms, and then, according to the established rule, to carry the declared intention into effect, and obviate that inconsistency and repugnance, the language of the oath ought to be modified. This must in such a supposed case be held to have been within the Act in order to make sense of it; but it is far otherwise in the present case. The express words of the oath necessarily exclude all but Christians, and no intention to include all who are not Christians can be collected from the Act itself or any other Acts on the same subject, or in pari materiâ. None can be collected from the history of the times in which those statutes were enacted. It would indeed be a startling proposition that the Parliaments of Queen Elizabeth, Wm. 3, and Geo. 3, meant all, whether Christians or not (for they are all on the same footing in this respect), to be admitted to Parliament. As little inference can be drawn from enactments in the 1st of Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, that persons refusing shall be deemed Popish recusants convict, and, as such, to forfeit, and be proceeded against. This is merely a mode of indicating the class of punishments to which the persons refusing were liable, and which are equally applicable to persons of all religious persuasions. If any argument could be derived from that expression, it would be that the enactments applied to Roman Catholics only, and it would prove too much. It is, however, said to follow from one of the established rules of construing acts of Parliament that the enactment in this case ought to be applied to Christians only, and my brother Martin relies much on that ground. That rule is, that we ought to consider what is the mischief intended to be remedied, and to construe the Act so as to extend the remedy and suppress the mischief; but this rule has, in my judgment, no application to this case. The mischief aimed at, no doubt, was the admission of a particular class of Christians without a solemn, searching, and stringent test of their veracity; and the enactment requires no extension to effect the purpose of suppressing that mischief, but does it effectually, when construed according to its ordinary meaning; but there is no rule of construction which authorizes a judge, when the remedy is complete, and the enactment is distinct and clear, and applies to all persons in express terms, to limit its operation to the particular mischief, and to alter the words for the purpose of effecting the repression of that only. This is, in truth, to legislate, and not to construe, and to legislate, too, in this case in a way which no one can for a moment suppose that Parliament, which enacted the law, could have ever thought of doing. How can a judge pronounce that a less stringent measure might have as well carried into effect the immediate object of the Legislature, and so proceed to construe the clause so as to give it that operation only? This would be to depart altogether from the proper duty of a judge, to alter the law, and not to expound it. Such considerations belong to the province of statesmen, and not of judges. I am, for the above reasons, clearly of opinion hat the oath ought to have been taken by the defendant, using the words in question as part of the oath, and, as he did not do this, it is quite unnecessary to decide whether if he had been willing to do so, and if he had insisted that he should be sworn on the Pentateuch, the oath administered in that form would have been sufficient. The second question arising on the construction of the Act is whether, as the form of the oath given by the 6 Geo. 3, c. 63, mentions the name of "King George" only, the obligation to administer it ceased with the reign of that sovereign, because it was applicable to no other than to him. I think this argument cannot prevail. It is clear that the Legislature meant the oath to be taken always thereafter; for the enactment is general, that it shall be taken without limit of time, and the oath is not confined to the existing monarch, but mentions the successors; and, as it could not be taken in those words during the reign of a sovereign not of the name of George, it follows that the name "George" is merely used by way of description of the existing sovereign, and that it must be altered from time to time in the name of the sovereign in the manner it was when actually administered in this case, in order to carry the obvious meaning of the enactment into effect. This is an instance in which the language of the Legislature must be modified in order to avoid absurdity and inconsistency with its manifest intentions. It is to be remarked, too, that the Legislature, in the 10th of Geo. 4, c. 7, s. 1, recognizes the oath of abjuration as that directed by law to be taken, and the constant practice in the late and present reign has been to administer it. The third question arises upon that part of the section of the 6th of George 3, which directs the oath to be taken "with benefit of the same savings, provisoes, and indemnities," as by the Act before mentioned, or any other Acts, or any part of them then subsisting, are directed and enacted. It is contended for the defendant, that there were statutes which gave an exemption to Jews, and which were existing at the time of the passing of the 6 Geo. 3. The first of these statutes is 9 Geo. 1. It is to oblige all Papists in Scotland, and all persons in Great Britain of the age of eighteen or upwards, who have not taken the oaths for the security of his Majesty's person and government required by the 1st Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 13, to take them in one of his Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster within General or Quarter Sessions of the county, &c. where they dwell, before the 25th of December, 1723, or to register their names and real estates on or before the 29th of September, 1724, under pain of forfeiture of their estates. The 10 Geo. 1 explains and amends the Act of 9 Geo. 1, extending the time for taking the oaths to the 28th of November, 1724 (with a proviso for all those in prison or beyond sea), and exempts those who take the oath on or before the day from the obligation to register, and extends the time to register to the 24th of June, 1725, but in default enacts that their estate shall be forfeited. This Act contains a proviso in favour of Quakers, and there is a clause which, after reciting that the following words are contained in the latter part of the oath of abjuration,—viz. "upon the true faith of a Christian," enacts that whenever his Majesty's subjects professing the Jewish religion shall present themselves to take the oath of abjuration in pursuance of that Act, or the recited Act (9 Geo. 1), the said words, "upon the true faith of a Christian," shall be omitted out of the said oath, and the taking of the said oath by such persons professing the Jewish religion without those words, in like manner as Jews are permitted to be sworn to give evidence in courts of justice, shall be deemed to be a sufficient taking of the abjuration oath within the meaning of this and the said recited Act (9 Geo. 1). It is clear that those Acts have no operation at all on the taking of the abjuration oath in Parliament. They apply only to the taking of the oath in Westminster-hall, or at the sessions, with a view of saving the necessity of registering the estates of those who take it,—and, further, neither was in force at the time of passing the 6 Geo. 3, the last having expired on the 24th of June, 1725. I may also observe, that the latter Act, 10 Geo. 1, shews that the Legislature at that time thought these words, "upon the true faith of a Christian," part of the oath itself, and that persons of the Jewish persuasion were obliged to take the oath with those words. It is, therefore, a legislative exposition of the meaning of the former Acts. But I do not lay very great stress on arguments deduced from legislative expositions. It is, however, a great confirmation of my opinion to find that the result of the application of the true rules for the construction of Acts of Parliament to this particular case corresponds with the exposition which the Legislature themselves give to those words in the reign of Geo. 1, when they thought it necessary to make a statutable provision for altering the oath in the case of Jews, and removing the words from it. In the course of the argument, reference was made to some Acts, and others, of which a list has been supplied, which it was said had the effect of continuing the 10 Geo. 1. The Indemnity Acts are:—2 Geo. 2, c. 31; 4 Geo. 2, c. 1; 6 Geo. 2, c. 4; 8 Geo. 2, c. 17; 9 Geo. 2, c. 26; 10 Geo. 2, c. 13; 12 Geo. 2, c. 6; 13 Geo. 2, c. 6; 27 Geo. 2, c. 13; 28 Geo. 2, c. 21; 29 Geo. 2, c. 32; 6 Geo. 3, c. 7; the Act of the 3 Geo. 2, c. 29, relating to the wills of Papists; and 11 Geo. 2, c. 11, and c. 17; 19 Geo. 2, c. 16, 28 Geo. 2, c. 10; 31 Geo. 2, c. 21; 33 Geo. 2, c. 13; Geo. 3, c. 26; 4 Geo. 3, c. 38, on the same subject; and 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, for the relief of Papists from certain disabilities. None of these statutes nor any others, appear to continue the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4, with respect to Jews, or to have any bearing upon the present question. Nor does the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, the Act to relieve doubts as to the validity of oaths, affect the present case. If the words in question were only the mode of administering the oath, the statute would have that effect, because the oath was administered in a form and with ceremonies which the defendant declared to be binding. But, if they form part of the oath itself, the statute has no application, and I am clearly of opinion that they form part of the matter to be sworn to; that is, part of the oath itself. I, therefore, am clearly of opinion that our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

Sir F. POLLOCK, C.B.—The facts of this case, and the circumstances under which it comes before the Court for judgment, have already been so fully and distinctly stated, that I may at once pass to the real question for our decision. I entirely agree with the rest of the Court as to three of the points made. I think that one only of the four points raised by the learned counsel for the defendant calls for an elaborate judgment, and that is, whether the defendant, by repeating the words of the oath of abjuration (omitting the expression, "on the true faith of a Christian"), and giving to the words so repeated the sanction of an oath, binding on his conscience, has complied with the stat. 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, s. 1, so as not to be liable to the penalties of 1 Geo. 1, c. 13, s. 17. The 6 Geo. 3 requires the oath to be administered in "such manner and form" as is thereinafter set down and prescribed (that is to say): then comes the form of the oath, the concluding part of which is, "upon the true faith of a Christian." The section goes on to enact, "that all and every person and persons who are enjoined and required to administer, take, or subscribe the oath of abjuration, shall respectively administer, take, and subscribe the oath of abjuration according to the form herein set down and prescribed, in such courts, within such time limited, in such manner, and with due observance of the same requisites, and with benefit of the same savings, provisoes, and indemnities, as by the said Act above mentioned, or by any other Acts, or any part of them, now subsisting, are directed; and in case of refusal, he or they shall be subject and liable to the same penalties and disabilities as by the laws and statutes aforesaid are enacted." Now, by the 16th section of the 1 Geo. 1, no member of the House of Commons shall vote in the House of Commons until he shall take the oath of abjuration in the manner directed; and the penalty of the violation of that section is 500*l*. This action is brought to recover that sum, and gives rise to the question I have already stated. It cannot (I think) be denied, apart from any grounds presented with a view to lead to a different construction, that the plain and obvious meaning of the statute is that the oath shall be administered and taken according to the very form set down and prescribed by the Act; but it is said that clear and substantial grounds for a different construction may be found in the reasons for the decision adopted by my brother Martin. First, it is said, Ormichund v. Barker establishes that an oath is to be administered to a witness according to the rites of his religion, and so as to be binding on his conscience; and if it be so, that is sufficient. Then it is said, the defendant has taken the substance of the oath in a manner which is legal, being that which is binding on his conscience; and as the object of the statute was not to introduce a religious test, but to ascertain the loyalty of the party called upon to take the oath, and as anybody may be called upon to take it, and therefore Jews may be so called upon, and as it would be highly unjust, and therefore very absurd, to require Jews to take the oath in this form, subject (on refusal) to the very penal consequences contained in the Act, the Act cannot be so construed; but may be construed so as to give an opportunity to them, in common with all her Majesty's subjects, to take the oath in a form in which (according to their religious belief) they can take it. With respect to the case of Ormichund v. Barker, it appears to me to have decided merely this—that the common law of England agrees with the law of nations, that "the form of an oath is to be accommodated to the religious persuasion which the swearer entertains." These are the very words of Puffendorf, book iv. chap. 2, sec. 4. The intercourse of nations must frequently give rise to the necessity of the sanction of an oath in matters that concern both, sometimes with reference to treaties into which they may enter—sometimes with reference to the administration of civil or criminal justice. The sanction of an oath, if valid at the place where taken, ought to be considered valid everywhere (just as a marriage, valid at the place where celebrated, is, generally speaking, valid everywhere else); and as an oath is the personal act of the party taking it, if a witness be in a foreign land, his oath ought to be received as it would be received in his own country. In fact, a judicial oath—for justice is of all countries and climes—is governed by the law of nations; but an oath of office or of qualification is governed by the municipal law of the state which requires it to be taken, and by those laws alone. If a man cannot obey the municipal law of the country in which he resides, he is at perfect liberty to quit it. It may be a very sound reason for altering the law by a competent authority, but we are not, in my opinion, justified in substituting another law in its place; nor can we substitute another form than that which the law has provided. But it is said that it is competent to us, sitting here, so to construe the statute as to give to the defendant the relief which he requires; nay, that it is our duty, so to construe it, inasmuch as the opposite construction would lead to an injustice amounting to an absurdity. The general argument involved in this course of reasoning is certainly not without some appearance of authority. In some cases, no doubt, limited words in a statute have been said to be very much extended. The most remarkable instance of this is the Act commonly called "De circumspecte agatis" (the 13 Edw. 1), in which no bishop is named but the Bishop of Norwich. Lord Coke, however, in his Second Instit. commenting on this statute says—"The Bishop of Norwich is here put but for example; but it extendeth to all the bishops within this realm." The only remark I would make on this is, that if this turns on the mere construction of this statute, I do not believe such a construction of a statute would be tolerated in modern times. My own impression is, that the explanation of this very ancient statute—little more than 100 years from the time of legal memory—is, that the judges were by that document called upon to enforce, as to the Bishop of Norwich, that which was the known usage as the law of the land previously as to all bishops. There are other examples, more modern, where what is called a remedial law has been extended by what is called "necessary implication" or "reasonable intendment." On the other hand, the verbal effect of some clauses in Acts of Parliament has been restrained. Instruments requiring stamps, which are directed not to be received in evidence, but which, notwithstanding, have been received in evidence for collateral purposes, and other instruments, declared to be void to all intents and purposes, have been held to be void only so far as is necessary to accomplish the object of the Legislature. But, notwithstanding these and other instances that might be put, I very much doubt the soundness of the supposed rules of construction laid down, when applied to the acts of the Legislature. I admit that, with respect to the written contracts of parties and the wills of testators, we must endeavour to construe them as well as we can; and if one construction leads to manifest absurdity, and a different construction leads to a sensible result, we are at liberty to reject the construction which leads to the absurdity; but, then, it must be a "construction," not a substitution of something else, either by omitting what is there or introducing something that is not there; nor can we reject a will, however unjust we may think it, not even if we thought the injustice of it amounted to an absurdity: the absurdity must be something opposed to right reason, and not merely to our notions of policy and justice. But I do not think we are at liberty to use the same freedom with the statutes of the realm as perhaps we may be allowed to do with the contracts of parties and wills of deceased individuals. The language of a will must speak for itself, assisted by all external circumstances; the testator cannot explain it; and in the case of a written contract, for wise and sound reasons, the law does not allow it to be explained by parol evidence; but as to the Legislature, it continues with ability and wisdom to correct its own errors (if errors they be); to give effect to its own intentions, and to enforce its own views; and I think where the meaning of a statute is plain and clear, we have nothing to do with its policy or impolicy, its justice or injustice; its being framed according to our views of right, or the contrary. If the meaning of the language used by the Legislature be plain and clear, we have nothing to do but to obey it, and administer it as we find it; and I think, to take a different course is to abandon the office of judge, and to assume the province of legislation. But is it at all doubtful what the Legislature intended to enact when these statutes passed? I quite agree with my brother Martin, that the statute of 6 Geo. 3 must be considered in connection with the statute 1 Geo. 1; but I go further—I think it ought to be considered in connection with all the statutes in pari materiâ—and, making that comparison, let us see whether any doubt can exist as to what was the real intention of the Legislature in making the enactment under consideration, and whether it was not intended to require the oath to be taken in the very form of words set down, whatever might be the consequence of those words forming part of the oath. The earliest statute to which I think attention should be drawn is the 1st of Eliz. c. 1, intituled "An Act to restore the ancient jurisdiction of the Crown in matters ecclesiastical." By sec. 19 of that Act all public officers and public servants are to take an oath "according to the tenor and effect following," as is there stated; and by 5 Eliz. c. 1, s. 5, all such persons as are mentioned and set forth in that section; namely, persons who fill great offices of state, persons who occupy certain situations in the country, are required to take and pronounce a corporal oath upon the Evangelists, "according to the tenor, effect, and form" of the same oath verbatim; and by sec. 16 it is enacted, that "every knight, citizen, and burgess of the Parliament shall take the said oath" Now, I apprehend the effect of these statutes was to exclude from all the offices mentioned in the first statute, and from all the occupations mentioned in the second statute, every person who could not take the oath verbatim; and as by the 16th section of the second Act all members of Parliament are to take the oath, at this period no Jew could have been a member of the Legislature. By the statute 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, s. 15, "the tenor of which oath hereinafter followeth"—there is the oath of supremacy and allegiance, concluding with these words—"All these things I do plainly and sincerely acknowledge and swear, according to the express words by me spoken, without equivocation or mental evasion or secret reservation whatsoever, upon the true faith of a Christian;" Here, I believe, for the first time (as far as I am aware), is to be found the expression, "upon the true faith of a Christian;" "and to which oath so taken, the person so taking it shall subscribe his or her name or mark." Apparently the effect of this statute was to exclude Jews from any benefit that might arise from taking the oath, for they certainly could not take the oath "according to the tenor" (which is the same thing as verbatim), nor subscribe it as so taken; and I think no one can doubt, that if it had been pointed out to the Legislature of that time that the effect was to exclude all but Christians from taking the oath, they would have replied that such was their intention, at least that they had no intention to the contrary. By 7 Jac. 1, c. 6, various persons are required to take the oath; among others, knights, citizens, and burgesses, who are members of Parliament. These statutes remained in force till 1 Wm. & Mary, sess. 1, c. 8, s. 2, which repealed them and substituted other oaths in their place. The 12th section enacts, the oaths that are so substituted are to be taken in these express words. There is, then, the oath of allegiance and the oath of supremacy, and the oath against the doctrines that princes excommunicated may be deposed or murdered by their subjects, and a renunciation of any such things; but there is undoubtedly, by the 1 Wm. & Mary, no oath calling upon anybody to swear upon "the true faith of a Christian;" and from the 1 Wm. 3 to the 13 Wm. 3, no oath appears to have been required that would exclude Jews, unless it was necessary that the oath should be taken upon the New Testament. But the 13 Wm. 3, c. 6, imposed an oath on all persons holding any office, &c.; and the oath concludes, "upon the true faith of a Christian." The persons are required to take the oath hereinafter mentioned, and to which oath so taken the person shall subscribe his name. Members of Parliament are required to take it by the 10th section, and the penalty is imposed by the 11th section; and that is the first introduction of the clause which is now made the subject of the present action, being repeated in the 1st of Geo. 1. By the 1 Anne, stat. 1, c. 22, the oath is to be "administered in such manner and form as is hereinafter set down and prescribed." The 2nd section of the Act is this:—"That all and every person and persons who are enjoined or required to administer, take, or subscribe the oath in the said recited Act mentioned, shall administer, take, and subscribe the same, according to the form herein set down and prescribed, anything in the said recited Act to the contrary notwithstanding." The Act of Union of the 5 Anne, c. 8, art. 22, adapted the oath to the new state of things, under the union of the two kingdoms. The 6 Anne, c. 7, for securing the succession, enacted the oath to be taken after the demise of Queen Anne without issue; and it was to be taken "on the true faith of a Christian." The mode of taking remained the same. The 6 Anne introduces regulations respecting Scotland; and here it is enacted that suspected persons may be summoned anywhere. As far as I am aware, this is the first Act in which that sort of clause is introduced. The 8 Anne, c. 15, makes provision as to taking the oaths there mentioned, and they are to be taken in the words following. Having taken this review of the Acts which are in pari materiâ prior to the 1 Geo. 1, I would ask whether it can reasonably be doubted that the Legislature, in using the expressions—"verbatim" (in one Act), "according to the tenor" (in another), "in these express words" (in a third), and "according to the form herein set down and prescribed," in the Act of Anne, and in the very statute in question now before us,—meant what the words import. All these expressions really mean the same thing, viz. that the very words set down were to be used; and are we at liberty to omit or add anything on account of our notion of what is just or unjust? And are we to alter the oath so as to accommodate it to the conscience of a Jew, when it it is notorious that it was the avowed object of the Legislature to exclude even Christians, unless they were of one particular denomination? And if this relaxed construction cannot be put on the statutes of Elizabeth, of James 1, of William 3, and Anne (as I think it cannot), by what process of reasoning, under what authority, can we put a different construction upon the statutes of Geo. 1 and Geo. 3? But let us see what is the view taken by the Legislature itself upon this very subject. By the 9 Geo. 1, c. 24 (an Act which has happily expired), persons not taking the oath were obliged to register their names and real estates. The title of the Act is important. It has been suggested that these provisions of the law were directed against Papists only. That is not so. The title is—"An Act to oblige all Persons being Papists, in that part of Great Britain called Scotland, and all Persons in Great Britain (which must mean whether Papists or not) refusing or neglecting to take the Oaths appointed for the security of his Majesty's Person and Government, by several Acts herein mentioned, to register their Names and real Estates." It is manifest from this statute, and the title of it, and the enactments of it, that in Scotland these provisions were levelled distinctly against the Papists only, so that in Scotland the Jews were not within the provision of this Act; but in England it was levelled against all, whether Papists or not. The attention of the Legislature was drawn to the hardship of the case of the Jews, occasioned by this last Act, and redress was given by an Act which passed the following year, namely, by the 10 Geo. 1, c. 4; but the redress is limited to the grievance; and it was enacted that Jews might, for the purpose of the Act alluded to, take the abjuration oath, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian." So taking the oath, Jews were not to be required to register their names and real estates. There is nothing in that Act that makes the 17th section applicable to the 1 Geo. 1; and if that statute were now in force, it would not entitle Jews to take the oath, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian," for the purpose of holding office or sitting in Parliament. The effect of that statute is entirely confined to the 9 Geo. 1 and to the 10 Geo. 1, which enlarges the time for taking the oath again; and the same observation applies to the 13 Geo. 2, a statute I shall presently refer to; but every other effect of not taking the oath of abjuration is left untouched. Now, according to the view of my brother Martin, at that very time (for the construction of the Act cannot now be different from what it was then) not only was it unnecessary to pass any Act to relieve the Jews in respect of the registration of their names, but for any purpose whatever: it was competent, not only for a Jew, but for a Turk, a Hindoo, a Pagan, or any other (if by accident he were born in the realm, and were capable of taking any oath binding on his conscience), to take the abjuration oath, omitting the words "on the true faith of a Christian," and to be elected and take his seat as a member of Parliament, and to fill any of the offices already alluded to, unless he were kept out by some other test. And as the essence of the matter is said to be taking substance of the oath in a manner binding on the conscience, I think it is not possible to stop short of this—that if a jury found that a Roman Catholic was bound by the oath, without the words "on the true faith of a Christian," even he might so take it. I cannot for this purpose discover any difference between a Roman Catholic and a Jew; as in the 13 Geo. 2, c. 7, an Act for naturalising such foreigners as shall be settled in any of his Majesty's colonies, there is a provision with reference to Jews, shewing that when the Legislature had its attention called to the subject, a provision was proposed to be made to relieve Jews from the necessity of taking the oath with these words, the exemption and privilege of omitting them is confined to the particular matter of grievance that was intended to be remedied: "And whereas the following words are contained in the latter part of the oath of abjuration, 'on the true faith of a Christian;' and whereas the people professing the Jewish religion may thereby be prevented from receiving the benefit of the Act, be it enacted, that whenever any person professing the Jewish religion shall present himself to take the said oath in pursuance of this Act, omitting the words, it shall be deemed a sufficient taking of the oath in order to entitle such person to the benefit of being naturalised by virtue of this Act; but every other consequence of the oath being by law required, with the insertion of the words, is left just as this relieving statute found it." With these statutes before me, and with the legislative commentary on them which the last two statutes and the 13 Geo. 2, c. 7, furnish, I think, we are not, as judges living though we do in a more enlightened and liberal age—to be liberal above what is written, or by any method of construction, when the statutes distinctly, expressly, and imperatively require one form, to substitute another as equivalent for the object or purpose, as we may think, of the Legislature, when every one acquainted with our history and the course of our legislation must in candour acknowledge that in any part of the reign of Geo. 1, Geo. 2, or the early part of Geo. 3, it was the furthest from the intention of the Legislature to admit into the House of Commons persons of the Jewish religion. The language used appears to me to be so clear, so distinct, so express and stringent, as to exclude a relaxed (although it may be called a liberal) construction by judges, quite as much as it is intended to guard against a mental reservation by those who think that the effect of an oath can honestly be so evaded. On these grounds I agree with my brothers Parke and Alderson, that our judgment ought to be for the plaintiff, and the judgment of the Court is therefore for the plaintiff.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. Keene, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister at Law.

(Before Lord St. Leonard's, L.C.)

March 30, April 15 and 21.

Re North of England Joint-Stock Banking Company, ex parte Straffon's Executors.

Joint-stock Companies Winding up Acts—Duties and liabilities of directors of public companies considered—Contributory—Member—Jurisdiction.

A. B. through his broker, purchased 120 shares in a banking company, and in respect of ten of them, his grandson, as his agent, executed the deed of transfer; no transfer of the other 110 shares was made, but dividends upon the 120 were from time to time received by A. B. Upon the company being wound up the executors of A. B. were, upon appeal (affirming the decision of the Vice-Chancellor), held to have been rightly placed on the list of contributories in respect of the whole number.

A. B. purchased of the directors of the same company (who by their deed of settlement were authorised to sell them) 580 shares. On these shares also A. B. regularly received the dividends, although the strict formalities of the deed of settlement were not complied with, yet, under the particular circumstances of the case, the executors of A. B. were held to have been rightly placed on the list of contributories in respect of those shares.

By an order of the Vice-Chancellor, A. B. in whose name 700 shares were registered, was declared liable to contribute to the expenses of the company to the extent of 120 shares, and a reference was made to the Master, to inquire as to his liability in respect of the residue of the shares. On an appeal by A. B. to discharge or vary the former part of such order (the latter part not being objected to), the Court affirmed the order of the Court below as to the 120 shares, and holding that it had jurisdiction, disposed of the whole of the case.

If directors act in contravention of or abuse their powers as between themselves and the general body of shareholders, they cannot maintain an act done in their violation.

If directors, not pursuing or obeying the directions of their Act, adopt a new rule, and hold out to the public that such new rule is a binding one, and money is lent on the faith of it, and the person who comes in under it is acknowledged as a purchaser and shareholder, and admits and treats himself as bound by it (although an informal transaction) such a course of dealing will operate so as to bind both parties, although the deed of settlement in respect of formalities is not obeyed.

The Courts have never held that every minute circumstance must be obeyed which the directors themselves ought to obey.

If directors, disregarding every minute circumstance (the shareholders not calling them to account for doing so), make a man a shareholder without going through all the necessary formalities, such a proceeding will be valid as between a party thus dealing with the directors and the directors themselves, so as to bind them.

If a man, dealing with another, professes to put forth a binding obligation (which he knows not to be so) signed by his own name, executed by one of his own relations as his agent, and which is executed by other parties who are dealing with him, and bonâ fide executed by them as a solemn instrument which he himself had executed, and on which he had acted as owner of the property professed to be thereby assigned by receiving dividends to which he would not have been entitled except on the assignment of that property, he will be bound by it.

When one party makes a representation to another by which the position of the latter is altered, the former is bound by it: he will not be allowed to set up the invalidity of a deed which he himself had professed to be a valid deed when he knew it was a nullity.

If a man, by representation that he is entitled to be registered, becomes registered, and is admitted de facto a shareholder, he is not at liberty to refer to any informality, and to insist on it that he is not a shareholder against those persons who do not dispute his liability.

If the directors of a public company do an irregular act, and admit a man, and treat him as a shareholder, they are both bound; and if directors, in violation of matters of regulation which are within their own power and competency, deal and are dealt with on the faith that everything was rightly done, the Court will presume that everything was rightly done as against those directors.

If, by a course of dealing with a company, scripholders have been permitted to become shareholders de facto, although no real transfer should have been executed, such a proceeding will be valid and binding.

Where it was known that a party was not an original scripholder, but stood in the place of another scripholder from whom he had had no transfer, such a proceeding was held to be binding.

If a man is bound to execute a settlement containing particular covenants, and, by the desire of the persons who have a right to call on him to execute such settlement, executes another instrument containing a covenant that he will obey, observe, and perform all the covenants in the principal deed, he is, as it were, by infusion a party to the deed of settlement just as much as if he had been an original party to and had executed it.

A man cannot be made liable as a member of a company without there is a privity between him and the company.

If a man be not liable as a member of a company, in order to bring him in as a contributory, it must be shewn that, although not a member, he was liable to the losses and demands of the company. The word "contributory" has a much wider signification than the word "member."

Where an Act of Parliament looks to the equitable as well as legal liabilities, but does not furnish on the face of it any particular remedy for the former, you cannot proceed by a scire facias against a man at law under a particular provision of that Act, without deciding whether he would be liable in any other way.

A man cannot be made liable on a judgment against the official public officer by scire facias, unless he is a legal member.

This was an appeal motion to discharge or vary an order made by the Vice-Chancellor, Knight Bruce, and to reverse and discharge an order of the Master (Farrer) to whom the winding up of the company had been committed, whereby the names of Henry Nelson and Jonathan Reavely, the surviving executors of John Straffon (the appellants), were included in, or retained, or ordered, to remain on the list of contributories of the said company, as contributories without qualification in respect of 700 shares in the said company, and that their names might be struck out and excluded from such list, or in case their names should in respect of any of the said shares be included in the said list, then that their names might be included with a qualification that in respect of each respective share they were liable only as contributories of the said company, subsequent to the several times of the respective alleged purchases thereof by the said John Straffon, and up to the time of the decease of the said John Straffon only.

The Vice-Chancellor, on exceptions to the Master's report, refused the motion as to 120 of such shares; and referred it to the Master to inquire what were the terms and nature of the contract as to the remaining 580.

The facts of this case are reported, 16 Law T. Rep. 531, and they, as also the material arguments of counsel, appear in the judgment.

From this order the executors appealed.

W. D. Lewis, in the absence of Russell and Bethell, opened the case for the appellants.

The Lord Chancellor, at the rising of the Court, said,—I wish counsel on both sides to consider whether this is open to any of the great questions which have been discussed: I do not mean to give any opinion at all binding on myself now, I going to enter into the facts; but it does appear to me to be a very simple case as regards the shares under that deed. Two of the officers of the company are parties to the deed, and Mr Straffon's name is on the deed as a party, and he covenants with those officers that he will perform the stipulations in that deed of settlement. It would be an absolute fraud on the part of Straffon, if he were allowed to withdraw from the deed, having acted upon it, and frequently received dividends. Mr. Straffon believed that he was a member of the company; he acted as a member of the company, and he entered the payments which he received in his cash-book, and wrote them off at the other side regularly. Therefore, he believed that he was a perfect member, and he would have been very much surprised if he had been told that he was not. As to those shares, supposing that deed of settlement to be so far binding on him that he could not withdraw from it, which does not involve the question, whether it was executed strictly by his authority or not, I think he would not have been allowed, as between him and his copartners, to withdraw from it; for he actually entered into the partnership, was in the receipt continually of dividends; he became de facto a partner, and he became such by what is not a forged, but by what is said to be an inoperative instrument; there can be no question as to that; but, then, was the deed executed within the meaning of this deed of settlement by that deed referring to it? It clearly was. I can easily understand that in the deed of settlement, after some time, and after there had been a great many changes, there was no room for it, and they took what was the same thing—two responsible officers of the company, who were parties to this separate deed; and the new purchaser covenanted with those two officers that he would obey all the conditions of the deed of settlement. I am clearly of opinion that there was an execution in effect, and in operation within the meaning of the deed of settlement itself. The deed of settlement provides that if a man executes the deed once in respect of any number of shares, it shall not be necessary for him to execute any further deed. That applies to so many further shares as were purchased of anybody else other than the directors, and consequently there is no want of formality in that respect. Then, the large number of shares seems to have been bought of the directors. I am not aware how they can be impeached: I am not aware what the question is as to principle. It may be a very difficult question, if A. sold to B. and the sale was informally carried into execution, and the company should come to B. the purchaser, and say, "You shall execute a deed that shall render you liable." That has been carried into effect upon an assignment of leaseholds, but has been carried too far, and has been corrected. The same principle applies to this case: I do not think, therefore, that they can do so. The directors are authorised by their deed of settlement to sell shares; they do sell shares; and there can be no better evidence than the certificates issued by themselves that they have sold their shares, and that Mr. Straffon was the buyer of them. He was found to be in possession of the shares by the receipt of the dividends, to which he could not have been entitled if he were not the purchaser according to the certificates. It has been clearly decided and settled in this court, that if one man sells to another shares, the seller is not at liberty, having received the money, to set the purchaser at defiance and say,—"I will leave you liable." The seller has a right to be indemnified by the purchaser from the future liabilities in the partnership. He may therefore call upon the purchaser, and compel him to place himself in such a relation as will, under the deed of settlement, absolve the seller from further liability. The directors here are sellers, the man here is the purchaser, and therefore the directors, in the character of sellers, could compel this man, if necessary, to execute proper instruments. Circuity in the common case would do it, because the seller might insist upon being relieved; and when he was relieved the purchaser would be liable; but here the parties are the directors and the purchaser, therefore there is no circuity. The Court must consequently, I apprehend, hold that the directors, being the sellers, have that equity against the purchaser which now impresses upon him in this court the character of purchaser upon a completed contract, and there-fore liable.

Rep. 14; and also the statute, 7 Geo. 4, c. 46.

Wednesday, April 21.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case turned upon a decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, by which, as I understand it, he decided that the person in question was answerable to the extent of 120 shares, and sent it to the Master to inquire as to his liability in respect of the residue of the shares. I believe I have now all the evidence before me which can possibly be obtained in regard to any of the shares; I mean, therefore, myself to dispose of the whole of the case, and to discharge so much of the order as refers it to the Master to inquire as to the shares, ultra the 120 shares, and as the appeal has come before me, although that part is not objected to, I believe I have perfect jurisdiction to deal with the whole of the subject. Now the question really is whether this gentleman was or not a contributory. The case was argued before me to an extent that struck me as somewhat surprising. It was insisted that according to the law I had no power to place any person as a contributory to the liabilities of this company unless he was a perfect legal member according to every term of the deed; it mattered not what had been the transactions; there could be no estoppel, there could be no acceptance, there could be no binding dealing, but it all turned on the question simply whether or not he was a legal member bound by all the liabilities of the company, and entitled to all the benefits of the company according to the strict literal construction of the deed. It was further said that I was not at liberty to administer any equity; I must not look out of the deed, but I must examine the transactions by the deed of settlement; and I must not consider what the equities are, although equities might have to be administered and parties might be liable; but I am bound to look at the legal remedy, and cannot go beyond it. Now I believe that those rules so laid down, and so insisted on at the Bar, are not the rules by which I am to be guided in carrying the Winding-up Act into execution. The first thing to ascertain is, who is a contributory according to the Act of Parliament: according to the contention of the partner in this case, nobody can be a contributory who is not a legal member, bound as I have said by all the liabilities, and entitled strictly to all the benefits of the deed. Now that is in no respect consistent with the Act itself, because the Act says in section 3 of the interpretation of the different words that "the word 'member' shall mean any person entitled to a share of the assets or accruing profits of any such company at the time of presenting the petition for dissolving the same or winding up the affairs thereof under this Act." That "the word 'contributory' shall include every member of a company and also every other person liable to contribute to the payment of any of the debts, liabilities, or losses thereof, whether as heir, devisee, executor, or administrator of a deceased member or as a former member of the same, or as heir, devisee, executor, or administrator, of a former member of the same deceased, or otherwise howsoever." So that "contributory" here has a sense put upon it much larger than the word "member;" for the word "member" looks certainly like a person who is legally such, in the proper sense of the term; but a contributory is a man who is liable to contribute to the payment of the debts, liabilities, and losses of the company in anywise whatsoever. Therefore, all I have to consider is, in deciding whether a man is a contributory or not, to ascertain whether he is liable in any manner whatsoever to contribute to the debts, liabilities, and losses of the company. Now, sec. 76 directs that the official manager shall make out a list of the members "and other contributories of such company," together with so and so, and so and so; so that it is not simply a list of members, but it is "members and other contributories." It is perfectly, clear, therefore, without deciding generally who is exactly to be a contributory, which must depend on the special circumstances of each case, that the word "contributory" has a much larger meaning than the word "member." Now, in point of fact that has been decided in a case in this very company—Reaveley's case—in which it was decided, and which was afterwards affirmed by the Lord Chancellor, in that case shares in a banking company were purchased for an infant, without disclosing his infancy, the vendor signing a certificate required by the company's rules that the purchaser was of age: it was discovered that the boy was under age, and the father entered into a deed with the company by which he covenanted to indemnify them from all losses, and so on, which might be sustained by reason of his son having become a member during his infancy. He was held to be liable as a contributory. He in no sense a member, no more a member of company than any stranger in this Court, the son was a member, but he was liable indirectly to the losses, debts, and liabilities of the company to the extent to which he had benefited, and he was therefore held to come within the term, not of a member, which in no sense he was, but of a contributory, which in sense he actually was. That has received the confirmation of the Lord Chancellor, and has never been disputed. Now, where there is no privity between the company and the parties, and no liability, no question arises. Those are the cases, particularly, of Ex parte Hall, The Newry Railway Company v. Moss, and Fenwick's case. In not one of those cases was there privity; the parties were not in privity, and if they be not in privity it is quite clear they cannot be liable as members. Then, if they be not liable as members, you must, in order to bring them in as contributories shew that although they are not members, they are liable to the losses and demands of the company: those cases are altogether distinguishable from, and do not touch this case. Now, there is a class of cases very much relied upon, which are cases within the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 46: these are the cases of Ness v. Angus, Ness v. Armstrong, and Bosanquet v. Shortridge. Now all those cases depend upon a particular Act of Parliament, for although that Act of Parliament looks to the equitable liabilities as well as the legal liabilities, yet it does not furnish on the face of it any particular remedy for equitable liabilities; but you cannot, as you ought not to be able to proceed by a scire facias against a man at law under that Act, under that particular provision, without deciding whether he would be liable in any other way. But you cannot make him liable on a judgment against the official public officer; you cannot make him liable by scire facias, unless he is a legal member. Now, those cases are distinguishable upon that ground; and in Bosanquet v. Shortridge there is no doubt the party there (although there might have been a case raised about . general conduct, and the way in which the business had been conducted), the directors—the company—disclaimed the act. The transfer was not good unless it had the sanction of the directors; the directors actually withheld that sanction; they refused that sanction, and therefore they did, and within moderate time, actually disclaim and put an end to adopting that informal act. I think that those cases stand on their own grounds, and can in no respect touch this. Now, I beg distinctly to be understood, in deciding this case, that I am not about to decide anything which would touch a question like that in Ex parte Morgan. Since I have sat here I followed that case myself, and I see that I followed the same rule before, when sitting in Ireland, and I shall therefore adopt the same rule now. I have no intention of laying down in any manner that directors can act in contravention of their powers, that if they abuse their powers as between themselves, and the general body of the shareholders, they ca maintain an act done in violation of their powers. But that is a totally different question from that which is now before me,—namely, whether if directors not pursuing or obeying the directions of their Act in respect of particular transactions, do choose to adopt a new rule and hold out to the public that that new plan of theirs is a binding one, and that men advance their money on the faith of that dealing, and that they acknowledge a person who comes in under an imperfect transaction as a purchaser and shareholder, and he admits and treats himself as bound by that which may be, and I assume it to be, an informal transaction, I say it is a totally different question, altogether, and a distinct question, whether such a course of dealing will not operate so as to bind both parties, although the deed of settlement in respect of formalities is not obeyed. But a course of dealing and transaction has been adopted which may be considered in point of fact in direct opposition to the provision of the deed of settlement. There would be no safety for mankind in dealings of this nature, extensive as they are, with so much money embarked in them, if the Courts had ever held, as they never have held, that every minute circumstance must be obeyed which the directors themselves ought to obey; but if they disregard them, if the shareholders do not call them to account for doing so, if a course of action had been adopted in the particular company without complaint, although they may have arrived at making a man a shareholder by what I should call a short cut, instead of going through all the necessary formalities, that may be perfectly good as between parties thus dealing with the directors and the directors themselves, so as to bind them. Now, with those general observations, let us see what the Acts of Parliament require, and what the facts of the case are, and what the law, as applicable to the point, is. I am, perhaps, taking more trouble than this case really deserves from any importance that belongs to it; with a view of endeavouring to come to some right conclusion in this court, if I can, as to what really is the operation of these proceedings, so that it may at least, so far as my opinion goes, be understood on what grounds we are proceeding, and that there may not be unnecessary expense in dealing with subsequent cases without the parties being aware what the opinion of the Court as to the law is where there has been a variation like that in this case from the strict rules of the deed of settlement. Now, this deed of settlement gives leave to the shareholders, "their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, with the consent of the directors, to sell or transfer their respective shares, such consent to be testified by the managing directors signing their names in the margin of the instrument of transfer." That is one of the great solemnities which it is said, and truly said, has not been obeyed literally in this case; "and for the purpose of obtaining such consent, the holder of the shares proposed to be transferred shall give notice in writing to the directors, to be left with the manager, at the banking house in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, of the proposed transfer, and which notice shall contain the respective names and addresses of such holder and the proposed transferee." Then, before any shares shall be sold, the same shall be offered to the directors at the lowest price, and in case they refuse to accede "to any transfer of shares, they shall, on the request of the holder thereof, be obliged to purchase the same out of the funds and on behalf of the company, at the value thereof for the time being set upon them as aforesaid." Now, here there are some things of form which are of substance, namely, that the party who wishes to sell must give notice to the directors of his intention, of his own name, and of the name of the proposed purchaser or transferee; and he must state what the lowest sum is he is willing to take: the directors have a right to purchase at that sum. If they neglect to purchase at that sum, the man has a right to sell. That is substance. Now, that substance has been complied with in every case. In every case before me,—in every purchase,—a notice was given of the intention to " stating the name of the owner, the name of the transferee, and the price the party was willing to take; in every case the directors having that before them declined to purchase, and then the shares were transferred in the way I shall presently shew, and the word "transferred" was written across each of those documents, and signed by one or more directors. Now, that which is not of substance, and which is considered as material, is, that the directors' consent was not testified by the managing directors signing their nar the margin of the instrument of transfer. Now let us see how far that can be supplied. Sec. 24 directs, "That the directors shall have power from time to time to make such regulations respecting the form, preparation, custody, and registration of the instrument of transfer of shares as shall appear to them expedient." It does not appear that they ever did make them, as I apprehend. "And all sales and transfers of any shares not made conformably to the provisions of the deed of settlement, and according to the regulations of the directors, shall be invalid at law and in equity," which words are very much relied on. "And every purchaser or transferee of shares shall, in respect thereof, if required by the directors, either expressly, or by a general regulation in that behalf, execute a deed, to be prepared for the purpose by the directors, whereby he may enter into covenants with the trustees, or the public officers of the company, duly to observe and abide by all the stipulations, provisions, and regulations for the time being, affecting or intending to affect holders of shares in this company." Then, passing over for the present some other clauses, there is a clause, the 32nd, which provides that "every person to whom shares shall be transferred, and who shall not then be a member of the company, and subject to the provisions of the deed of settlement in respect of any other shares, and every person who, being the husband of any female shareholder, or the executor, administrator, or legatee of any deceased shareholder as aforesaid, shall, by notice in writing as aforesaid, signify to the directors his desire to become a member of the company in respect of the shares vested in him in such capacity, and shall not, at the time of the said shares becoming vested in him by the means aforesaid, be a member of the company, and subject as last aforesaid in respect of any other shares, shall, as to all duties, obligations, claims, and demands upon or against him in respect of such shares, be considered a member of the company from the time of the same shares being so transferred to or so becoming vested in him as aforesaid; but as to all profits, rights, privileges, benefits, and advantages to arise from the same shares, no such person shall be considered as a member in respect of the same until he shall have executed the deed of settlement." So that here you observe a purchaser's liability accrues before his right to profit accrues; he may become liable to the burthen, but may not become entitled to the benefit, and that tells against this gentleman of course whose case is now before me, because he may have become liable, although he may not have become entitled to the benefit, and it shews that the argument that he must in all respects be a member before he can become liable, is not a sound one. Then clause 33 is an important one in this case—"Every person in whom any shares shall vest by transfer or otherwise, and who, previously to such vesting, shall have executed the deed of settlement, and who shall be a member of the company to all purposes in respect of any other shares, shall, as to all the shares so vesting in him as aforesaid, be considered as a member from the date of the transfer to him, or from the time of leaving his title to such shares in the banking-house of the company, or proving it as aforesaid, and shall not be required, nor shall it be necessary for him again to execute the deed of settlement." Then upon the transfer of shares the old certificates shall be given up and new ones given. Now in this case there were a great many shares which had become vested in those parties; there were two classes of shares, one which I have not yet alluded to, and the other which I have; the first consisted of 120 shares, which went through the process I have already described, and which it is not worth while going through in detail. The documents I have here; and I believe I describe them truly when I say that all the substance was performed; the notices were given, and the shares were offered to the company, the company refused to avail themselves of the offer, the holder then sold them regularly through a broker, and they were bought by the gentleman in question. Now the way in which it was managed in the purchase of the 120 shares was this, and that appears by the evidence in this matter to have been the scheme which was adopted by the directors in order evidently to save stamp-duty, and to avoid the necessity of formal transfers. It has been observed that the 24th section says, "that if the directors require it, the party coming in shall execute a deed to be prepared for that purpose," whereby they entered into covenants with trustees and public officers truly to observe the stipulations in the deed, so that there is an express direction for that purpose. Then, as I have already observed, it is provided by sec 33 "that members requiring additional shares need not execute the deed." Now on those two clauses the deed which I have now before me was evidently framed, and it is made between the persons who were the holders of those shares of the first part, the purchaser, Mr. Straffon, a gentleman whose property has be embarked in this speculation, of the second part, and the public officers of the company of the third part. Now, in that deed, which is a regular transfer of the ten shares, there is a covenant by Mr Straffon, the purchaser. He covenants with the persons who sold them, and with the persons who are there of the third part—the public officers of the company—"their successors, administrators, and assigns, that he, the said J. Straffon, shall and will, from time to time, and at all times hereafter in respect of the said shares hereby assigned, well and truly pay all instalments and sums of money due, or hereafter to become due thereon, and also perform, fulfil, and keep all and every the covenants, stipulations, provisions, and regulations contained in the deed of settlement of the said company," and also all other stipulations, provisions, and regulations for the time being affecting or intended to affect holders of shares in the said company. I think they made a mistake in that respect, for, in point of fact, this very deed was executing that very obligation; but it is only a work of supererogation: he covenants that he will do again the very act which he has just performed. Now this deed is executed regularly by the persons who were the holders, the sellers, and by the public officers; there is the receipt for the purchase-money, and Mr. Straffon's name appears to it in very legible characters, "John Straffon;" and there is an attestation by a person who has made an affidavit in this matter John M'Intosh Straughan: he witnesses this deed. Now this deed was sent to the company (I may as well dispose of that) as a deed executed by the purchaser upon the purchase in consequence of the notice served on the directors, and accepted by and acted on by them, and as the solemn deed of Mr. Straffon accepted by the company, dealt with by the company as a bonâ fide deed without the slightest knowledge that it had not been executed by the person who was represented on the face of it to have executed it, and who ought to have executed it, and the execution by the real party, Mr. Straughan witnessed. That deed being so acted upon and accepted by the company, Mr. Straffon receives the dividends: as a purchaser under and in consequence of that deed he receives dividends, regularly signs either by himself or by his agent the receipts for those dividends. He has an account-book, in which, among other things, he keeps an account of his property in this company, and he enters regularly, in a business-like manner, the dividends which were from time to time paid to him. He discharges the debtor side by giving credit for the sums from time to time paid to him. Then I am seriously asked in an elaborate argument to treat this as a perfect nullity, because it turns out that a grandson of this gentlemen signed the deed for him, believing himself to be authorised to do so, and who acted for him generally in his affairs; but Mr. Straffon himself having made the purchase, Mr. Straffon himself being the purchaser, perfectly competent to transact business, bought those shares himself in the market, transacted the business himself, and then acted upon this deed so sent forth as his deed; and I am seriously asked here, and told that I am bound to treat this deed as a deed which is a perfect nullity, because it is not executed by the party by whom it professes to be executed. But that fortunately for mankind is not the law of this or any other court. If a party dealing with another professes to put forth a binding obligation which he knows not to be so, I am told in argument, and it was insisted it is quite impossible there should be any estoppel in a case of this sort. Why should there not be an estoppel in a case of this sort as well as in any other? How can a party be heard to say in any court of law or equity, that that instrument sent forth as his own, professed to be signed by his own name, executed by one of his own relations, which is sent to his house, which is executed by other parties who are dealing with him, and bonâ fide executed by them as a solemn instrument which he himself has executed, on which he acts as owner of the property professed to be assigned to him, on which he received dividends as property to which he was entitled, that he could not have received except on the assignment of that property—how is it possible to maintain in a court of justice that that man is not bound by the instrument, but that he is to have all the benefits and reject all the liabilities and burthens which he professes on the face of the instrument to have become subjected to in consequence of, and in return for the benefits secured to him. Fortunately that is not the law of this court. If I had to decide this case for the first time, I should decide without the slightest difficulty that Mr. Straffon can never be heard to say against any person in the company that that was not his deed. And, I must do Mr. Straffon's memory the justice to say, that he never made any such statement. He died in the belief that those shares were his bonâ fide property in all respects, that he was entitled to the dividends, that he received them under his title, and that he was bound by the instrument. The contention is raised by his executors after his death, and not by himself, and therefore he is not open to the reproach, that having sent forth this deed as his own he attempts to escape from it. Now what is the law on the subject? Without going through a great many cases which may be easily accumulated, the point is, I believe, perfectly settled in the case of the London Grand Junction Railway Company v. Freeman. There in point of fact, scrip-holders were held to be entitled, although there had been no transfer of shares. That goes to another point of the case which I have had occasion to consider, and I will refer to the cases more peculiarly applicable to that point presently. But that shews that, although there has been no real transfer, yet if there has been a course of dealing with the company in which they have permitted scripholders to become shareholders de facto, that that is binding even although there has been no transfer, and even in a case where it was known that the man was not an original scripholder, that he stood in the place of another scripholder, and there was no transfer, yet that has been held, as it ought to be held, valid and binding. Now, in the Sheffield, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Manchester Railway Company v. Woodcock, there a purchaser sent in a transfer, which he knew to be void. There was a blank left for his name, and the consideration was untruly stated, and it was held to be a rule of law, that when one party makes a representation to another by which the position of the latter is altered, the party making the representation is bound by it, and he was not at liberty therefore to set up the invalidity of that deed which he himself had sent forth as a valid deed when he knew it was a simple nullity. But the deed was, as many of these deeds are, in blank; and the consideration was untruly stated. He knew, therefore, that the deed was perfectly void, and yet he executed it as a valid deed, and then he did just what the executors are attempting in this cause,—he attempted to set up the invalidity,—and he was told, and properly told, that he was estopped from doing so. In the case of the Cheltenham and Great Western Union Railway Company v. Daniel, a party who had not done the acts necessary to make him a proprietor, had claimed to be registered, and he was registered, although not entitled in consequence of the invalidity of the acts under the deed of settlement, he was not entitled to be registered; but they submitted and did register him. He then said, "I am not a shareholder; here the deed of settlement has not been pursued; there has been no real transfer; I have been improperly admitted." He was held to be bound by the representations in consequence of which he had been registered, and he was not at liberty to shew that invalidity which an utter stranger perhaps might have done. Now, those cases I myself followed in Ireland in the case of Taylor v. Hughes, and I have never had any reason to doubt that the law was well settled by those cases. The result, therefore, is just one directly opposite to that which has been so very strenuously contended for; for those cases prove, so far from its being necessary to make a man a contributory that he should be modo et formâ a member according to the strict provisions of the deed of settlement, those cases prove just the contrary, that if a man, either by representation that he is entitled to be registered, becomes registered and is admitted de facto as a shareholder, he is not at liberty to refer to any invalidity, and insist on it that he is not a shareholder against those persons who did not dispute his liability. If the directors themselves do an irregular act, and admit a man, and treat him as a shareholder, they are both bound. It is not an Act like that in Morgan's case, in direct violation of the substance of the powers which are given to them, but these are matters of regulation. They are within their own power. They are, in a sense, within their own competency; that is, they are not at liberty to disregard the deed, but if they do disregard the deed, and if they deal with mankind, and mankind deal with them, on the faith that every thing is rightly done, then I say when they do the least act, for example, when they give the certificates which I have before me in this case, you must presume every thing rightly done up to that time as against directors issuing certificates solemnly declaring that given person named in them is the person entitled to so many shares in that company. The law, therefore, I apprehend, turns out differently from what was insisted on; and, therefore, I am speaking generally as regards this case, and particularly as regards this particular deed, I am clearly of opinion that this deed is binding both at Law and in Equity on Mr. Straffon as a deed sent forth by him. I mean as far as regards his liability as a contributory that he never could be heard to say that that deed was not executed by him, and it is well for the people of this country that such is the rule of law. Now it was argued, on a great many points, that this transaction was altogether invalid. First, it was said, that the deed of settlement was not executed. Now, some of the clauses do certainly seem to refer to the execution of the deed of settlement by a new shareholder, but there is no express clause that he should sign the deed of settlement, though it seems to be considered necessary. But there is a clause that if the directors shall require it the party shall execute a deed of covenant to two of the public officers to abide by the deed. Now, this was done in the present case; and, as I have already said, it is proved by a witness that that was the course deliberately adopted by this company in the transfer of shares where there was a great number. The question is, whether, in point of law, it was necessary to execute the deed of settlement, whereby the execution of this deed was not in substance and in law, an execution of that deed of settlement? If I am to execute a particular part containing particular covenants—if I execute any instrument by the desire of persons who have a right to call on me to execute a particular deed—if I execute another deed like this one with a covenant with the partners that I will obey, observe, and perform all the covenants in the principal deed, where is the possible objection to that? Am I not bound by the deed of settlement to observe all its provisions? Am I not, by infusion as it were, a party to the deed of settlement just as much as if I had been an original party and executed that very deed? Where, then, is the substance of the objection? There is nothing approaching to it. Now, I have already got rid of the objection that the directors did not sign the margin of transfer, because that was not necessary to make this gentleman liable in consequence of the dealings in this case, and under the authorities. Then the way in which the transaction as to the remainder of those 120 shares was managed was this. I have already referred to the clause, which says, that if a man has once become bound by the deed of settlement, he need not execute another deed of settlement; and the way in which this company transacted their business was, that when once a man executed the deed of settlement, they permitted the thing to go on by writing across the notices, without actually signing the deed of transfer. Now, I am clearly of opinion that that course of transaction bound them, and all dealing with them, and that neither this Court, nor any other Court, would ever permit the company, whatever might be the effect of the rules, to deal with the public in fair and bonâ fide transactions like these, and then to endeavour to reverse them, because all the solemnities have not been complied with. But the directors are not doing so. It is the representatives of the man who was to have the benefit. If there had been a benefit he would have claimed it, and the directors would not have withheld it from him; but there is a burthen, and the burthen they endeavour to disclaim, although they would have claimed the benefit. Now, these being the transactions according to the ordinary rule of business, and there being that express clause that it was not necessary for a party bound by the deed again to execute the deed of settlement, which is a work of supererogation, I think that every one of those transactions must be deemed valid and binding on both the directors and the shareholders. Then I consider as part of the same class all those shares which were not bought of the directors themselves. I consider them as a separate class which were afterwards purchased by this gentleman, and I therefore refer them to the same rules, and consider them to be bound by the same law. I am therefore of opinion—I am not dealing with those shares which were bought directly from the directors—I am clearly of opinion that this gentleman was liable as a contributory to the extent of all those shares, and that therefore, in that respect, the order must be varied and he must be declared liable. Now that brings me to only one other separate transaction, a different transaction, standing on different grounds. The directors, by section 25 of the deed, are authorised to buy shares, and when they have bought them, they are authorised to sell them for the best prices that can be obtained, or otherwise to deal therewith as to them shall seem most expedient:—"Every purchaser of such shares shall when and so soon as he shall have paid his purchase-money to the directors, and otherwise have complied with the provisions of the deed of settlement respecting purchasers of shares or such of them as may be applicable to the case now in contemplation, receive from the directors a certificate or transfer of the same shares under the hands of two of their body, and be thereupon recognised as a shareholder in respect of the same shares, and invested with all the rights, privileges, and qualifications incident to the complete ownership of such shares." I have already stated the purchasers may be liable although they may not have the benefit; then on every transfer of shares the certificate of former holders shall be cancelled and new certificates issued. Now the directors having a certain number of shares sold a number of those shares to this gentleman directly, and he bought them and paid for them, and obtained a regular certificate of them. It is now before me: it is directed to the directors of the company, to themselves:—"Take notice that we, the directors and proprietors of the North of England Joint-Stock Banking Company, have agreed to sell, and do propose to transfer unto John Straffon, of South Shields, in the county of Durham, ship owner, 100 shares now held by us in the capital stock of the North of England Banking Company," at so much per share. He declares that he is willing to buy, and that deed is witnessed by Mr. Bendies, who is the managing director, and written across it "Transferred," with two persons' names, both directors, I suppose. Now it is said, that this is totally void, because the clause in question requires that the party should have complied with the provisions of the deed of settlement respecting purchasers of shares, or such of them as may be applicable to the deed in question. Then they say there is no deed of transfer; that, consequently, there are no names of two directors in the margin, and so on. Now, this is a direct sale by the directors themselves to this gentleman. He paid his money. They gave what they considered a proper notice to themselves. They issue to him a certificate, which is before me, certifying that he is a shareholder, and entitled to these shares, and all the benefits, and they deal with him thereafter as a shareholder. They pay him dividends, and he receives dividends on those shares, just as he did on the others, and then I am asked to declare that this gentleman is not the owner of those shares, and not a contributory. Why? The cases which I have referred to go infinitely beyond this case. The directors having sold those shares, and issued the certificates to the purchaser as the holder of those, and frequently treated him as de facto the owner of those shares, never can be heard to say in a Court of Justice, that that person is not as they have represented him, and allowed him by that representation to become entitled to dividends, and to become liable to the responsibilities. They never can be heard to say that he did not fill the character which they themselves have attributed to him in their own document. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that that was a valid transaction, without reference to the deed of settlement; I am by no means satisfied that it is not strictly good under the deed of settlement; for when he has paid his money, he is to comply with the provisions of the deed of settlement, or such of them as may be applicable to the case now in question, and when he has done so he is to receive from them the certificate of shares, and thereupon be recognized as a shareholder. If, therefore, they give him a certificate, and recognize him, can he or they be heard to say, for it amounts to the same thing, but particularly can he be heard to say, that there is something he ought to have complied with, but which they did not require, when I see the certificate under their hands that he paid the money and is a shareholder? I am perfectly content to believe, and to hold that every thing is rightfully performed up to and preceding the issuing of that certificate. When this case was first before me, the first day, I mentioned what of itself would be quite a sufficient ground on this head. These directors sell their shares; by the rule of this Court a seller can insist on a purchaser making himself liable to everything as the transferee of shares. They would have a right, therefore, as against the purchaser, to compel him to do all proper acts in order to relieve them from their liability as owners of the shares. He would have a corresponding right against them, and compel them in this Court, at all events if there was anything necessary in point of formality, to give effect to the sale and purchase and transfer of the shares he would have a power in this court to compel them to clothe him with every legal interest, with everything that remained in them. He was, therefore, the owner of the shares, and as such he was a member, if not a member strictly, he was a contributory, and therefore, I am clearly of opinion that this gentleman's representatives are liable for the whole 700 shares. I declare that to be the order. They must be put on the list as liable for the whole of the 700 shares, and this appeal must be dismissed, and dismissed with costs.

Bacon.—There were the costs of the motion before the Vice-Chancellor. The Master had put the parties on the list for the 700 shares. He did that which your lordship's judgment has now confirmed. There was an appeal from that to the Vice-Chancellor, who made the order which your lordship is now aware of, and I am to ask you that we may have the costs of that motion before the Vice-Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—No; I shall give no costs except of this motion.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

March 12 and 29.

DAVIES v. DAVIES.

Lunatic not found so by inquisition—Breaking into capital—Maintenance.

A lunatic, not found so by inquisition, was entitled to a sum of Consols in court and other property, the income of which was not sufficient for her necessary expenses and maintenance, on the petition of the mother and brother of the lunatic the Court ordered part of the Consols to be invested by the brother in the name of the lunatic, in the purchase of a Government Annuity, to be paid by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt to the brother until further order, he undertaking to apply the same for the benefit of the lunatic.

This was a petition presented in the suit by Miss S. F. Davies, a lunatic, but not so found by inquisition, her mother, and her brother, H. P. Davies, for the purpose of having a sum of 762*l.* Consols, standing to the credit of the lunatic in the cause, and belonging to her absolutely, laid out in the purchase of a Government Annuity, or otherwise applied for her maintenance and support. It appeared that for the last seventeen years the lunatic, who was of the age of forty-seven years, had been in an asylum, at an annual charge of 50*l.*; that the income of the 762*l.* Consols and of other property to which the lunatic was entitled, was insufficient for meeting this charge, and the further necessary expenses of her maintenance, and that the deficiency had hitherto been made up by her mother and brother. It was stated that 762*l.* Consols would purchase a Government Annuity of 43*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*

Stevens appeared for the petitioners, and admitted that there was no precedent for the present application in a case where a party had not been found lunatic by inquisition. No one appeared in opposition to the petition.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—What we are now asked to do would be a very wholesome jurisdiction to exercise. I much wish to do it, though I do not recollect anything so strong having been done.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH, not being aware of any precedent to the contrary, it seems to be only carrying one step further what this Court does continually in reference to infants, in applying capital, for instance, for an apprenticeship fee.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—I am a little afraid; but I think it may be done, and that part of the Consols may be invested in the purchase of a Government Annuity for the benefit of the lunatic. The order ultimately made was, that the petitioner, H. P. Davies, should be at liberty to contract with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, for the purchase of such an annuity as 600*l.* Consols would purchase. The contract to be entered into by H. P. Davies, as agent on behalf of the petitioner S. F. Davies, and the annuity to be purchased in her name. The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt (a) to pay the annuity to the petitioner, H. P. Davies, until further order, he undertaking to apply the same to the maintenance of the petitioner, S. F. Davies.

SPRYE v. REYNELL.

Costs—Staying proceedings until payment of—Waiver of right to stay proceedings.

By a decree of November 6, 1849, S. was ordered to pay the costs of Lady R. in certain suits. On November 20, 1851, pending an appeal, S. made a motion against Lady R. and Messrs. W. and G. her solicitors, for the production of certain documents, and for leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, whereupon it was ordered that S. should pay to Lady R. and Messrs. W. and G. their costs of that application, and, with their consent, certain documents were ordered to be produced, and leave was given to S. upon his depositing 50l. with the registrar to answer costs, to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review against Lady R. and all other necessary parties, without prejudice to the hearing of the appeal, which was, however, to be stayed until the 15th December then next. On the 15th January, 1852, S. having deposited the 50l. filed the supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, against Lady R., L. W. and A. W. (two of the partners in the firm of Messrs. W. and G.), and C. W. who entered their appearance thereto on the 19th January, 1852. Afterwards attachments issued against S. for nonpayment of the costs, which he was directed to pay by the decree of 6th November, 1849, and by the order of the 20th of November, 1851. On the 1st March, 1852, the Master refused with costs to make any order on the application of Lady R., L. W. and A. W. to enlarge time for answering until six weeks after S. should have paid costs directed to be paid by the order of the 20th of November, 1851. On the 2nd of March, 1852, a motion being made in the Court below, on behalf of Lady R. and L. W. and A. W. that all proceedings against them for want of an answer should be stayed, until four weeks after S. should have paid them the costs directed to be paid by the order of the 20th of November, 1851, or for four weeks' further time to answer, they were allowed four weeks' further time to answer, without prejudice to an application to stay proceedings in the suit. On the 8th of March, 1852, a motion being made in the Court below, on behalf of Lady R., L. W. and A. W. that proceedings against them for want of answers might be stayed until three weeks after S. should have paid the costs directed to be paid by the oder of 20th November, 1851, and have cleared his contempt, and that all proceedings against Lady R. should be stayed until three weeks after S. should have paid not only the said costs but the costs in the two former suits directed to be paid by the decree of the 6th of November, 1849, the motion was dismissed with costs:

Held, varying the decree of the Court below, that the payment of the costs directed to be paid by the order of November 20, 1851, was a condition annexed to the order, giving S. leave to file the supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, and as it had not been fulfilled, Lady R. and L. W. and A. W. were entitled to have proceedings stayed, that part of the motion being granted; but, on the ground of waiver, that part of the motion seeking to stay proceedings until the costs in the suits generally should be paid, was refused. No costs on either side.

(a) It was stated by Mr. Stevens, that it had been ascertained that no objection would be raised by the Commissioners as to paying the annuity to the brother, under the order of the Court.

On the 3rd of April, 1846, the original bill of Reynell v. Sprye, was filed by Sir Thomas Reynell, bart. since deceased, against R. S. M. Sprye and Henrietta Digby, his , and others, to set aside and obtain the cancellation of a deed of the 15th of July, 1843, whereby Sir Thomas Reynell had conveyed for the benefit of R. S. M. Sprye and Henrietta Digby, his wife, a moiety of an estate to which he was entitled in reversion at the time of the conveyance, and also a contract to convey the other moiety to the same parties upon the ground of fraud. On the 28th of August, 1846, the cross bill of Sprye v. Reynell was filed by R. S. M. Sprye and Henrietta Digby, his wife, against Sir Thomas Reynell and Charles Wilson, praying specific performance of the contract contained in Sir Thomas Reynell's letter of the 14th of May, 1844. Pending the suit Sir Thomas Reynell died, and the proceedings were revived in the usual way by a bill of revivor and supplement filed by Lady Elizabeth Reynell, the widow of Sir Thomas Reynell, who was his executrix and universal devisee and legatee, against R. S. M. Sprye and his wife, and by a bill of revivor and supplement filed by R. S. M. Sprye and his wife against Lady Elizabeth Reynell. When these causes came on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, his Honour, by a decree dated the 6th of November, 1849, declared the deed of the 15th of July, 1843, and the contract contained in the letter of the 14th May, 1844, to be void, and decreed that the same should be forthwith cancelled. It was also, amongst other things, ordered that the original and supplemental bill of Sprye v. Reynell, should stand dismissed with costs, and that such costs, and also the costs of the plaintiff in the original and supplemental bill of Reynell v. Sprye (including therein the costs of Sir Thomas Reynell, deceased), should be paid by the said R. S. M. Sprye; all such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master, to whom the taxation of costs in the said suit of Reynell v. Sprye stood referred. On the 20th of November, 1851, upon a motion being made before the Lords Justices on behalf of R. S. M. Sprye against Lady Elizabeth Reynell and Messrs. Walker and Grant, her solicitors, for the production of certain documents, and for leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, alleging that he had, since the decree, discovered that various documents material to his case, the possession of which had been denied by Sir Thomas Reynell, in his answer to the cross bill, were, and at the time Sir Thomas Reynell put in his answer had been, in the possession of himself or his solicitors, it was amongst other things ordered that the defendant, R. S. M. Sprye, should pay to the plaintiff, Lady Elizabeth Louisa Reynell, and Messrs. Walker, Grant, and Company, their costs of that application, to be taxed by the Master in case the parties differed about the same; and after ordering, by the consent of the said Lady Elizabeth Reynell and the said Messrs. Walker, Grant, and Company, that certain documents therein specified should be deposited with the Clerk of Records, and writs for inspection by the respective parties, and should be produced at the hearing of the appeal then pending in the said causes of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, by the consent of the said Lady Elizabeth Reynell, and upon the said R. S. M. Sprye depositing 50*l.* with the Registrar of the Court to answer costs, in case the Court should think fit to award costs in respect of the proceedings had since the decree it was ordered that the said defendants, R. S. M. Sprye, and H. D. his wife, should be at liberty within two months from the date thereof, to file such supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review against the said plaintiff, Lady Elizabeth Reynell and all, if any, other necessary parties as they might be advised; and it was thereby declared that the order was not to prevent or prejudice the hearing of the said appeal, but that the hearing of the said appeal was to be stayed until the 15th of December then next. On the 15th of January, 1852, the sum of 50*l.* having pursuant to the said order of the 20th November, 1851, been deposited with the registrar, the said R. S. M. Sprye and his wife, filed a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, against the said Lady Elizabeth Reynell, Lawrence Walker, and Arthur Walker, and Charles Wilson. On the 19th January, 1852, Lady Louisa Reynell, Lawrence Walker, and Arthur Walker entered an appearance to the last-mentioned bill. Afterwards, in pursuance of the decree of 6th November, 1849, the costs of the defendant, Lady Elizabeth Reynell, in the original and supplemental bill of Sprye v. Reynell, were taxed at the sum of 371*l.* 2s. 2d. and the costs of the plaintiff in the original and supplemental bill of Reynell v. Sprye, including therein the costs of Sir Thomas Reynell, deceased, were taxed at the sum of 1,171*l.* 13s. 9d.; and on the 2nd and 3rd of February, 1852, two attachments were issued against the said R. S. M. Sprye, the first for nonpayment of the said sum of 371*l.* 2s. 2d. and the second for nonpayment of the said sum of 1,171*l.* 13s. 9d. The costs of the motion of the 20th of November, 1851, were also taxed, and an attachment was issued against the said R. S. M. Sprye for nonpayment thereof. On the 25th of February, 1852, the defendants to the supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review served on Mr. Moss, the plaintiff's solicitor in that cause, a warrant of that date, returnable on the 1st March before the Master, which was underwritten as follows: "At which time the defendants, Lady Elizabeth Reynell, Lawrence Walker, and Arthur Walker, will apply to the Master to enlarge the time for answering until six weeks after the plaintiff R. S. M. Sprye shall have paid to the said defendants the costs directed to be paid by him by the order in the suits Reynell v. Sprye, Sprye v. Reynell, dated 20th of November, 1851, giving leave to file the bill in this suit for non-payment of which costs he is now in contempt. The Master, on the 1st of March, 1852, refused to make any order upon the application, with costs. On the 2nd of March, 1852, a motion was made before the Vice-Chancellor Parker on behalf of the said defendants Lady Elizabeth Reynell, Lawrence Walker, and Arthur Walker, that all proceedings against the said defendants for want of an answer might be stayed until four weeks after the plaintiff R. S. M. Sprye should have paid to the said defendants the costs directed to be paid by him by the order in the suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, dated 20th November, 1851, giving him leave to file the bill in this suit, and for nonpayment of which costs he was then in contempt, or in case the Court should not think fit so to order them, that the said defendants might have four weeks' further time to answer the said plaintiff's bill, and his Honour thereupon made an order giving the defendants, Lady Elizabeth Reynell, Lawrence Walker, and Arthur Walker, four weeks' time to answer, without prejudice to an application to stay proceedings in the suit.

On the 8th of March a motion was made before his Honour Vice-Chancellor Parker in the last suit of Sprye v. Reynell, on behalf of Lady Elizabeth Reynell and L. Walker, and A. Walker, that all proceedings in that cause against the defendants, Lady Elizabeth Reynell, and L. Walker, and A. Walker, for want of their answers, might be stayed until three weeks after the plaintiff, R. S. M. Sprye, should have paid to the defendants, Lady Elizabeth Reynell, L. Walker, and A. Walker, the costs directed to be paid by him by the orders in the suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, dated the 20th of November, 1851, and should have cleared his contempt; and that all proceedings in this cause against Lady Elizabeth Reynell for want of an answer might be stayed until three weeks after the said plaintiff should have paid, not only the said , but also other costs in the said suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, for nonpayment of which to the said Lady Elizabeth Reynell, he was then in contempt, and should have cleared his contempt. His Honour, however, dismissed the motion with costs, upon the ground that the Court had given the plaintiff, R. S. M. Sprye, by the order of the 20th of November, 1851, liberty to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, upon a condition which had been fulfilled, for although by the same order the costs of the motion were ordered to be paid, his Honour did not consider that the payment of those costs or the costs incurred in the former suits was to be considered as a condition precedent to be performed before filing of the bill. This motion was now made by way of appeal from the decision of his Honour Vice-Chancellor Parker of the 8th of March last.

Lloyd, Malins, and Shapter, for Lady Elizabeth Reynell and the Messrs. Walker, contended—1st. The payment of costs directed to be made by R. S. M. Sprye by the order of the 20th November, 1851, giving him leave to file the supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, rendered it imperative upon him, as a condition precedent, to pay the costs before the filing of such bill, and that all proceedings against Lady Elizabeth Reynell and the Messrs. Walker ought to be stayed until three weeks after he should have paid such costs and cleared his contempt; 2ndly. That all proceedings against Lady Elizabeth Reynell ought also to be stayed until R. S. M. Sprye should also have paid the costs in the suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, and cleared his contempt. And that there had been no waiver on their part of the right to apply for such proceedings to be stayed. They cited Partridge v. Usborne, 5 Russ. 195; 3 & 4 Lord Bacon's Orders; Beam. Orders, 3; Wilson v. Bates, 3 My. & Cr. 197; Bradbury v. Shawe, 14 Jur. 1042; Price v. Dalton, cited 3 My. & Cr. 204.

Bethell and Terrell for R. S. M. Sprye and his wife, contended that proceedings ought not to be stayed. They cited Bickford v. Skewes, 10 Sim. 193; King v. Bryant, 3 My. & Cr. 191.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This motion divides itself into two parts, namely, the general costs of the two suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, in which a decree has been made, and the costs of the motion in the month of November last. As to the costs of the motion on the 20th of November last, my original impression was against Lady Elizabeth Reynell and Messrs. Walker, Grant, and Company, or at least against the latter, but the progress of the argument has changed that impression. The motion was made in a cause in which Lady Elizabeth Reynell was a party, and it relates to the subject matter of that cause. It desired the production of certain documents for the purpose of an application for a rehearing pending an appeal in that cause. It moreover asked leave to file after the decree a supplemental bill, and it made parties to that motion four gentlemen, describing them by the name of Messrs. Walker, Grant, and Company. The Court, on that occasion, adjudicated without any consent, I believe, as to that part of it, that Captain Sprye, who made the motion, should pay the costs of it—that is, the costs of Lady Elizabeth Reynell and of these gentlemen; and that direction forms part of an order which gave leave to him to file the present bill. The consequence is, that these costs not being paid, the condition annexed to that order has not been fulfilled. The order which gave leave to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, although it also asks in the alternative, or otherwise to set aside the decree upon the ground of alleged fraud, not being complied with, my learned brother and myself are of opinion that as the subjects are so intimately connected together by the means which I have mentioned, that there is a right on the part of Lady Elizabeth Reynell, and on the part of two of the solicitors whom I have mentioned, who have been made parties to the present bill, to stay the proceedings under the present bill until those particular costs have been paid, namely, the costs given to Lady Elizabeth Reynell and to Messrs. Walker, Grant, and Company, by the order of the 20th of November, 1851. Nothing has taken place to waive the right to the payment of those costs, for they have been claimed on every occasion. As I understand, they were claimed before the Master, and they were claimed by the application made to Vice-Chancellor Sir James Parker for the order; I mean that the costs were claimed by the motion under which Sir James Parker made the order now appealed from, and the right to which is reserved by that order. With respect, however, to the general costs of the suits of Reynell v. Sprye and Sprye v. Reynell, in which the decree was made, it is arguable whether a case of waiver has been established or not; and, therefore, as to that part of the case we must hear you in reply, Mr. Lloyd.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—What my learned brother has said represents precisely the view I take.

Lloyd, in reply, contended that there had been no waiver on the part of his clients.

Lord Justice LORD CRANWORTH.—My learned brother and myself are both of opinion, that with respect to these costs, that is, the general costs of the suit excluding the costs of the order of the 20th of November last, that there has been that which amounts to a waiver on the part of your clients, Mr. Lloyd; for this reason, it may be reduced to a very simple form. Suppose your application for time had been an application having no reservation at all. Suppose it to have been not four weeks after any particular act to be done, but simply four weeks' further time to answer; that would have been a waiver of any right you had to stay the proceedings; that you do not dispute. Now, what you apply for, is four weeks after the particular act is done; that is not an absolute waiver, it is no waiver on that particular act being done; but that particular act being done, the application is the same as if it had been an application for time, there being no restriction. That is the view we take of it, and therefore the motion will be refused so far, that is, we think that the motion ought to be granted with reference to the costs of the motion of the 20th November last, and refused as to the more extended application, partly to be granted and partly refused; the proper course will be that the order should be made without any costs in the Court below, and no costs now.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—No costs on either side. On the ground of waiver we refuse to stop the proceedings in this suit in the nature of a supplemental suit, until the costs in the other suits are paid.

Lord Justice LORD CRANWORTH.—All proceedings in the cause against Messrs. Walker and Lady Elizabeth Reynell will be stayed till three weeks after the plaintiff shall have paid the costs given by the order of 20th November last; that the order of the Vice-Chancellor be varied accordingly.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

March 6 and 16.

COURTOY v. VINCENT.

Fund in Court—Accountant-General—Cheque—Annuity—Jurisdiction—Stats. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82.

An annuitant, whose annuity was payable out of money standing in the name of the Accountant-General, was sued for a debt; and judgment being obtained against him, a writ of fieri facias was issued, but nothing was found for it to attach upon. The creditor then obtained an order to stop the Accountant-General from parting with a cheque for the amount of a half-year's annuity which had become due, but, upon a petition, the Court declined making an order authorising the sheriff to seize the cheque, or to direct it to be dealt with as if it was standing in the name of a trustee, and the petition was dismissed.

The stop order, however, was continued.

The petition in this case was presented by Frederick Courtoy, one of the seven children of William Courtoy, praying that the Accountant-General might be ordered not to pay to William Courtoy, or his solicitor, a cheque for 58*l.* 5s. but that he might deliver it to the sheriff of Middlesex, or allow him to seize it under a writ of fi. fa. in part satisfaction of a judgment of law, or that the cheque might be cancelled, and the money, together with all other sums which should accrue due during the life of William Courtoy, in respect of an annuity of 120*l.* payable to him for life, might be paid to the petitioner until the judgment obtained by him should be satisfied.

It appeared that John Courtoy, by his will, dated 28th May, 1814, gave the residue of his property to George Nooborm Vincent, Robert Lovelace, Rowland Edward Williams, and Charles Drummond, their executors and administrators, in trust to pay and apply the interest and dividends to the uses and purposes thereby directed; that is to say, to pay 200*l.* a year to his son, George Courtoy, for life; and he directed that, in case he should sell or dispose of the annuity, the same should cease; and on the decease of his said son George, the testator directed his executors and trustees should cause the sum of 4,000*l.* being about the principal sum requisite for the payment of such annuity, to be divided in equal shares amongst all and every the children of his said son George, should there be any living at his decease, as he, she, or they should arrive at twenty-one, or marry; but if any or either of them should die under the age of twenty-one without having been married previous thereto, his or her share should be equally divided among the survivors; but if only one child should be living, the whole was to go to that one child, and if no child who should attain twenty-one, or be married, then the 4,000*l.* were to be paid to the children of his son William Courtoy in the same manner as directed in respect of the children of his said son George. The testator also directed his executors and trustees to pay unto his son William Courtoy one annuity or clear yearly sum of 100*l.* (which upon the decease of M. A. Woolley he directed to be increased to 120*l.*) during his life, payable half-yearly; and upon the decease of his said son, to cause the sum of 2,000*l.* to be divided equally among his children at twenty-one or marriage, with benefit of survivorship; and he proceeded thus:—"I hope that my son William will feel that, notwithstanding his undutiful behaviour to me, and the bad manner in which he has conducted himself through life, yet that I have by this disposition of my property left for his benefit, sheltered him from the possibility of want, which I am afraid would soon have come upon him had I not taken this mode of protecting him; and in order the more effectually to prevent his defeating my intention in his favour, and to prevent his disposing of such annuity or making it subject to his debts, I hereby direct that the same shall become void and forfeited in case he shall sell or dispose of the same; and as my son William may depart this life leaving children or a child not of age to claim a part or the whole of such sum, then" he directed 100*l.* a year to be paid to his son's wife, or, if she should not be living, to be applied by his executors and trustees for the maintenance of such children till twenty-one or marriage. The will was proved by all the executors on the 7th of January, 1819, and a sum of 21,000*l.* Consols. was set apart in the name of the Accountant-General to answer the annuities. George Courtoy died in August 1818, without ever having had any children. William Courtoy had six children, all of whom were of age, and the petition was presented by one of them. In August 1818, one-seventh part of 4,000*l.* was directed to be paid to the petitioner, Frederick Courtoy, who, being then with his regiment in India, executed a power of attorney authorising William Courtoy to receive the same, and 589*l.* 6s. 6d. was accordingly paid to him. Of this only 70*l.* came to the hands of Frederick Courtoy, who brought an action for the balance, and on the 22nd of December obtained judgment for 519*l.* 6s. 6d. and 9*l.* 5s. 5d. costs. A writ of fi. fa. was then issued, and the sheriff of Middlesex was directed to levy the amount; but he had not been able to find any assets of William Courtoy to seize. A half-year's annuity, however, having fallen due in January last, the petitioner obtained a stop order restraining the Accountant-General from parting with the cheque, and now presented his petition.

Baggallay, in support of the petition, insisted that by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, the sheriff had power to seize money, bank notes, cheques, bills of exchange, &c.; and by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1, the Superior Courts are authorised to make orders as to any stocks, funds, annuities, or shares, in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in like manner as if they had been standing in the name of a trustee. The Act, therefore, gave the petitioner a security upon the fund, which this Court would enforce by making such an order as would enable the sheriff to make the cheque available for payment of the debt. This was denied in Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 M. & G. 373, and the Court had held that a party was entitled to a stop order to restrain a debtor from receiving dividends of stock so as to prevent him from defeating or diminishing the security given by the Act.

Fooks, contrà, contended that the Accountant-General had no power to part with the cheque to the sheriff, and William Courtoy was paralytic, and incapable of instructing his solicitors respecting it. The annuity was one for William Courtoy for life, to be void in case he assigned it, and if the Court made any order the annuity became void, as the gift was a conditional limitation, which differed from a clause of forfeiture. The Court, therefore, would do no more than the annuitant was permitted to do by the will. In Miles v. Presland, 2 Beav. 300; 4 Myl. & Cr. 431, it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, to charge moneys standing in the name of the Accountant-General with a debt upon a judgment at law against the party entitled to the fund.

Tuesday, March 16.—The MASTER of the ROLLS said he had considered the case, and he doubted whether he had power to make any order. He could not authorise the sheriff to seize the cheque, nor did he think he could direct it to be dealt with as if it was standing in the name of a trustee. He was of opinion, therefore, that he must dismiss the petition, that an opportunity might be given for an appeal.

Baggallay asked that the stop order might be continued.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought he might continue the order.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, April 24.

Re THE BRITISH ALKALI COMPANY.

Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Acts.—Discretion of Court.

Where a company had ceased to carry on business, but the governing body were bonâ fide putting in execution their powers under the deed of settlement to wind up the affairs of the company, the Court refused to make an order under the provisions of the Winding-up Acts, although a creditor of the company to a large amount was in a position to issue immediate execution for his claim.

This was a petition presented by Mr John Guest, a shareholder in the British Alkali Company, praying that the company might be dissolved, and the affairs thereof wound up, under the provisions of the Winding-up Act. The company was established in 1835, the capital consisting of 150,000*l.* in 6,000 shares of 25*l.* each. By the deed of settlement, dated the 13th of October, 1835, among other things, provision was made for the dissolution of the company. An Act of Parliament was afterwards obtained to enable the company to sue and be sued in the name of the secretary, or any one member for the time being of the company. By that Act it was provided that execution upon any judgment in any action obtained against the secretary, or any member for the time being, of the said company, whether as plaintiff or defendant, might be sued against any member or members for the time being of the said company. At an extraordinary general meeting of the company held on the 10th of September, 1838, the capital of the company was increased to 200,000*l.* by the creation of 2,000 additional shares of 25*l.* each. In 1845 the company ceased to pay any dividends. On the 21st of May, 1851, it was resolved to let the works of the company, and to discontinue the business thereof upon the same being so let. At a meeting on the 19th of June, 1851, the directors reported that 20,000*l.* should be immediately raised, and called on the shareholders to subscribe that amount. A fund was afterwards subscribed by the shareholders to meet the exigencies of the company. At a meeting on the 4th of October, 1851, where the formation of this fund was resolved upon, an estimated statement of the position of the company was made, by which it appeared that the assets of the company amounted to 14,118*l.* and the liabilities (including a debt of 18,526*l.* to Messrs. Glyn), to 37,047*l.* At a meeting on the 19th of November, 1851, it was resolved as early as circumstances would permit, to wind up the affairs of the company. By a judge's order, dated the 15th of June, 1850, made in an action brought by Messrs. Glyn against the secretary of the company, it was ordered that upon payment by the defendant of the costs forthwith, 5,682*l.* 12s. part of the debt on the 30th of October then next; 5,352*l.* 17s. 6d. on the 30th of January, 1851; 5,283*l.* 11s. 3d. on the 30th of April, 1851; 5,224*l.* 7s. 8d. on the 30th of July, 1851; 5,163*l.* 16s. 8d. on the 30th of October, 1851; 5,100*l.* 16s. 5d. on the 30th of January, 1852; and 3,036*l.* 19s. 9d. the residue of the debt on the 30th of April, 1852, all further proceedings in the cause should be stayed; but that in case default should be made in any payment as aforesaid, the plaintiffs should be at liberty to sign final judgment, and issue execution for the whole amount remaining unpaid at the time of such default, with costs, &c. Three only of these instalments were paid, and the sum of 15,489*l.* 0s. 9d. remained due to Messrs. Glyn, who were in a position to enter up judgment on the said order, and issue execution for the said sum. On the 5th of January, 1852, a notice was served upon the company, requiring immediate payment or discharge of the said debt, but they had not secured or compounded for the same. From the affidavits filed in opposition to the petition, it appeared that arrangements had been made with Messrs. Glyn, by which their debt had been agreed to be deferred under certain terms, and that the company's works had been let for twenty-one years, at a rent of 2,500*l.* per annum.

Malins and De Gex, in support of the petition, contended that the present circumstances of the company were such as to render it proper that its affairs should be wound up. The petitioner was liable to an execution, which might at any time be issued by Messrs. Glyn on account of their debt, and he was entitled to be relieved from such a liability. They referred to Re Banwen Iron Company (see 13 Law T. 400); Re Sherwood Loan Company, 1 Sim. N. S. 165; Re The Pennant and Craigwen Company, 18 Law T. 152; and Re The St. James's Club, 17 Law T. 219.

Terrell appeared for the Droitwich Salt Company.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Daniel and Speed, who appeared for a large majority of the shareholders to oppose the petition), said, that he considered that the making an order for winding up a company under the Winding-up Act was a matter in the discretion of the Court. It did not follow that because there were ingredients in the case which gave the Court jurisdiction to make the order, the Court would therefore make it. That appeared from the judgment of Lord Cottenham in the case of The Wheal Lovell Mining Company, 1 Mac. & Gord. 1. The question, he said, was, not whether it was a case in which the Court had jurisdiction, but whether the circumstances were such as to induce the Court having jurisdiction to exercise that jurisdiction. Here the case was one in which the company had ceased to carry on business; it had ceased to pay dividends, and all parties agreed that the company was to be put an end to. The state of the assets appeared to be this; that the debts of the company amounted to 37,047*l.* and the assets amounted to 14,118*l.* not including the works, which were let for 2,500*l.* a-year, so that it was plain that upon a very moderate valuation of the works there would be enough to pay the debts and leave a surplus. If the petitioner came to the Court with any case shewing that he was pressed by any of the creditors, and asking protection against any pressing demand, the Court would consider what was necessary to be done in that position of affairs. His Honour did not find that such was the case here. Messrs Glyn were creditors, and they seemed to consider that there was sufficient property to meet the claims on the company, and they were engaged in negociating how their claim was to be satisfied. This was a state of affairs which might give rise to a difference of opinion as to the mode in which the company ought to be wound up. The petitioner thought it should be done under the Winding-up Act, and on the other side the great majority of the shareholders considered that, as they had been doing all they could to wind up the company without the intervention of this Court, they would be able to do so, and there might be some surplus remaining for the shareholders. What might be the result under the Winding-up Acts if this petition were to be granted, and these Acts to be applied against the wish of the shareholders, no one could tell. It was a very different case where there was insolvency or pressing demands against the shareholders which would result in actions against them speedily, or where there were liabilities to be enforced inter se, which could not so well be determined otherwise. His Honour did not think that he should be exercising a sound discretion if he were to make the order asked. The company had ceased to carry on business, and the governing body were bonâ fide putting into execution their powers under the deed of settlement to enable them to wind up the company under the deed, and his Honour saw nothing to shew him that they might not succeed. He thought, therefore, tha there should be no order on this petition.

Re THE UNIVERSAL GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts.

Provisional committee-man claiming as a creditor in respect of debts of the company paid by him allowed to prove for such debts, but not for the costs of defending actions brought against him for these debts.

This was a motion on behalf of two of the contributories of the Universal Gas-light Company, that an order of the Master, allowing a claim of Mr. Brooke as a creditor for 439*l.* 1s. 9d. might be discharged or varied. The company was provisionally registered in 1845, and in January, 1846, Mr. Brooke became a member of the provisional committee, but in July 1846 he requested the company's solicitor to withdraw his name. The company was completely registered in September 1846, and carried on business until March 1848. Actions were afterwards brought against Mr. Brooke and others, and Mr. Brooke had been compelled to pay some of these amounts, and also costs in resisting the claims made against him. The company was, on the 29th of June, 1850, ordered to be wound up. M Brooke carried in a claim before the Master for 734*l.* 3s. 5d. The first item in this claim was "various sums contributed at different times towards defraying the preliminary expenses of the said company, amounting to 30*l.* 17s. 9d.;" the other items consisted of the amounts paid in respect of the actions brought against Mr. Brooke, and the costs in defending them. The Master allowed the claim to the extent of 439*l.* 1s. 9d. including the first item before mentioned.

Greene, in support of the motion, said that the company was provisionally registered in Octol 1845, for the purpose of working Francis's patent for making gas, and was afterwards, on the 30th of May, 1846, again provisionally registered for the purpose of working the patent of Messrs. Corden and Smith. The two companies were distinct, and the claims paid by Mr. Brooke were in respect of the first company, and could not be allowed in the present matter.

Malins and Henry Stevens, for Mr. Brooke, contended that there was but one company, the change in the provisional registration not at all affecting the identity of the company. The deed of settlement recognised and adopted the proceedings of the provisional directors previous to complete registration.

Roxburgh, for the official manager, asked for his costs. The Master ought to have been applied to under the 17th section of the Winding-up Act of 1848, to review his order, instead of this appeal motion being made.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that as to the 30*l.* 17s. 9d. the Master must review his decision. He would allow so much of the remainder of the sum as did not relate to the costs of defending the actions brought against Mr. Brooke, but he could not allow these costs. Upon this application there would be no costs on either side, and the official manager would have his costs out of the estate.

Re THE GERMAN MINING COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Costs.

Where contributories had successfully resisted a claim against a company ordered to be wound up, the Court allowed the costs incurred by them in such resistance to be paid out of the estate.

In this case, under a winding-up order, the London and Westminster Bank carried into the Master's office a claim against the company for 12,217*l.* composed of moneys advanced from time to time by the Bank to the directors of the company. This claim the Master allowed, the official manager not opposing. Afterwards, Messrs. Chippendale and others, who were contributories, obtained leave from the Master to appear as a class for the purpose of reopening the question, whether the alleged debt was due from the company. The question was argued before the Master, the Bank and the directors of the company being heard respectively by their counsel in support of the claim, and the Master allowed it. Messrs. Chippendale and other then moved before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce to discharge the Master's order, and the Vice-Chancellor ordered the motion to stand over, giving liberty to the Bank to bring an action. (14 Jur. 874.) An action was afterwards brought and tried in the Exchequer, and the jury found for the plaintiffs as to a portion of the debt, amounting to about 8,000*l.* and for the defendants for the remainder. The defendants then moved for and obtained a rule absolute for a new trial, a report of which appears in 17 Law T. 232, Burmister v. Norris. The plaintiffs not taking any steps to proceed with the new trial, Messrs. Chippendale and others now renewed their motion to discharge the Master's order, and they asked by their notice of motion as against the Bank all the costs incurred by them, as well those in the Master's office and of the appeal to Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce as of the action, and the proceedings to obtain a new trial. On the motion coming on, the Bank, by their counsel gave up their claim to the debt, and the only question remaining was as to the costs.

Malins and Drewry, for the motion, said that this was a case of a purely legal claim. The Bank claimed a legal debt, and the result of the proceedings was that they had no such claim; and by their now giving up the claim in consequence of the judgment delivered at law when the rule for a new trial was made absolute, they were in the same position as if a new trial had taken place and a verdict had been given for the defendant. The Bank was therefore wrong from the beginning, and ought to pay all the costs occasioned by their unfounded claim, to the company, who for this purpose were represented by the class making the present application. They cited Ex parte Hall, 14 Jurist, 1067; and Stevens v. Keating, 1 Mac. & Gord. 659. They referred also to the 103rd section of the Winding-up Act, 1848.

Hetherington appeared for the Bank.

Bagg, for the official manager.

The directors were served, but did not appear.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Hetherington for the Bank), said that he did not consider that he had any thing to do with the costs at law: whatever was the course at common law must determine the question as to these costs. As to the costs of the proceedings in this Court, the Court had a discretion. His Honour did not think that the case of Ex parte Hall, which turned on a question between a contributory and the company, governed the present case, where a creditor had gone in before the Master and obtained a decision in his favour, and on an appeal the Court had sent it to law, and the case had ultimately failed. Subject to any thing that might be said by Mr. Hetherington, his Honour thought that there should be no costs of the proceedings in this Court or before the Master. The costs at law must follow the course of common law procedure.

Malins then asked that his costs should be paid out of the estate.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that considering this was the case of some contributories successfully resisting a claim against the estate, he thought that for the purpose of their proceedings they had acted somewhat in the character of the official manager, and subject to anything the official manager might say, he considered they ought to have their costs out of the estate.

The official manager did not object, and the order was made accordingly, discharging the Master's order for allowing the debt. No costs on either side in this court, as between the Bank and the class of contributories. The costs at law to be determined according to the course of proceeding at law. The class contributories to have out of the estate all the costs hey had been put to, including any costs they might have incurred in the proceedings at law.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Reported by W. H. BENNET, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

March 4, 5, and 18.

LLOYD v. LLOYD.

Will—Construction—Condition in restraint of marriage—Repair of tomb—Charity.

A restraint of marriage as to a testator's widow is not void. The law recognising in the husband that species of interest in the widowhood of his wife as enables him to restrain her second marriage.

Otherwise as to any other woman.

A condition that if the testator's wife and another woman both should marry, and a gift over,

Held to be void.

A condition to keep a tomb in repair is not a charitable use, and therefore not illegal.

A devise of rents to the minister and churchwardens of a parish, upon trust, first, of taking 5l. to themselves, and then for the repair of the tomb,

Held to be void.

This cause came on for further directions on the Master's general report; and the questions decided turned upon the construction to be put upon the testator's will and codicils, which were as follow:—

"In the name of God, amen. I, George Lloyd, of No. 8, Park-street, Greenwich, in the county of Kent, do declare this to be my last will and testament. First, I hereby nominate, constitute, and appoint Mr. Robert Browning, jun. of Hatcham, Surrey, and Mary Martha Lockley, of Park-street, Greenwich, in the county of Kent, executor and executrix to this my last will and testament; and further, I request that at my decease my body may be placed in a good sound oak inner coffin, one a half-inch thick, and the outer one of good sound oak, one and a half inch thick, cemented together and varnished, and no cloth to be made use of on the outside of the coffin, and, at the expiration of fourteen days, shall be interred in the vault in St. Mary's church-yard, at Chatham, in the county of Kent; and further, I desire that every unnecessary expense attending my funeral may be avoided, and that no person or persons whomsoever may be deposited in the said vault after my remains are there interred save Mary Martha Lockley, if she continues a single woman, and living a chaste life. And further, I give and bequeath to Mary Martha Lockley my household furniture, glass, china, silver, plate, jewellery, linen, &c. &c. &c. for her own use and benefit, save and except the hereinafter-mentioned bequests. And further, I direct and empower my executrix or executor to pay my funeral expenses, and collect in all moneys, securities for money, and all other property of whatsoever description of which I may die possessed, now and hereafter, and that my said executrix or executor shall sell, or cause to be sold to the best advantage, the whole of my personal and real estate, and shall invest the proceeds of such sale in some Government Annuity for the benefit of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, No. 8, Park-street, Greenwich, Kent; and when the amount of the said Government Annuity is ascertained, then the said sum of money so raised by the way of an annuity on the joint lives of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, is to be equally divided, share and share alike, between Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley, and at the death of either the above-named Lucy Lloyd or Mary Martha Lockley, her share at her death shall pass to the survivor of the two above-named Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley on the day of her decease. And in case either Lucy Lloyd or Mary Martha Lockley should marry or live in a state of adultery, then her share shall pass to the other the same as if death had taken place; and should Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley both marry, then their shares and interest shall pass to my nephew, Samuel Hayes, of Woolwich, Kent, in case Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley fail in fulfilling the conditions of this my will. And, further I desire that my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, shall, out of the annuity they receive, keep in good sound repair the tomb and vaults in Chatham church-yard that belongs to me, and cause to be painted the said tomb and vault every four years, or, if required, more frequent, and in default or failure they should lose and forfeit their claim to the annuity; and any person hereafter that shall receive the annuity shall be bound to perform the same conditions. And, further, I direct my executrix or executor to ascertain the amount of money received by my wife, Lucy Lloyd, from the Chatham Dock-yard Society (which may be by the secretary's yearly report), and when that amount is ascertained by my executrix or executor, she, Mary Martha Lockley, will be entitled to the half of the sum so received by my wife, Lucy Lloyd, from the said society; and should my wife, Lucy Lloyd, refuse to pay the half of the sum received by her from the society, then my executrix will stop so much of the share of the Government Annuity that my wife, Lucy Lloyd, should receive as will make good her half of the dock-yard pension money to Mary Martha Lockley, so that there may be an equal division of money between Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley."

The testator afterwards duly made and executed a codicil to his said will, which codicil bore date the 12th day of October, 1844, and was duly executed and attested as by law required, and which codicil, as admitted to probate, was in the words and figures following:—"Having entered into an agreement with Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, of Barnes, to let him my house, situate at Barnes-terrace, Surrey, on a lease for fourteen or twenty-one years from the 25th of March next, 1845, at a yearly rental of 48*l.* per annum to be paid quarterly, I now make this offer to Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, that is, at the expiration of the first fourteen years of the said lease of twenty-one years, should he, the said Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, wish to continue the lease and pay to my executrix or executor, should I at that time have departed this life, the sum of 48*l.* by quarterly payments during the lifetime of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, clear of all demands, such as quit-rent, land-tax, income or property tax, or any parliamentary tax that may hereafter be passed, or any other rates or taxes or charges during the lifetime of the said Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley; and further, this said Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle is to pay, after the death of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, within six months, the sum of two hundred pounds, clear of all costs, charges, and expenses, and to invest the said two hundred in the New 3¼ per Cent. Annuities, Bank, in the joint names of the minister and churchwardens of St. Mary's Church, Chatham, in the county of Kent, as trustees for the time being. If the above stipulations are fulfilled in every point by the said Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, as respects the payment of the 48*l.* and the investment of the 200*l.* in the Bank of England, then I give and bequeath the said house at Barnes, Barnes-terrace, in the county of Surrey, to this Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle for ever; he, Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, paying all fines, costs, and charges, to the lord of the manor, in making over the said house, at Barnes, Barnes-terrace, in the County of Surrey."

The testator afterwards duly made a second codicil to his said will, which second codicil bore date the 14th day of October, 1844, and was duly executed and attested as by law required, and which codicil, as admitted to probate, was in the words and figures following (that is to say): "And I further desire that my house at Barnes, Barnes-terrace, in the county of Surrey, now in the occupation of Mr. Pyle, shall not be sold, but let at a yearly rental, or on lease, to the best advantage, for the benefit of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley, and the proceeds of the rent applied as my will sets forth, subject to all the conditions contained in my will, the same as if the house had been sold, share and share alike; and after the death of my wife, Lucy Lloyd, and Mary Martha Lockley (or in case Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, of Barnes, refuses to accept of my offer to him in a codicil dated 12th day of October, 1844, as respects the said houses at Barnes), or in default of their, Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley, not fulfilling the conditions contained in my will, I give and bequeath upon trust the said house at Barnes, in the county of Surrey, to the minister and churchwardens of St. Mary's Church, Chatham, in the county of Kent, for the said minister and churchwardens to apply the produce of the rent of the said house at Barnes as follows:—First, to take for themselves five pounds every year for their expenses out of the rent or proceeds of the said house at Barnes, and further to keep in good sound repair the vault and tomb, and cause the said tomb to be painted every third year that belongs to me in Chatham churchyard, then the residue and remainder of the said rent to be applied for the benefit of my nephew, Samuel Hayes, at Woolwich, in the county of Kent; and after the death of the above Samuel Hayes, of Woolwich, then the residue and remainder of the said rent is to be applied for the benefit of the Church Missionary Society attached to St. Mary's Church, Chatham, Kent; and I further desire, if Mr. James Wilhelm Pyle, of Barnes, accepts of the offer of the house at Barnes, Barnes-terrace, then the interest of the 200*l.* invested by him in the Bank of England, in the New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. in the joint names of the minister and churchwardens of St. Mary's Church Chatham, as trustees, shall be applied as follows:—First, the said minister and churchwardens to take for themselves each one guinea every year, then the residue and remainder of the interest of the 200*l.* is to be applied in keeping in good sound repair the vault and tomb, and cause the said tomb to be painted every third year that belongs to me in Chatham Churchyard; and if any surplus of interest after the expenditure of the cash on the tomb and vault, then it shall be given to the Church Missionary Society attached to St. Mary's Church, Chatham. And further I desire my executrix or executor to give all the pictures of Mrs. Lloyd's own performance, and any books of hers, or any other article that may be found in my house, if she, Lucy Lloyd, will declare upon her oath was hers before marriage with me, George Lloyd."

The points raised upon the construction of this will and codicils sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Torriano (with him Roundell Palmer) contended that the restraint against the marriage of the testator's widow was void, and relied upon Sheffield v. Orrery, 3 Atk. 283; Rushton v. Cobb, 5 Myl. & Cr. 145, S.C., 9 Sim. 615; Morley v. Reynoldson, 5 Hare, 570.

Haldane and Surrage for some parties in the same interest as the plaintiffs.

Malins and W. A. Collins, for the heir-at-law, contended that the restraint upon the marriage of M. M. Lockley was also good, and cited Webb v. Grace, 15 Sim. 384, S.C., 2 Phill. 701.

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The question in this case turns upon the construction of the will of George Lloyd. The will is not very intelligible, and the testator appears to have been a person who, though not entirely void of education, was not able to express his intentions in very clear and intelligible language, though it is not very difficult to come to a conclusion as to his general intentions. He left a widow, but apparently had no children, and a person named Mary Martha Lockley, who seems a friend, or a person for whom he desired to make a provision, though no relation. He had also a nephew, Samuel Hayes, and the principal objects of his bounty seem to have been his widow and Mary Martha Lockley, and in some degree he seems to have desired to do something for his nephew. [His Honour then read the first portion of the will.] There is then a clear intention that the executors should convert all the real and personal estate into money, and invest that money in a Government Annuity for the lives of his widow and Mary Martha Lockley, and the life of the survivor; for though in one passage he speaks of money so raised on their joint lives, yet he directs that on the death of either the annuity should go to the survivor. So far there is no difficulty whatever, he gives an annuity for their joint lives and the life of the survivor; then he goes on thus, "and in case either Lucy Lloyd," &c. Now, with respect to that which, as a condition subsequent, attaches to the previous gift, I think, according to the authorities, it is not void as regards the wife. The law recognizes in the husband that species of interest in the widowhood of his wife as makes it lawful for him to restrain a second marriage, that is to say that the provision which he has made shall cease. I have no doubt also, that with respect to either his wife or a stranger a testator may give an annuity to continue so long as she remains single and unmarried, but as to a person, not a wife, if he first gives her a life, or other estate, and then appends a condition to defeat that estate, if she marries, that would not be good. If I am right in this view of the law, the effect of that clause is, that if the wife should marry, her share would go over to Mary Martha Lockley; but if Mary Martha Lockley should marry she loses nothing. But then comes another condition or provision,—"and should Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley both marry," &c. Now, this is a sentence, part of which is intelligible, but as a whole it is not very easy to say what the testator meant. So far as he meant to give the property over in the event of both marrying again, it is with respect to Mary Martha Lockley clearly void, as I said before. But the testator has added, "in case Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley fail in fulfilling the conditions of my will," and then imposes another condition as to his tomb, and the difficulty is to know whether he meant to say, "If Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley both marry, or fail in fulfilling the conditions," or if he meant to say in the conjunctive, "If they both marry and fail." My impression is that he meant at all events, that if they both, it was to go over, and I think that void. But he adds another condition as to the tomb. Now, I am satisfied that a condition for keeping a tomb in repair is not a charitable use, and is not illegal. It may be illegal to vest property in perpetuity in trust for that purpose, so as to create a perpetuity, but a direction that the wife and Mary Martha Lockley are during their lives to enjoy the annuity, and are to keep the tomb in repair is quite lawful: it is a valid condition imposed upon the enjoyment. I consider, therefore, that Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley are well obliged out of the annuity to keep the tomb in repair, &c. Then there is a direction, about which there is no question, —that his executors shall ascertain the amount of money which the wife is entitled to out of a certain society which the Master must inquire about. But nothing turns upon that. So far then the testator directed conversion of all his real estate for the purpose of purchasing an annuity for lives, and by a codicil he refers to this. His real estate consisted of copyholds at Barnes, at which place he resided. He had granted a lease of it, and by this codicil he directs that if Mrs. Pyle, &c. In effect it comes to this; Mr. Pyle is lessee for fourteen years at 48*l.*; and he says,—"If you choose to accept this offer, you may do so upon the terms of paying 48*l* during the life of my wife and Mary Martha Lockley;" and then 200*l.* more, which are to be invested in the Funds; but he does not direct any trust, and it appears that Mr. Pyle has declined the offer. Then comes the second codicil, and by that referring to the fact that by his will he had directed a sale, he says, "it shall not be sold, but let," and so on. The language is entirely inartificial; and if you take it as it stands, it clearly does not express the meaning which ought to be extracted from the whole of the codicil. He meant, if Mr. Pyle does not accept the offer, then let the house continue to be let, and the rent be paid to Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley during their lives and the life of the survivor, and after the death to the minister and churchwardens; and he afterwards devises it to the minister and churchwardens, if Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley fail to fulfil the conditions of the will. As to one it is void; if the other is to take it is valid; and I see no reason why the limitation over in the event of heir not fulfilling that condition is not good, that is assuming that the devise over is valid. But the devise is to the minister and churchwardens; and he then goes on thus,—"First," &c. Now, the devise to the minister and churchwardens is declared to be upon this trust, first, to take 5*l.* which would not be of itself illegal, if the duty they were to perform was a duty which is valid; but the next trust is to keep in sound repair the vault and tomb, and this being a devise of the fee, or rather of the inheritance, of the copyhold to the minister and churchwardens, upon trust to cause a tomb to be painted every year, is, in fact a perpetuity, and I suppose it is for that reason that the Court at the hearing declared this devise to be void, and dismissed the churchwardens from the suit; and I am of opinion that, whether right or wrong, I am not here to alter it. But I think it right, and the effect of it appears to be, that everything which is contained in or grafted on the trust to the minister and churchwardens is void, and the trust is void. It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider the effect of the subsequent trusts; that is to say, of what is to be done with the rent after keeping the tomb in repair. It is to be applied to the benefit of the Missionary Society, which is of course void under the Mortmain Acts. Then he says:—"The interest of the 200*l.* invested in the joint names of the minister and churchwardens is to be applied as follows," &c. It is not necessary to comment on these ulterior limitations, they are clearly void, and have been declared to be so by the Court. The effect, then, of the whole is, that this property, after paying the costs of the suit, will have to be invested in the purchase of a Government Annuity for the life of Lucy Lloyd and Mary Martha Lockley, with a direction to pay the interest to those two persons in equal shares during their joint lives, they undertaking to perform the conditions contained in the will, with regard to the repair of the tomb and the painting of it, with liberty for any party to apply upon the death of either, or in any other event, for it is not necessary for me to determine now while they both remain single, what may be the result of the widow marrying again, or what may be the result of not performing the condition to repair. As to the copyholds, Mr. Pyle declining the offer, declare the widow and Mary Martha Lockley entitled to the rents in equal shares during their lives, and after their death the heir is entitled. The costs of the suit to be apportioned between the real and the personal estates.

The exact terms of the order to be settled in pursuance of these directions.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by ADAM BITTLESTON and JOHN THOMPSON, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, April 21.

REG. v. THE HULL DOCK COMPANY.

Poor-rate—Several docks in different parishes—Distribution of the rate—Acreage principle.

A dock company possessed four different docks, communicating with one another, or intended so to do when the works were complete: parts of some of the docks were in different parishes, but one toll was paid for the privilege of using the whole or any part of the docks.

Held, that the poor-rate on the tolls was distributable among the several parishes according to the proportion of land of the docks in each parish.

The Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull appealed against a rate for the relief of the poor of 1s. in the pound, assessed upon them in respect of their docks situate in the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary, in the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, which parishes are united for the purposes of relief to the poor, viz. by divisions into eight wards. The recorder confirmed the rate, with costs, subject to the opinion of this Court.

CASE.

The appellants are owners and occupiers of the docks and basins at the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, which, previous to the construction of the oldest of the said docks, was an ancient port formed by the river Hull, a part whereof adjoining the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, is known by the name of the Old Harbour, extending from a place formerly called Sculcoate-gate to the mouth of the river, and is vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough, who receive considerable dues in respect of vessels using the port.

By the 14 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 17, the appellants were incorporated as "The Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull," and empowered to make the dock now called the Old Dock, most of the north part of which is in the parish of Sculcoates, and the south part is in the parishes of Holy Trinity and St. Mary. The Act provides for the repair, maintenance, and cleansing of the docks and other works, and directs rates and duties of tonnage to the company for every ship or vessel (the king's ships and ships employed in his Majesty's service excepted) coming into or going out of the said harbour, basin, or dock, within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unlading or putting on shore, &c. The time at which these rates or duties were directed to be paid is pointed out in the following terms:—" And shall be paid at the time of such ships' or vessels' entry inwards or clearance or discharge outwards, or in case any ships or vessels shall not enter as aforesaid, then, at any time before such ships or vessels shall proceed from the said port, at the custom-house in the said port, so as no ship or vessel shall be subject or liable to the payment of the said rates or duties, or any of them, more than once for the same voyage both out and home, notwithstanding such ship or vessel may go out and return with a loading of goods or merchandise." Secs. 67 to 70 empower the guild or brotherhood of the Trinity House of Kingston-upon-Hull to appoint a dock master and assistants, with full power and authority to direct the mooring or removing of all vessels coming into, lying, or being in the said basin, or dock, or elsewhere within the said port or haven.
